Anyone who has read the debate and what took place in the memorable Constitutional Convention when that great document was framed will see how strongly the delegates to that body were opposed to the passage of sumptuary laws, and I, sir, do not believe that this measure should be considered, as the gentleman from New York has stated, with a view of simply the district a man represents. This is a proposition to amend and to change the fundamental law of this great Nation, and we should consider, I believe, not simply the interest of the district we have the honor to represent but we should look at it from a larger viewpoint, as to whether it is for the best interests of the Nation as a whole. I do not believe that the gentlemen in the sandy river bottoms of Arkansas prefer to have the people living in the Back Bay district of Boston to legislate and say to them what their personal habits shall be. We have in the State which I have the honor in part to represent what is known as a local-option law, which gives the people of the smallest municipal division the right to say once each year whether they believe the sale of intoxicants should be permitted or not. I say that we should not embark upon this program of changing and amending the fundamental law by injecting into it an article which would debase that great document to the mere level of a criminal statute. If you are going to write this article into the Constitution, why not go one step further and include within the Constitution the penalty for a violation of it? It is said that democracy is precious, and that we are engaged in a struggle for democracy, but to say that the States in one section of this country shall dictate to the States in another section of the country upon matters which heretofore have been within the sole control of the people of the several States, upon matters which by the fairest and plainest interpretation of the Constitution are reserved to the States, is not in the interest of democracy. So, for the reason that I am opposed to including in the fundamental law propositions of this sort I am opposed to this resolution.

Further, I am opposed to it, because I do not believe that this is the most important question that ever confronted the American Congress. There are some gentlemen here who, when they rise to address their colleagues, are swept off their feet by their enthusiasm for or against a measure. The most important question confronting not only this Congress but the entire Nation—yes, even the entire world—is the winning of this war, and I submit that we ought not at this time by our action here to transfer to the States a contest which will result in discussion and occupation of time, the expenditure of effort and money in each of 48 States of the Union, which same time, effort, and money might well be used toward the winning of this war. If the States desire to enact prohibition legislation, and I understand 27 of them have already done so, if they believe that by the enactment of that legislation victory will be more speedily assured, they can do so. The people of the States ought to be the best judge of that proposition. So I say that in submitting this resolution to the States and by permitting this discussion to arise and these differences of opinion, these clashes between classes of people, we will do more to divert our people from the supreme test confronting the country than we will if we concentrate our efforts and our thoughts and to encourage the expenditure of effort and money toward winning this great world struggle. [Applause.]

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL].

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, this resolution proposes an amendment to the Federal Constitution which prohibits the manufacture, sale, and transportation of intoxicating liquors, or the importation thereof, into the United States. I am constrained upon my conscience and in the exercise of my best judgment to vote against this proposed amendment. I shall not discuss the merits or demerits of prohibition. The attitude of a citizen or a Member of the House upon that question should not determine his vote upon this resolution. There are those who gravely doubt whether the attempt to enforce throughout the country total abstinence is the best solution. Many believe that the discouragement of the manufacture and use of distilled liquors and the encouragement of the use of light beers and wines would best subserve the interests of genuine temperance and good citizenship. But, as I have just stated, total prohibition, or partial prohibition, is not the issue before us. We are called upon to determine whether we will propose an amendment to the Constitution depriving the States of their present exclusive jurisdiction to regulate and control intoxicating liquors and transfer the same in whole or in part to the Federal Government.

I am opposed to this resolution because it proposes to incorporate into our organic law a proposition which is distinctly legislative. There have been 17 amendments to our Constitution and not one of them invaded the field of legislative action. They all relate to the Bill of Rights or the instruments of government itself, or, in other words, they relate to the form of government or the powers of Congress. If the Constitution is to forbid the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors there is no reason why in the future, in response to reformers, it should not forbid the manufacture and consumption of other products which may be deemed deleterious to humanity. The Constitution has been the great charter of our liberties. It describes the powers of our Federal Government and fixes the fine balance between the States and the Central Government. It has been the cohesive bond which has bound together the sovereign States into one indestructible union. We should not mar this great instrument by making it the receptacle of prohibitive or permissive legislation and thus mar this fine structure and bring it into disrepute.

I am opposed to this amendment because it proposes to take away from the States an essential right of local self-government. It proposes to impair the police power of the States. This is concededly true, else this amendment would not be proposed. If Congress had jurisdiction to regulate or prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors it would not be necessary to incorporate this legislative provision into the Constitution. The perpetuity of this Republic is based upon the maintenance of the right of local self-government in each of the States of the Union. If the time ever comes when the States are shorn of the right to govern themselves in all local matters and are deprived of the right to exercise their untrammeled police powers in the enforcement of the same we will see the beginning of the end of this Republic. When all government is centralized at Washington there will come local and State disaffection, loyalty to the Central Government will be impaired, and ultimately revolution will stalk abroad throughout the land. It may be said that this invasion of a right of the States constitutes only one instance and that other invasions will not necessarily follow. In a matter of such supreme import even one invasion of local self-government may not be justified, but unfortunately this is only one of a number which are now being pressed by zealous reformers. The first error will make easier subsequent efforts. When we have once weakened the fine balance of powers between the States and the Federal Government we will have endangered the stability of the entire structure.

The Constitution was framed to protect the States in the right of local self-government. It was particularly intended to protect the small States. All the early efforts to amend the Constitution were prohibitions against the Federal Government and in favor of the integrity of the States. In the first 10 amendments which were adopted soon after the original Constitution, their provisions were so basic and fundamental that they have been universally denominated as the "Bill of Rights." So jealous were our fathers that some of the reserved and essential rights of the States might be impaired that in the tenth amendment it was provided that—> the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.

They thought they had settled for all time any possibility that the right of local self-government reserved to the States should ever be successfully attacked.

This amendment is not necessary to enable any State to control or prohibit the manufacture, sale, consumption, or importation into such State of intoxicating liquors. Each State has the power, to use a familiar expression, to make itself "bone dry." Not only may each State pass laws prohibiting within its borders the manufacture, sale, or consumption of intoxicating liquors in any form, but under the Webb law, as interpreted by the Supreme Court of the United States, it may prevent the importation of any intoxicating liquors into such State. Through its administrative officers and by its own courts each State may literally enforce such laws. The statement may be emphasized that each State now has the exclusive power over intoxicating liquors.

It may be asked, then, What is the necessity of this amendment to the Constitution? Is it to enable one State in combination with others to exercise power over another State? To express it baldly, the purpose of this amendment is to enable the legislature of one State to join with the legislatures of 36 other States and impose absolute prohibition over the remaining 12 unwilling States. If the subject of prohibition is now a matter of local self-government with each State, which will be admitted, then it may be stated with equal force that it was never intended in our scheme of government that three-quarters of the States should take away from the remaining one-quarter any reserved right of local self-government. My own State of North Carolina, which is dry, can not consistently claim the right to join with 36 other States and impose prohibition upon the States of New York or Massachusetts or Wisconsin against the will of the people of those States. Such a result would be resented by the people of those States who are not yet ready to adopt prohibition. Let me give a concrete illustration. In 1881 there was a referendum in North Carolina upon the question of State-wide prohibition. There were cast for prohibition 48,000 votes and against prohibition 166,000 votes, an adverse majority of 118,000 votes. So long as the majority of the people of North Carolina were opposed to prohibition, I ask in all good faith what impression would have been made on the people of that State if 36 other States in a proposition to amend the Federal Constitution had decreed that North Carolina should be dry, contrary to the solemn vote of the electorate of the State? The question answers itself. There would have followed resentment, and the people of the State would have felt that they had been deprived of a sovereign right to settle this question for themselves. In 1908, 27 years later, North Carolina had another referendum upon prohibition, at which time a majority was recorded in its favor. May I ask if this change in the attitude of the people of the State toward a sumptuary law necessarily changes the fundamental proposition involved? If the people of North Carolina would have resented in 1882 the action of 36 other States in imposing upon them prohibition against their will, are the people of that State justified in 1917 in trying to impose prohibition upon the people of an unwilling State simply because the people of North Carolina have reversed themselves upon this question? The query answers itself.

It is contended that national prohibition is necessary in the interest of good morals. The leaders of the Anti-Saloon League say that they can not await the slow process of adopting prohibition State by State, and that they prefer the summary method of imposing it upon all of the States without having to undergo the trouble of discussion and education, in order to effect a change of public opinion in each of the States. I submit that the maintenance of the basis and the fundamentals of our Government is superior to the virtues of prohibition, even if we concede all its blessings by the most enthusiastic advocates. I confess that I deem it of more importance to defend the integrity of the States and to assure the perpetuity of our Republic than to anticipate the will of the people and to attempt to force prohibition by this summary process upon unwilling States.

There have been 17 amendments to our Constitution. Each one of these amendments dealt with the fundamentals of government and did not attempt to invade the reserved right of local self-government in the States except the fifteenth amendment. This amendment forbade any State to deny the right of suffrage to any citizen on account of race or color. It was intended to compel the Southern States to give to the negro equal rights of franchise with the whites. I shall not combat the righteous motives which actuated the advocates of that amendment. But I do submit these comments. Until the fifteenth amendment the right of the States to fix and regulate the qualifications of the franchise was not denied. It has always been conceded that the right to vote comes as a privilege from the States and not from the Federal Government. This amendment was an attempt to control this right of the States in so far as the negro was concerned by giving him equality of suffrage. It was contended by the white citizens of the South that the negroes as a whole were not qualified for the suffrage, and that to give literal effect to this amendment would imperil their civilization and make possible bad government. It is unnecessary to describe the results of this amendment. Reconstruction followed in its wake, racial disturbances were frequent, progress was checked, and evil government prevailed. The fifteenth amendment still remains, but by common consent in all sections of the country, the intelligence and the civic virtues of those who are qualified to ordain and preserve good government are left in the several States to settle this matter in the light of their consciences and their responsibilities.

In the face of the result of this attempt to invade the rights of the States to fix the qualifications of suffrage, I am led to inquire, What ought to be the attitude of the Members of this House from the Southern States in the consideration of this proposed amendment? Simply because most of the Southern States have adopted prohibition, shall they favor an amendment which would deprive other States of settling for themselves this question of prohibition? If they vote for this amendment, they will be doing an act which they would openly resent if an attempt was made by other States to invade their rights of local self-government. Very soon this House may be called upon to vote for another amendment to the Federal Constitution for woman suffrage. It so happens that in most of the Southern States public opinion does not yet favor equal suffrage, and they will vote against such an amendment. Why not be consistent? As a great fundamental of government, is the right of local self-government upon any one question to be determined by the attitude of the voters of a particular State upon that question?

The very fact that an amendment proposed by Congress is to be ratified by the legislatures of the several States rather than by the popular vote throughout the country indicates the firm attitude of the fathers in preserving the rights of the small States against the encroachments of the large States. It never occurred to the framers of the Constitution that Delaware and Rhode Island, or Nevada, would join in depriving the people of the State of New York of any essential and reserved right of local self-government. The fear was that New York and Pennsylvania and Virginia might unite with other large States and deprive Delaware and Rhode Island of some essential local power. Therefore, they provided in the ratification of an amendment that the vote of Delaware and of Rhode Island should count just as much as the vote of New York and Pennsylvania.

What is the duty of a Member of this House? A high official of the Anti-Saloon League recently made this statement:

> The Anti-Saloon League is not asking any Member of Congress to declare that he is in favor of national prohibition, but simply that he shall not become an avowed exponent and protector of the liquor traffic by refusing to vote to allow the people of the Nation, by States, through their representatives, to determine this question in the manner provided therefor by the framers of the Constitution.

This has been a familiar form of expression by some of the advocates of this amendment. In other words, they contend it is the duty of a Member of Congress to vote for any proposed amendment if a considerable number of the voters of the country appear to favor same. There can be no more solemn duty imposed upon a Member than in determining his attitude toward a proposition to amend the Federal Constitution. Congress must initiate the amendment, and each Member must consider it in the light of his intelligence and patriotic judgment. We are not mere automatons to register the will of the Anti-Saloon League or any other organization of reformers. We are sworn to defend the Constitution as it stands, and it is our solemn duty to avoid any action which will impair or imperil the foundations of our Government. Any Member who votes for or against this amendment solely actuated by fear of his political fortunes has little comprehension of the fundamentals of our Government and is elevating his political preferment above the preservation of the essentials of sound democracy. There has been already too much of intimidation and coercion. The highest ideal is to discharge one's duty, and if one is to adopt the personal view it is also the best politics.

We are engaged in a great war. The President, in his recent epochal address before Congress, invoked unity upon the part of all the people. He declared that we should mobilize every resource, material and spiritual, in the successful prosecution of this war. The adoption of this amendment will thrust before the people a mooted question upon which there are strong differences. In the famous "Shannon" letter of the President in 1911, while he was governor of New Jersey, he referred to the acute divisions in public sentiment which followed the injection of the liquor question into any party organization. This proposition ought not to have been brought into Congress at this supreme moment in the national life. Congress has heretofore enacted all necessary legislation regarding intoxicating liquors for the period of the war. The further production of distilled liquors has been forbidden. The President, under the authority of law, has decreased the production of beer and the percentage of alcoholic contents. The great body of the people are satisfied. For patriotic reasons alone we would be justified in defeating this measure at this inopportune time. [Applause.]

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, my time is limited, and I can not therefore enter upon a general discussion of the subject of prohibition. I am in favor of this amendment. My judgment approves it and it is entirely in harmony with my personal views. It meets the approval of the people of my congressional district. My constituents are largely in favor of prohibition. Finally, the passage of this amendment, the submission of the prohibition amendment to the Constitution to the several States for ratification or rejection will be approved by the great majority of the people of Oklahoma, the State which I have the honor in part to represent. And, Mr. Speaker, when the roll is called and the vote is taken on this amendment in this House there will be a unanimous vote in favor of this proposition from the Representatives in this House from the State of Oklahoma. In due course the legislature of the State will ratify this amendment, and Oklahoma will be one of the 36 States which will ratify this amendment and make it forever a part of the organic law of this Nation.

The gentleman who just preceded me [Mr. SMALL], as I understood him, contended that Congress had no real authority to propose an amendment to the Constitution upon a subject like that of prohibition. I do not agree with my friend. The authors of the Constitution recognized that it was not perfect. They knew the changes which time inevitably brings would make modifications in the Constitution necessary. They wisely provided for its amendment. This provision is found in Article V of the Constitution. It contains only three limitations upon amendments. These are found in a proviso and are as follows:

Provided, That no amendment which may be made prior to the year 1808 shall in any manner affect the third and fourth clauses in the ninth section of the first article; and that no State, without its consent, shall be deprived of its suffrage in the Senate.

Two of these restrictions expired in 1808, more than a hundred years ago. To-day the only restriction, limitation, or reservation imposed upon the people in amending the Constitution is "that no State, without its consent, shall be deprived of its equal suffrage in the Senate." With this limitation the whole matter is left to the people. If they desire, they may by amending the Constitution change the form of government.

Some one in this debate, I think it was the gentleman from New York [Mr. CHANDLER], said that in his vote upon this resolution he would follow what he regarded as the sentiment of his constituents. He asserted, as I understood him, that a large majority of his constituents were opposed to submitting the prohibition amendment to the several States for ratification or rejection, and that, therefore, he should vote against the resolution. That question confronts Members of Congress on many occasions. Sometimes it is necessary for a Representative to decide whether in casting his vote he will be guided by his own views and convictions or follow the popular sentiment of his constituents. Ordinarily legislation does not involve questions of morality. The annihilation of the liquor traffic is essential in order that the American people shall attain the highest standard of morality. I would resign my seat in the House of Representatives rather than to vote to perpetuate the liquor traffic. Ever since I was a young man this has been my attitude on this question. I have been ready at all times, in public or in private, to strike down the liquor traffic, and there is where I stand to-day.

Some one has said that this is not the time to submit this question to the several States. They assert it will develop controversy among the people at a time when all of our energies should be devoted to winning the war. That is one argument that appeals to me with some force. Yet we should remember that the controversy between the liquor traffic and its opponents can never end. They represent two opposing forces between which there can be no compromise. Good can not make peace with evil. So the controversy must and will go on until the cause of temperance shall triumph over the evil forces of the liquor traffic.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAGEE].

Mr. MAGEE. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Judiciary Committee I voted to report out this resolution to the House without recommendation. I am opposed to the resolution at this time and in its present form. I stand for temperance and against intemperance. The question, however, in my judgment, is not temperance versus intemperance, but whether we are willing to use the condition of war as the chief instrument in attempting to bring about Nation-wide prohibition at this particular time.

Prohibition is an internal and domestic question over which the Congress has given the President full and complete control during the period of the war. I voted for the food bill, which prohibits the further manufacture of what are commonly known as alcoholic beverages and gives to the President power to commandeer existing stocks for purposes of redistillation. I do not know what it would cost to commandeer, under the provisions of the act, such stocks, but taking into consideration that the actual quantity remaining in bonded warehouses on October 31, 1917, approximated 175,000,000 taxable gallons, I estimate that such cost would exceed $200,000,000.

The annual report for the fiscal year 1917 shows that the Government collected from distilled spirits $181,131,770.62, and from fermented liquors $91,094,677.70. These items, though material in nature, are significant when we come to consider that the amounts authorized by Congress for this fiscal year, including loans to our allies, aggregate nearly $20,000,000,000, and that the estimated expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, aggregate nearly $14,000,000,000, which huge sum is bound to grow and does not include, as I understand, prospective advances to our allies.

The President is further authorized in such act to eliminate, in his discretion, the use of beer and light wines. Under such authority the President issued a proclamation on December 8, 1917, reducing the alcoholic content in the further production of beer to 2¾ per cent. Thus it will be seen that the Congress has given to the President power to bring about Nation-wide prohibition at any time he may see fit to act during the period of the war. It seems to me, in view of these circumstances, that the patriotic thing to do is to trust the President to act wisely in the premises and to let him alone during the war. When the war is over the people of this country can permanently settle the matter as they deem best.

The President says that we must win the war. I stand upon that platform with all my heart and soul. But we can not expect to reach the maximum efficiency in war if we permit ourselves to engage in bitter domestic dispute upon a question already placed in the hands of the President as Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy of the United States. Nor can we prepare ourselves for efficiency in war, unless we are willing to lay aside temporarily internal questions, to sacrifice our personal and individual interests for the public interests, and to concentrate all of our resources, energies, and efforts into an irresistible unit for the sole purpose of winning the war. It is high time, in my judgment, that the good people of this country begin to realize that this Nation is engaged in a titanic conflict that threatens not only the security but the very existence of free democracies. [Applause.]

The adoption of the pending resolution will not save any grain nor sugar, nor any kind of edibles, nor decrease drunkenness during the war, if I am right in assuming that the war will be over long before this resolution, if passed in the House, shall receive the approval of the legislatures of 36 States. We all know that to bring about national prohibition by Federal amendment a long, bitter struggle will be engaged in between those for and against. Such a contest will create much turmoil, much dissatisfaction, much internal dissension, and antagonize millions of workingmen in this country. It seems to me unwise to precipitate such a contest at this time.

We are passing through a tremendous national crisis that calls for a real exhibition of courage and patriotism. I realize that the line of least resistance is to yield to the demand of extremists, but no patriot ever kept his ear to the ground listening for public clamor. If the Government should do that we would be likely to lose the war. Let us rather rise above our personal and individual interests and base our official action upon the sole consideration of the best interests of our common country.

All the cities in New York under a local-option act, recently passed by the legislature of that State, will vote on the third Tuesday of April next. The control of the liquor traffic has always been held to be properly an exercise of the police powers of the State. However, I have no objections to nation-wide prohibition if the people want it. We have a form of government based upon the popular will and the majority must rule. I wish that it were legally possible to have a nation-wide referendum, and to permit the people to say by their votes what they want to the end that their will, if in favor of national prohibition, might promptly be written into the fundamental law of the land.

I am opposed to any limitation of time in a proposed Federal amendment. I doubt whether the Congress has the constitutional power to so act. In any event, I think that such a limitation is unwise. If Congress is going to submit a proposed Federal amendment to the legislatures of the several States it should be in the usual form, and, when submitted, be beyond the further control of Congress. Such a limitation can act only as an incentive to start at once a bitter fight in every State of this Union.

I do not intend to criticize, nor to impugn the motives of anyone, but I believe in calling a spade a spade. I think that the limitation contained in this resolution is a sop to the liquor interests, and that they figure that they can prevent the approval of the resolution if passed by the legislatures of 36 States within seven years.

In fact, whenever I read this limitation I think of that memorable speech made in the House by the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HAMILTON] when he repeatedly told us that Barnum still lives. The way I feel about it is this: If I were "wet," or a quart prohibitionist, and placed my toddy above all else, I would vote for this resolution. If I were "dry" I would vote against it. It is probably useless to make to the ultra "dry" an appeal to reason. If this limitation were struck out of the resolution I should feel more favorably disposed toward it. As it is the resolution should be defeated by the "drys," the substantial thinking men in the House, who with their faces to the sun, with the cards upon the table face up, having in mind only the public interest, vote in accordance with their convictions and the dictates of their conscience, dealing directly and squarely with the people in accordance with the spirit of our institutions.

I want to say in conclusion that I hold no brief for "drys" or "wets." I assume to hold a brief for my country, and as between "drys" and "wets," and my country, I choose my country, first, last, and all the time. [Applause.]

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY].

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I do not concur in the argument which has been advanced by some gentlemen here to-day that we should not always be influenced by the wishes of the people whom we represent and who have honored us with a seat in this great body. I take the very opposite view. This is a representative Government, a democracy, the chief corner stone of which is the will of the people, whence springs the power of government. I conceive it to be my highest duty to carry out their wishes or let somebody take my place who will do it. My district first and the balance of the country next has always been my motto and will continue to be to the end of my service here. In this instance I am proud of the privilege of casting a vote which my people tell me they wish me to and which my conscience and judgment tell me is best for the Nation, too. [Applause.]

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. POWERS].

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I can not in the limited time at my disposal enter into much of a discussion of the merits of this resolution. Under the agreement no one Member can be given much time upon this occasion. I shall give the resolution my hearty support. I doubt if there is a Member here whose public and private record is more consistently dry than that of my own. I have throughout my life advocated prohibition, and practiced what I preached. The district I have the honor to represent is overwhelmingly dry. In voting for this resolution I not only reflect the sentiment and wishes of my constituents but do that which is in thorough harmony with the views I have long entertained.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, when the constitutional amendment came to a vote in the House in December, 1914, I voted against it, because I did not then think it was a wise measure to enact. Since that time I have received many communications from my constituents urging my support both for and against that measure. To them all I have given most careful consideration, supplementing many years of study and thought upon the question of liquor traffic and the best method of controlling it and of preventing the evils that follow in its trail, gained in part by an extensive municipal experience in a large city both as its mayor and as a member of the municipal board.

At this late day in my life it is but stating what all men know who are acquainted with my record when I say that I have no sympathy with the sale of intoxicating liquors nor have I ever had. I have never used it. If I could abolish it from the face of the earth by my vote I would not hesitate to do so. But no such millennium is possible, in my judgment, by the adoption of the pending amendment.

Some of my constituents seem to think that its passage will cause strong drink to disappear from the country at large and from every locality. Some have urged "that the interest of humanity will be served by the abolition of booze." I agree with this statement. If I thought this measure would accomplish that result I would support it, but the entire history of the world shows that this would not be the outcome. The only way it can be totally abolished is by losing the formulas by which such stuff is made. It is a question of the most available means of controlling the use of liquor and the best and most practicable method of enforcing legal restrictions upon its abuse.

Ours is not a Government of wishes but of law and its application in a practicable way to the ends sought to be obtained. Some who have urged my support for this amendment have evidently never read the measure nor considered how it would work out in practice. Others again have spoken of it as "a fair and equitable proposition to allow each State to register its opinion for or against the question." With this view I agree, but these people fail to realize that this amendment does not give to the people of each State the right to settle the question for themselves. If the Massachusetts Legislature should fail to adopt this measure but a sufficient number of other States with other conditions and with different people and surroundings in life should accept it, nevertheless, the people of Massachusetts would have forced upon them a policy with which the majority of them were not in sympathy. The people of Florida and Colorado and other distant States might thus be dictating to the people of Massachusetts what they might consume for food and drink. The habits and desires of the human race can not be changed by mere legislative enactment. A criminal law can not be successfully enforced in a locality in which the majority of the citizens are not in favor of it. No way has yet been found that I ever heard of to make a jury of 12 men, upon whom under our Constitution the enforcement of such a law will depend in the last analysis, sustain the enforcement of a law with which that community is not in sympathy.

My experience in life has led me to the belief that so-called local option is the best method of handling the liquor question; that if to the people of each locality, as determined by the policy of the separate States, is left the decision of questions such as are covered by the amendment, laws satisfactory to a majority of the people of the various States and municipalities will ensue and the favorable will of such majority will be a guaranty of their enforcement.

Principally for this reason I voted against this measure before and nothing has been called to my attention since to indicate that transferring the operation of such law from the favorable will of the locality in which it is to be enforced to the action of the Federal Government in places where it may not be regarded with favor will eliminate the drinking of liquor or tend to increase respect for law or to make better the morality of the people.

I am urged to vote for the amendment as a war measure and to protect our soldiers. This would be a strong argument were it not for the fact that the amendment can not be enacted by the different State legislatures within such time as there is any expectation that the war will continue. It should also be remembered that Congress has already legislated for emergency control of this traffic during the war. It has given to the President full authority, which he has already used, to forbid the manufacture of whisky and to regulate the contents of beer, and the law now forbids the sale of intoxicating liquors to our boys who have entered the military or naval service of the country.

I have been in favor of such control and voted for that legislation. I voted for the abolition of liquor from the Capitol long before this matter became a living issue. I have further shown my belief in and support of temperance measures by voting for the law that prevents the transmission of liquor into prohibition States, the so-called "bone-dry law."

Moreover, I believe this question is not fundamentally a governmental principle, such as always has had a place in the Federal Constitution. It is a matter of policy, of police regulation. To force all the States to conform to the police regulations of a majority of them will, in my judgment, tend to destroy that self-reliant local self-government which has been the security of our State and Nation since their foundation.

So, because I believe in using the strongest methods of control, those that will nearest aproach the abolition of the evils of this accursed strong drink, and that this will be best accomplished by permitting the citizens of the several States to enact and enforce their own police regulations, I can see my way clear only to vote against the amendment. [Applause.]

I may add that to precipitate the conflict upon the country which would be involved by the passage of the pending amendment by the Congress during the struggle of war among many nations abroad, and in which our country is engaged, would be extremely unfortunate.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH].

Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I am not vain enough to think that any words of mine will influence a single vote in this House for or against this resolution. I doubt if there is a single Member of the House expecting to speak on the subject whose vanity exceeds my own in this respect. Manifestly, therefore, the day is to be devoted to oratory for the benefit of the country at large and our individual constituents in particular. On this question, as on all others, I have been frank with my own constituents. No one for or against the proposition has ever applied to me in vain for information as to my position.

I shall vote for the resolution. Therefore I only deem it necessary to explain to those friends who do not agree with me on the subject. I have done this in numerous answers to telegrams and letters sent me by well-meaning constituents within the last few days, one of which answers, as a sample, practically covering the whole subject, so far as my connection with it is concerned [applause], I ask to have read into the RECORD with my remarks.

It follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., December 15, 1917.

Mr. FRED A. BUECHE,
Secretary Jefferson County Trade and Labor Assembly,
Steubenville, Ohio.

DEAR MR. BUECHE: I have just received your telegram of to-day, in which you say:

"The Jefferson County Trade and Labor Assembly is opposed to the proposed national prohibition to be voted on next Monday, and respectfully request your vote and influence against same."

The right and courtesy shown by you in this telegram and the many acts of consideration and good will I have at various times received from individual members of your association, and, in fact, from sincere laboring men all over the district, lead me to feel that it ought not to be filed away or pigeonholed without a frank answer and explanation on my part. I have felt grateful and uniformly tried to reciprocate on all proper occasions the good will and courtesy shown me by labor, and certainly I have never entertained a thought of discrimination.

On the general subject of prohibition there is, as you know, a decided difference of opinion in Ohio. The recent State vote on the subject was not decisive—at least was not sufficiently so to deter its friends from bringing up the subject again. But in the congressional district which for a time I have the honor of representing the majority for prohibition was large, as it was also at the previous election when the question was submitted to the voters, so that it might be said to be an instruction on this point to the district Congressman, even if he did not personally agree in sentiment.

Besides, Mr. Bueche, while I have always tried to deal squarely and treat every law-abiding citizen with due respect, respecting the individual judgment of all men in my district, my own home environment, personal thought, and feelings have always been practically opposed to the use of intoxicants in any form.

Again, the question to be voted upon by Congress on Monday is not strictly one of prohibition as you state. It is rather one of whether or not Congress is willing to submit to the people, under the form provided in the Constitution, the question of national prohibition. Such submission is not conclusive of its adoption. This can only come when the people through three-quarters of the State legislatures—that is, 36 of the 48 States—vote they want it.

Over 6,000,000 people have petitioned Congress for its submission, more than have ever before petitioned Congress on any subject.

Really, Mr. Bueche, do you not yourself think that ordinary fairness and consideration for the rights of others require Congress under such circumstances to allow the people to settle for themselves all such questions when an orderly method is provided for it in their organic law? What fair answer can be given to the 6,000,000 petitioners for refusing their request for a vote on the subject? Can we say that the citizenship of the Republic is not to be trusted?

Besides, for me to refuse to so vote would be to stultify a long personal political and official record. As early as 1881, when a member of the Ohio senate, as the journal of that year will show, I voted to submit the question of State-wide prohibition to the people of the State. The next year, 1882, as chairman of the Republican State convention at Columbus, in my opening address, I personally favored prohibition, although it was not then as popular as it is now. Freely recognizing, during the thirty-odd years intervening since I thus began voting on the subject, the right of everyone to exercise his own individual judgment in a political way, I have never sought to hide under a bushel my own record or views, public or private.

It is too late now to begin, if I wished; too late to dissemble even if a candidate for reelection, which I am not.

Labor, organized or unorganized, is the basic foundation of American hope to-day, and I shall not consciously do it an injustice. But, as in other matters, I must follow my convictions of duty. It is the only way that I can preserve my self-respect, and this to me is more precious than public applause.

Therefore, Mr. Bueche, I trust that you and your associates, whose past good will and friendship I have appreciated and shall always remember, will at least in this instance give me credit for honesty of purpose.

With sentiments of personal esteem and respect, I am,

Very truly, yours,

D. A. HOLLINGSWORTH.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY].

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAGEE] has asked why this resolution should come before the House at this time. I believe there is an answer which is irresistible, and that is that the sovereign American people, who have pledged their entire resources, all they are and have, to the carrying on of this mighty war, demand that this question be definitely settled at this time. If there is any one thing certain in this war-convulsed world, it is that the American people have definitely made up their minds to put the Government out of the liquor business, the liquor business out of the Government, and the liquor business out of business. The people have taken into consideration all of these arguments made here to-day. They have weighed the argument that prohibition does not prohibit and have proceeded to vote their States dry, with the result that liquor is proved to be not above law and that prohibition can be enforced as satisfactorily as any other law. They have listened to the infamous doctrine that the Government would perish were it not for the revenues derived from the liquor traffic, and have decided that they will no longer accept 10 cents in revenue for the sake of paying out a dollar to take care of the finished product of the business. They have weighed the arguments of blear-eyed defenders of personal liberty, and have decided that the personal liberty which means wrecked lives, destruction of property, disease, crime, and degeneracy is a menace to the public welfare and should be outlawed. They have listened to the plea that an army of workers is engaged in the liquor business and have decided to put that army of workers into constructive employment instead of destructive. They have heard of the 300,000 farmers who grow crops to keep the breweries and distilleries running and have decided that the foodstuffs thus wasted shall be preserved for those who are starving for it. They have heard of the millions of tons of coal used in the production and transportation of liquor, and have decided that it can much better be used by those who are freezing without it. They have listened to the argument that compensation is due the liquor interests, and have decided that when those interests compensate the Nation for the damage they have wrought, compensation to the liquor dealers will be considered.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes; I yield to my friend.

Mr. JAMES. The statement has been made by some people that a man can not be a good munition maker unless he is a whisky drinker. Carrying that idea further, would it not follow that in order to make a good Congressman, in order to make us capable of being good men to legislate and carry on this war, it is necessary to drink so many drinks of grog each day? [Laughter.]

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes. The gentleman, as usual, is exactly right. His question answers itself. The American people are not being duped in this matter at all. They see through the sophistry of these stock arguments in behalf of a notorious evil, and they are ready to meet them at the ballot box.

Above all, Mr. Speaker, the people have considered this mighty war in which we are engaged and which taxes every resource and every atom of our strength. They see every ideal of democracy and Americanism swaying in the balance. They see the liquor interests as a barrier to our victory and they propose to break that barrier down. They propose to destroy this force which endangers our chances of triumph in the holiest cause in which America has ever engaged.

With that decision made in their heart of hearts, the American people are to-day asking their Representatives to submit this problem to them, that they may settle it in American fashion. The Constitution provides the way, for the framers of that immortal document, wise and great as they were, knew well that new problems would confront succeeding generations, which must be settled by themselves. The 13 original States contained intelligence enough to frame the Constitution; the 48 States today contain intelligence enough to vote upon amendments to it.

Is there any doubt that the people demand this action and that the question is big enough to warrant it? Scan the temperance map of the United States and see where the saloon has been driven out of 88 per cent of the territory of America, with 60 per cent of the population living in that area. See that six out of every seven counties are dry. Note that 15,000 towns and cities have banished the traffic. See the petitions of 8,000,000 people that this question be submitted in constitutional manner. Note that the United States Senate has already answered the people's demand by passing this amendment by the decisive vote of 65 to 20.

In the face of these facts, can any Member doubt that this House of Representatives is charged with the duty of carrying out the will of the people, whose agents they are? No Member can justify his refusal to do that. Not his is the responsibility now of deciding the merits of that question itself. That rests with the sovereign power in this Nation—the people—and they will meet their test by electing 36 State legislatures charged by solemn mandate with their duty—that of ratifying this amendment.

I am glad that this issue is before us in this most memorable year in American history, the one which will be known as the year of decision. Beyond this year all the currents of our history will run in new channels. Definitely, irretrievably, America has taken a new path, and however rocky and rugged the road, she will never retrace her footsteps to the starting place again. The great decision in April of this year has changed the history of the entire world, and even to-day the destiny of unborn centuries is in the molding of the hands of America.

But let no man say that the decision could have been avoided. Conflict between America and Germany was written not only in the stars but in the very fiber and heart's blood of Americanism. There could not be a free America here and a triumphant Kaiser in Berlin. The Prussian idea and the American idea could not live in the world together. One or the other must die.

Just as inevitable was conflict between Americanism and the organized liquor traffic. Let no Member think this decision could have been avoided. These two can not live in peace together in this age. One or the other must die.

Everything which helps Prussian might is hurtful to America; and of all the allies of the Kaiser, giving aid and comfort to those who seek our overthrow, there is none so menacing as the liquor traffic.

The American people recognize this fact. They know that the outlawing of the liquor traffic will be the mightiest blow possible at the Prussian idea, and they are asking the right to strike that blow in peaceful, constitutional manner with the ballot, the invincible weapon of freemen, in their hands.

That is the kind of revolution the American people have decided upon. Those who paint fanciful pictures of revolution in case this measure is passed are totally mistaken. There is not going to be a revolution. There is one. It is not for the liquor traffic, but against it. The great heart of America, throbbing with the aspirations of its workers, its business men, its professional men, all classes, sects, and creeds, is determined to end the ravages of this iniquitous business now and forever.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, when this war is ended by victory we shall face some of the most momentous problems in our history. The great task which will be ours of preserving democracy at home, government of the people for the people and by the people, would be made overwhelmingly difficult by the corrupting and debauching tactics of the liquor interests. They have shown their lawlessness in the past; they have polluted politics; they have used the boycott and the black list; they have sought to make cowards of public men.

There is coming a new political alignment in this country, with Americans on one side and anti-Americans on the other. All those who fight under the black banner of corruption and the yellow flag of treason must be lined up so that Americans may know their enemies. That division will be made. That battle will come. The elimination of the liquor traffic in America will mean assured victory to the forces of Americanism.

The adoption of this amendment to-day will be a pledge of moral progress to the world. It will be preparation for the day when America stands guarding a world set free. It will be a mighty blow in that cause for whose advancement we have beaten our plowshares into swords. It will be an omen of good cheer to every forward-looking man and woman in America. It will clear the decks for effective dealing with the problems of war and of peace. It will show that this House dares to meet a great moral, social, and economic problem involving a mighty financial interest and that it trusts the people with the solution. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, this resolution undertakes to deal with the terms of a covenant entered into between sovereignties 127 years ago. It is suggested that that agreement shall be broken and new conditions imposed. It is proposed that a majority of the States, parties to that contract, shall change the terms of the partnership—which is the American Union—and compel a minority of them to accept conditions that were not contemplated when the Union was formed and that are repugnant to them and to at least half the people of the country. It will sow the seed of dissension. It is the overturning and revolutionizing of the Federal Union and the destruction of the States.

Of course, we will have a Government, even if the resolution should be agreed to by two-thirds of the Congress and three-fourths of the States, but it will not be the Government our fathers gave us. The States will have lost their police powers, an essential attribute of sovereignty, and will have lost their control of local affairs. Thereafter the States will be mere expensive political shells, devoid of powers, without souls, and no good reason can be advanced why they should be maintained. As important political entities they will have passed into history. The historian of the future can say with truth that the American Union of free, independent, sovereign States died as victims of tyranny imposed by fanatics and that in its place was erected a strong, centralized government such as Patrick Henry predicted and Thomas Jefferson feared.

The purpose of the first Constitutional Convention, that which met at Annapolis in September, 1786, was to provide, as far as the delegates could, rules of interstate conduct in commercial matters and to care for the common interests of the States and insure permanent harmony between them. Their great purpose was to establish a constitution adequate to the exigencies of the Union, to deal with foreign affairs in the interest of each and all of the high contracting parties, and with the interrelations of the sovereign powers that were making the compact.

The Annapolis Convention was attended by delegates of only 5 of the 13 States. There was suspicion on the part of some of the States that the effort to adopt a constitution might become an assault on their independence and sovereignty about which they were properly jealous, and so some of them refused to attend the meeting. These fears were overcome and finally, although with great reluctance on the part of some, all were brought into the Union by subscribing to the Constitution adopted in the following year.

No one ever questioned the fact of the independence and complete sovereignty of the States in their first political association, the Confederation, as it was called, through which the founders of our Government tried to work out their political destiny. The Articles of Confederation developed certain weaknesses that compelled a new charter. It was provided in the Constitution of the United States and it is not the Constitution of a consolidated State. It is the written terms of the association of 48 separate sovereignties.

The delegates to the Constitutional Convention of 1787 went as the representatives of the States, and all the ability and eloquence of Edmund Randolph and Alexander Hamilton, who were believers in a strong, contralized, national, aristocratic government, could not persuade them to betray the States that sent them.

Few students of the history of that period could be made to believe that the Constitution would ever have been accepted if the plans of Randolph and Hamilton had been agreed to. There are many phrases in the Constitution that reflect the jealous care of men like William Patterson and Oliver Ellsworth to protect the independence of the States.

The Centralists did not rest patiently under their defeat in the Constitutional Convention, but immediately renewed their assaults on the integrity of the States, and the tenth amendment was intended to fix beyond doubt the relation of the States to the Federal Government. It is worth while now to quote the language of that amendment, as it is well worth while for every citizen of the States and of the United States who wants to know his Government to read and reread the Constitution as a whole. It says—

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States, respectively, or to the people.

Unlike the resolution now under consideration, which is frankly intended to be a mere police regulation and thus usurp the functions of the States, every one of the existing amendments to the Constitution is meant to be a guaranty of the rights of the citizen, or deals with purely political questions. This is a radical and dangerous departure from the practices of the past. It is, as I have already said, revolution. It does what the Southern Confederacy with a mighty effort failed to do; it breaks up the Union and in destroying the powers of the States sets up a centralized government, which, however, was far from the purpose of the Southern Confederacy.

To accomplish the purpose in the minds of the proponents of this resolution it is not necessary to amend the Constitution and to overthrow the union of the States. The power to regulate or destroy the liquor traffic already exists. Each State now has the right to forbid the manufacture or sale of alcoholic liquors within its jurisdiction and statutes of the United States protect it against shipments from other States. The validity of these statutes has been upheld by the Supreme Court.

But that does not satisfy the supporters of this resolution. The people of prohibition States seek to impose their will on the people of other States, and to do so they are willing to undo the wise work of the founders of the Government. It is certainly un-American; it is rank tyranny and full of danger. Constitutions of great countries are not meant to be vehicles for the carriage of simple laws. That work may be safely left to the wisdom of the various legislatures. Guaranty of rights and the great principles of government are enduring, while a law that is expedient in one generation may be inexpedient and undesirable in the next. The majority may want a certain law now and abhor it later. As democracies are supposed to reflect the views of the majority—and the most rabid prohibitionists in this House say they want that will exercised—it is both unwise and unfair to make a condition where the majority can not do its will hereafter unless it can control two-thirds of Congress and three-fourths of the States.

Suppose the prohibition majority of to-day should become an antiprohibition majority to-morrow, what would the prohibitionists do and what would be the situation? Would they, in their great respect for the democratic principles of the rule of the majority, help us repeal the amendment they now propose? No, Mr. Speaker; they would not. In fact, they want to get the technical advantage of having this clause in the Constitution because under it an antiprohibition majority of the future will have to be so overwhelming before it can enforce its will that it will control more than three-fourths of all the States. Supporters of this measure may be good men, but they are not good Americans, for they will, if they can, deny the right of the majority to rule, and they are not good Democrats or Republicans, although they wear party labels.

Let us, Mr. Speaker, consider another contingency of the future. It is conceivable that after this resolution shall have become part of the Constitution—if unfortunately that should occur—the people may change their views to such an extent that seventy-four out of every hundred voters would be opposed to prohibition. Could they rely upon the American doctrine of majority rule? Not at all, for twenty-six voters out of a hundred, just one more than a fourth of all the voters, with the technical advantage that would be given by the proposed amendment, could defy the 74 and laugh to scorn their efforts to assert a recognized principle of American democracy.

Do you believe, Mr. Speaker, that practically three-fourths of all the people of this country would patiently submit to the indefinite control of the country by one-fourth? They would not, unless they have lost all their spirit and capacity for government, and they would surely find some way of expressing their will even if it involved a new constitutional convention or revolution. This scheme is dangerous from every angle from which one views it.

Where will this movement to control the habits of men stop? It is liquor to-day; to-morrow it may be tobacco, for already there is in existence an important association working to prohibit the manufacture of cigars and cigarettes. Why should not they do so, for they are convinced that its use is hurtful to the body and a needless waste of money? It takes no prophet to foretell that if they should ever find themselves in a majority they will demand laws to prohibit the use of the most delightful and soothing of all the plants a benign Providence has vouchsafed man. Already some States have anticigarette laws, and the advocates of such legislation would certainly like to extend the prohibition to other preparations of tobacco.

Sumptuary legislation seems to appeal to a certain order of mind. It is progressive tyranny, as the history of this legislation shows. Just a little while ago, Mr. Speaker, the prohibitionists in Congress said they could not enforce the State laws against the liquor traffic, because they had no control over interstate commerce, and that they would be satisfied if Congress would give them the right to forbid the introduction of alcoholic beverages into States that had prohibitory laws. Congress complacently gave them what they wanted.

Some of the leaders in the movement on the floor of this House vehemently denied then that it was their wish or design to interfere with the right of an individual to import liquors for his own use. They claimed to be after the traffic in liquor, the saloons, and not after individuals. You know what happened. They have now thrown off all disguise, and, emboldened by these successes, frankly proclaim their purpose to regulate the habits of the individual citizen. They now urge the most outrageous sumptuary laws ever sought to be forced on any people who fancied themselves free, independent men. To-day they tell Americans what they shall drink. How long will it be before they will tell them what they shall eat and wherewithal they shall be clothed and how they shall worship the Lord?

How any man who ever believed in the rights of the States can support such a resolution passes my understanding. How any man who calls himself a Democrat and who believes in the principles and traditions of his party can do so is incomprehensible.

Here is what the great Democratic platform of 1868, on which Horatio Seymour, of New York, made his race for the Presidency, had to say about certain rights of the States and principles of government. It would be well for members of the Democratic Party to read and consider it. It is specially commended to the attention of Members from the South, in which section these doctrines once had their staunchest defenders.

And we do declare and resolve that ever since the people of the United States threw off all subjection to the British Crown the privilege and trust of suffrage have belonged to the several States, and have been granted, regulated, and controlled exclusively by the political powers of each State, respectively, and that any attempt by Congress, on any pretext whatever, to deprive any State of this right, or interfere with its exercise, is a flagrant usurpation of power which can find no warrant in the Constitution, and if sanctioned by the people will subvert our form of government, and can only end in a single, centralized, and consolidated government, in which the separate existence of the States will be entirely absorbed, and an unqualified despotism be established in place of a Federal Union of coequal States.

That plank in the Democratic platform of 1868 refers to the question of suffrage, an issue that came out of the war between the States; but the argument is even stronger when applied to such a resolution as that we are now considering. The question of suffrage is more important than the regulation of the liquor traffic, and I shall vote against its control by the Federal Government, but I can see many more reasons for supporting the so-called Susan B. Anthony amendment than I can for supporting that now before us. Yet, I dare say, some of our friends who sit on this side of the House will be able to persuade themselves that they should vote to take away from the States their police powers over the liquor trade and at the same time deny women the right to vote. Wonderful logic, that! There is no reason why the Constitution of the United States should deal with either, for the States have ample power over both subjects.

The Democratic platform of 1880 declared specifically against sumptuary legislation. That of 1884, when a great Democrat, Grover Cleveland, was nominated, says:

We oppose sumptuary laws, which vex the citizen and interfere with individual liberty.

The platform of 1888 reaffirmed the declaration of 1884, while that of 1892 said:

We are opposed to all sumptuary laws as an interference with the individual rights of the citizen.

The party platform of 1896 reaffirmed the allegiance of Democrats to the great principles announced in other conventions, specifically pledging loyalty to "freedom of speech, freedom of the press, freedom of conscience, the preservation of personal rights," and to all the great doctrines "which the Democratic Party has advocated from Jefferson's time to our own." Furthermore, it denounced "arbitrary interference by Federal authorities in local affairs," which denunciation must apply to the sort of thing now contemplated.

Mr. Speaker, the individual rights of the citizens do not appear to interest many people who call themselves Democrats. Legislation like this is only one step in the encroachment on the rights of the people. The right taken now encourages the believers in a centralized government to assault another in the future. No right, personal or political, will be sacred or safe against the whim of the majority, which, with this resolution agreed to, can impose its will in our social system or in religion.

From control of the person and habits of the people to control of their religious faith is no great step.

I shall vote against this resolution because it is undemocratic, because it destroys the States, because it destroys local self-government and is revolutionary. It is the sort of law that might be written into statutes to protect imbeciles and children, but should never be applied to the average American citizen, whose personal liberty it kills and whose political and religious liberty it puts in jeopardy.

Under the privilege conceded me by the House, I print as part of my speech an editorial, thoughtful and powerful in argument, from the Washington Times of December 14:

On Monday Congress will consider the advisability of changing the National Constitution to make it take the place of local policemen. The proposition is to alter the Constitution to oblige prohibition fanatics that have succeeded in making a servant of the United States Senate through political blackmail, and now find it convenient to alter the Constitution to suit their purposes.

Congressmen from the South are supposed to believe in State rights and State authority. They are considering the proposition to permit the Nation to do police work in the States.

Let them oblige the Anti-Saloon League by making the Federal Constitution an Anti-Saloon League plaything, and the South will formally indorse an ending of State authority and open the way for other kinds of Federal police work that will not suit the South so well.

If Congressmen from the South wish to open the way for future Federal amendments and populate their States with Federal spies enforcing a prohibition amendment, and available for use at elections, and in other ways that might please a new administration after 1920, let them fool with the Constitution now and pull it to pieces in obedience to the orders of Anti-Saloon League threats.

The State police has power to regulate prohibition. Every State has prohibition that wants it; every State can be bone dry if it chooses.

Let the South now force prohibition on New York, Illinois, Massachusetts, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, using the Constitution as a club, and later those States may use the army of Federal spies that this constitutional amendment would create in a manner not exactly welcome to southern statesmen, in a manner that might seriously interfere with Democratic supremacy in the South.

Congressmen from the South, think that over before you meekly bow your necks to the latest Anti-Saloon League order.

This constitutional amendment, if passed in the House, would represent not the convictions of the Congressmen but hypocrisy.

Every Congressman knows that this statement is true.

Every Congressman knows that if the ballot on the constitutional amendment were a secret ballot, making it impossible for the Anti-Saloon League bosses to punish disobedience, the amendment wouldn't pass. Far from getting a two-thirds majority, it wouldn't get one-fifth of the votes in the House.

This constitutional amendment would make labor dissatisfied, with just cause, and injure the Nation's efficiency in war.

It would inject into all of the 48 States a bitter controversy, a savage political fight now, when the Nation needs harmonious united action, freedom from bitterness, and especially freedom from dissatisfaction among the workers upon whom depends success in this war.

A prohibition amendment to the Constitution might be effective as regards the harmless mild stimulants; it would not be effective as against whisky or drugs after a few months.

The habits of the human race can not be changed over night to oblige fanatics. Mr. Hoover, head of the Food Department, told the truth when he said, "Those who wish brewing entirely suppressed should bear in mind that if such a course were pursued the country would be placed upon a whisky basis entirely."

The President has dealt with this vitally important question wisely, conservatively, and effectively, using the power given to him by Congress. He has reduced to a minimum the alcoholic content of beer.

He has forbidden the further manufacture of whisky. This has more than doubled the price of that alcoholic drug. In consequence, official statistics in the State of New York show that drunkenness has diminished by 50 per cent, and the alcoholic wards are practically empty. In New York there is no prohibition, and the consumption of beer among workingmen has increased, while drunkenness has diminished, because those that formerly drank whisky now content themselves with beer.

Cyrus H. K. Curtis, owner of the Saturday evening Post, the Ladies' Home Journal, and the Philadelphia Public Ledger, is an earnest worker for temperance.

Let the many sincere temperance men in Congress read on the first page of this newspaper what Mr. Curtis in his Ledger says about the proposed constitutional change:

"The Constitution has never been the vehicle for declarations of policy. Not even the Monroe doctrine has been incorporated in the fundamental law. To compel all the States to conform to the police regulations of the majority of States would be to destroy local government."

Let Congressmen from the South think over this statement in the paper of one of the most useful and sincere temperance workers in the United States. Let them think well before they "destroy local government."

The fanatics that are forcing this constitutional amendment upon them are planning to send thousands of Federal spies and investigators into every southern community, and those Anti-Saloon League fanatics will be first and most energetic, under some other administration, using those spies in their own particular way.

Congressmen from the South, remember that when you vote for this prohibition amendment to the Constitution you do more than vote to permit a little band of fanatics to control great Northern States and great bodies of workmen, coercing them against their will.

You are proposing to give to the leaders of the Anti-Saloon League thousands of Federal agents to be used as they please in your districts, in your local affairs, in your elections.

You know the character of the Anti-Saloon League well; many of you have described it to this writer and in a manner none too complimentary.

It may seem to you wise to oblige these gentlemen by turning over to them police powers in Northern States, where the prohibition that you approve, for local reasons, is not necessary and not wanted.

Take care how you twist the Constitution in such a way as to give some future Republican President, closely allied with the Anti-Saloon League, a well-organized band of Federal prohibition agents, with wide powers, capable of being made highly useful on election day, in your territory.

Don't be in too much of a hurry to change the Constitution of the United States—you might regret it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I will have to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects.

Mr. SLAYDEN. He will relent later. [Laughter.]

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, this resolution proposes to submit to the people of the United States the question as to whether the sale and manufacture in and the export from and import into the United States of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes shall be prohibited. In my view of the matter but one main question presents itself to us for solution, namely: Is it wise and advisable for the Congress to submit this matter to the people of the United States in gross for determination? There may be other collateral questions involved here, but only in so far as they affect the main question that I have stated. We are not now discussing the moral question of whether the use of intoxicating beverages is wrong or is right; it is rather for us to say whether the people of the United States, as a whole, shall have a right to pass upon this question or whether they shall not.

Those who oppose this resolution strenuously contend that the manufacture and sale of intoxicating beverages are local matters and should be left to the jurisdiction of the States and their respective municipal subdivisions, while those who favor this resolution contend that it is a national question. The framers of the Constitution, having in mind, no doubt, the many differing customs, rules of living, and methods of self-government that had grown up with the widely separated American colonies, wisely concluded to preserve to each colony, thus to be made into States, as great a measure of local self-government as was possible, but that when the activities of one of these States might overlap and conflict with the activities of any other, the jurisdiction of the common General Government would obtain. So far as I can read our history there was no other underlying reason for the retention of State and local governments.

As the years have gone by our boundaries have expanded and our population has increased wonderfully, until the peoples of the sparsely settled colonies have flowed together and filled up the waste places. And when they began to flow together the activities of the people of each State began more and more to affect the peoples of other States. More Federal regulation became day by day more essential to the mutual welfare of all the people. Questions that were local and sectional in colonial days became national as the Nation developed. The development of home industries, at first local, became a national question, and the great Republican Party was founded, in part at least, on its demand that the protection of American industries be made a national question, a view that just now the bitterest enemies of that doctrine, the members of the Democratic Party, are preparing to embrace, and which before the lapse of three years they will be openly espousing. The question of human slavery, at first local, became national, and the recorder of human history turned a bloody leaf in writing it down as such. The development of the waste lands by homestead laws, by irrigation projects, and by flood control, and the national banking system were made necessary by these interlapping activities of the people of the States. But it is in recent years that the most surprising developments of national activity are to be observed. The antitrust laws, the interstate-commerce acts, the so-called Mann Act, the Federal reserve banking act, the pure-food laws, the farm-loan act are some of the evidences of broadening national power. I do not speak now of the many acts by which we have concentrated in the National Executive extraordinary powers in this time of war; they are powers that will disappear when the war is over. But I speak of the widening circle of Federal authority in times of peace. These are not usurpations of local authority, but are the natural and legitimate result of our growth of population. As our people become more homogeneous and nationalized we shall irresistibly be forced to strengthen our National Government. If the Constitution does not warrant it, then for the public welfare the Constitution must be amended. For instance, the time must come, and come soon, when we shall have a national law merchant and uniform rules and laws as to negotiable instruments and bills of exchange; we all appreciate that there must be a uniform law regulating marriage and divorce. At an early date there must be increased Federal control over public utilities. While this war is in progress we may by our war powers do what must be done; but no one can view the future after the war is over, and all the mighty questions are to be adjusted without misgivings; when the nations turn to peace and suddenly we go back to our tasks, does anyone doubt that there must be Federal control to a degree never dreamed of by the founders of the Government?

Now, the only question in my mind is: Is the sale and manufacture of intoxicating beverages such a matter as to seem to call for Federal control? In the matter of its shipment from State to State it certainly does; but that power is already enjoyed by the General Government. Does the mere matter of its manufacture and sale in one State affect the people of other States so that the national good may require that it be regulated or stopped? I can not come to any other conclusion than that it does. The best scientific information I have, together with my own personal knowledge and experience, teaches me that the physiological effects of intoxicating beverages are harmful; its habitual use weakens and enfeebles a majority of its users. Many incidental evils travel in its wake, and these evils are not confined locally, but may and do affect the whole body politic. The whole structure of government is kept up by all of us; from it we derive equal benefits. The people of my State have a right to know that the people of Indiana or Iowa, our partners in this governmental enterprise, are not pursuing a course that leads to poverty, weakness, and disease; they have a reciprocal right as to our actions. We have an equal interest in the health and welfare of each other, for side by side we must work out the problems of peace, and side by side we must perform the onerous duties of war. Dismiss the matter of morals, if you please. Put it on the simple ground of national efficiency and economy and we must be forced to the unalterable conclusion that this is a national question and one that the people as a whole ought to have the right to settle.

This question has perplexed the people of all the States since the formation of the Republic. It has been a constant source of dissension and political controversy. Let the people decide this matter. He who opposes this resolution must do so with the idea that three-fourths of the people of the United States do not have a right to decide this matter. I do not agree with this contention, and because I do not, and because I do believe this to be a national question, I favor the submission of the resolution to the people for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend and revise his remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object.

At the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I yield to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. McARTHUR] five minutes.

Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Speaker, if there ever was a time when this Nation should be united in spirit and in purpose rather than torn asunder by internal dissension, it is now. We are active participants in the greatest war in history, and our people should be standing shoulder to shoulder against the common enemy rather than quarreling among themselves over questions that might be better settled after the war. To inject a question such as national prohibition will not tend to solidify the people of the country in support of a common cause, but will so upset business, economic, and political conditions that the war will become of secondary importance in the minds of millions of people. The campaign that will naturally develop for and against the adoption of this amendment by the legislatures of the various States will create much bitterness, will call for the expenditure of large sums that would serve a better purpose if invested in Liberty bonds or donated to the Red Cross, and will lessen the public interest in the war. As proof of this, I have only to cite the prohibition elections that were held last month in some of our large States and cities.

To those who contend that this is a war measure let me say that it will be at least two years before the requisite three-fourths of the States will hold sessions of their legislatures; and granting, for the sake of argument, that the amendment will be adopted as soon as the legislatures have an opportunity to vote on it—which is extremely doubtful—there is a proviso that it shall not become operative until one year after its final adoption by the last of the necessary 36 States. This means it will be at least three years before national prohibition can become a reality. Let us fervently hope that the war will be over before three years have elapsed.

We have already suspended the manufacture of distilled liquors for the period of the war; have given the President authority to suspend the manufacture of malt liquors and wines, to commandeer and take over for governmental purposes liquors of all kinds, and to reduce the alcoholic content of such malt liquors as may be manufactured during the war; and, in addition to this, have prohibited the sale of liquors in and around military camps—and, incidentally, all of these propositions have had my unqualified support—but we can not by the widest stretch of the imagination classify the pending amendment as a war measure. Anything in the nature of a war measure must of necessity be temporary or provisional, to be altered or set aside at the close of the war. There is nothing of this character attached to this proposed amendment. It is to be a permanent proposition—an amendment to the organic law of our country—and, when once adopted, can not be repealed except by two-thirds vote of both branches of Congress and affirmative action of three-fourths of the legislatures. No change in the organic law of the country can be regarded as a war measure, and we must not delude ourselves by any false notions concerning this amendment. Its passage by Congress will not make the winning of the war easier, but, by plunging the country into the vortex of internal strife, will make it more difficult.

If this amendment is approved by Congress and sent to the States for approval or rejection, the question of standing by the administration and supporting the war will become secondary in the minds of several million radical prohibitionists and extreme antiprohibitionists when next year's elections are held. The general fitness of candidates and the all-important test of loyalty to the Government will be lost sight of in the campaigns that will hinge on the attitude of candidates on the question of prohibition. The result will be the election to office of numerous unfits who would never be heard of in an ordinary election.

The Anti-Saloon League and other agencies who have been so insistent in demanding the passage of this amendment by Congress have assumed a grave responsibility. They are going too fast and too far at a time when their energies might better be spent in constructive movements against bootlegging, moonshining, and other violations of the liquor laws on our statute books. They would serve a better purpose by conducting a campaign of education against liquor rather than precipitating a question that will create ill feeling and recrimination among millions of our people.

I can not agree that a vote in Congress for national prohibition is merely a "referendum," and that the responsibility in the matter rests with the States. Under our dual system of government a proposed amendment to the Federal Constitution must first pass both branches of Congress by a two-thirds vote in each branch and then be ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the States. There is no such thing as a referendum, for this implies a popular vote rather than a vote by the legislature. The act of amendment is, in the first place, an act of Congress expressing its judgment upon the question at issue, and the action of the States is secondary, a check upon the action of Congress and not a substitute. The Constitution says nothing about "submitting" an amendment to the States; it says that "the Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution," and that these shall become valid "when ratified by three-fourths of the States." The function of Congress in this matter is not purely ministerial, but is an essential element in the process of amendment. Were there any possible room for doubt as to this point, it would be removed by the consideration that a two-thirds vote in each House is required for the adoption of an amendment. Under the theory of "submission to the States" of a proposal for their legislatures to decide, surely a bare majority in Congress would be sufficient; but the idea of the framers of the Constitution was that a proposed amendment should, first of all, stand the test of commanding not only ordinary approval in Congress, but the emphatic approval embodied in a two-thirds vote of both Houses.

The constitutional provision which says an amendment may be adopted and sent to the legislatures "whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary" places upon the individual Senator and Representative a responsibility which he can not escape on the plea that he is voting for a "referendum," particularly where no such instrumentality as the referendum exists.

I hold no brief for liquor or the liquor traffic—particularly for that sink hole of iniquity known as the saloon—but I can not and will not be a party to any movement that I regard as inimical to the best interests of my country. I shall, therefore, vote against the amendment, not only for the reasons stated but for the additional reason that the district which I represent, the people to whom I am accountable, voted against bone-dry, State-wide prohibition by a majority if 9,799 votes on the 7th day of November, 1916, the day that I was elected to my present term in this Congress. If I were to vote affirmatively on this question, I would deliberately misrepresent, not represent, the expressed wishes of my constituents.

In the language of our President in his great message of December 4, "our present and immediate task is to win the war, and nothing shall turn us aside from it until it is accomplished." The President appreciates the gravity of the situation; he not only defines our purpose, but he sounds a warning against questions that are beside the issue. Let us, therefore, keep our course clear and not wreck the ship of state on the shoals of internal dissension. [Applause.]

I yield back the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon yields back one minute.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN].

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, Tennessee has successfully tried prohibition for six years. It has worked so well that both political parties are committed to it, and no political organization in that State would dare attempt to make a fight for its repeal. A law which has emptied the jails in Tennessee and virtually wiped out the criminal side of the dockets of the courts will do the same thing in every State in the American Union. [Applause.] King Alcohol has filled the world already with enough misery, with enough murders, with enough insane people, with enough unhappy wives and unfortunate children. Let us dedicate ourselves this day and this hour to the improvement of American manhood and womanhood by voting to make America the best country on the face of the earth. [Applause.] While our soldier boys are fighting to make the world free and safe, let the American Congress make the United States better physically, mentally, and morally. I predict that when the two great political parties in this country next assemble in their national conventions they will both adopt platforms favoring prohibition and woman suffrage. [Applause.]

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I am heartily in favor of this resolution. I am sure that there is not a Member on this floor, be he for or against this resolution, who does not admit to himself that the liquor traffic is and has always been the cause of a large proportion of the crime, poverty, and inefficiency throughout the land. And yet, when it is proposed to legislate upon this question, with the view of curtailing the sale of liquor, certain influences attempt to throw every hindrance in the way of securing such legislation. Under ordinary conditions, those engaged in the liquor traffic make no apology for their business, but when cornered they fall back upon the stale arguments of "personal liberty" and the alleged right of the individual to do as he pleases. This argument is so absurd that it is scarcely worth answering. The first law of society is that individuals shall not be permitted to do that which, although considered beneficial to themselves, may be injurious to others or to the community at large. The statute books, both National and State, are full of restrictions founded upon that principle. Obnoxious factories can not be operated if injurious to the health or comfort of those in its vicinity. A butcher is not permitted to offer for sale unsound meat, nor the grocer adulterated food. The public gaming tables or devices are not permitted to operate, because it is considered criminal to even tempt a man to risk his property, or to provide himself with the means of squandering the substance of his family. Indelicate or indecenct exhibitions are not permitted because of the danger of debauching the minds of the people. No one is allowed in any well-regulated city to drive a team or automobile along the left side of a street. Nor are persons under the influence of liquor allowed to operate a car because of the danger to others.

Why, then, should there be any reluctance in restricting the sale of alcoholic liquors when their baleful effects on health and life are acknowledged by every disinterested person. We legislate to prevent the spread of poverty, crime, and disease. The use of intoxicating liquors produce all of these, and are we not justified in legislating to prevent the progress of its devastating influence?

The liquor interests urge the solving of the problem of intemperance through moral suasion or education, but have they ever been so inconsistent as to endeavor to either publicly or through the press attempt to influence the people to drink less? Do they hire lecturers to go throughout the country and hold meetings and tell the people of the injurious effects of drinking too much liquor? Do they have any newspapers or magazines print any such arguments? As a matter of fact, do they do anything toward attempting to influence the people, by education or moral suasion, against the use of liquor? How absurd and inconsistent their position. Instead of urging the people to drink less, they spend millions of dollars in advertising and extending their business in every way possible.

The only person engaged in the liquor traffic who has offered any solution of the evils of intemperance is that high priest of the trade, August A. Busch, president of the Anheuser-Busch Brewing Co., of St. Louis. I read from an article which appeared in the press recently which may be of interest:

ST. LOUIS, December 5.

August A. Busch, president and principal owner of the Anheuser-Busch Brewing Co., is starting a propaganda to combat the growing prohibition movement in the United States. The chief features of the scheme are:

First. A strict enforcement by State authorities of all excise laws.

Second. The establishment throughout the country of the German saloon system, which permits only beer, light wines, and temperance drinks to be sold in dramshops.

I wonder how popular it will be with the people of this country to have ingrafted upon us the German saloon system?

Third. Cooperation by brewers and State authorities to close up every saloon the owner of which does not obey the excise laws.

Can any of you point to any liquor dealers in this country who are cooperating toward enforcing the law against the enactment of which they fought so bitterly?

Fourth. The abolition of treating in saloons, to discourage drinking to excess.

How inconsistent he is in suggesting a plan to diminish the sale of his own wares.

Fifth. The discontinuance of bars in saloons, substituting service at tables at which customers will be seated.

How many of those who frequent the saloons would drink less if they sat down than if they stood up? How absurd. Yet that is Mr. Busch's plan for solving this great problem. My impression is that the American people will be no more likely to adopt the plan suggested by Mr. Busch to regulate the liquor traffic in this country than they will to take the suggestions of the Kaiser as to how we should conduct the war.

Mr. Speaker, because of the scarcity of sugar throughout this country the dealers, especially in the eastern part of the Nation, have been urged to sell not more than 2 pounds per day to any one customer, and yet over 70,000,000 pounds of sugar are annually used in the manufacture of beer, and in nearly one-half of the States in this Union the saloons are open. There is no limit upon the quantity of foodstuffs that may be used in the manufacture of malted liquor. Because of the scarcity of coal the public schools have been closed in some of the Eastern cities, union meetings are being held in the churches to save fuel, universities are being closed, and inmates of the hospitals are suffering from the cold, yet the chimneys of the breweries throughout the United States, where prohibition is not in effect, are belching forth the smoke from the thousands of tons of coal that are being burned to manufacture beer. What consistency.

Does it pay to permit a traffic which annually destroys 150,000 lives and the use of nearly $3,000,000,000 in order that a certain class of individuals should not be disturbed in their hurtful business? Does it pay to permit the continuation of a business which breeds paupers, lunatics, and criminals? Does it pay to enlarge our jails, asylums, and almshouses to take care of those who occupy these institutions as a result of the liquor traffic? Is it good sense to refuse to admit criminals to this country, as provided in our immigration laws, and allow a traffic to exist which manufactures them within our own borders? Does it pay to send missionaries abroad to Christianize the heathen and permit a business at home that results in the degradation of our own people? Does it pay to waste—yes, more than waste—millions of bushels of foodstuffs when the price of living is soaring day by day, because of its scarcity, in order that the liquor traffic may continue to exist?

If those engaged in the liquor traffic and those who are upholding the business had their way there would not be a prohibition State in this Union. There would be a saloon in each end of the Capitol, as was the case about 15 years ago. There would be the canteen in every Army post in the country, where liquor might be bought, instead of the law which is now upon our statute books preventing the sale of liquor to soldiers in uniform. There would be in the city of Washington eleven hundred open saloons, or more, instead of there being none as at present, under the prohibition law which has been in effect but six weeks.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HERSEY].

Mr. HERSEY. Mr. Speaker, there are two arguments advanced here against the proposed constitutional amendment.

One is that it has no place in the national Constitution, and the second is that it would interfere with the proper conduct of the war.

As to the first, it has a place in the national Constitution, for the reason that State prohibition, local prohibition, can not completely prohibit. I come from a State that has had State prohibition for 70 years, by the most drastic State laws the human mind could devise, and what is the result? From the wet State of Massachusetts, the wet State of New Hampshire, from the license cities of Portsmouth and Boston, on every train, on every steamboat, on nearly every auto that crosses the border the agents of these liquor dealers from the wet States bring intoxicants into my State. Under the cover of darkness, while the people of my State are asleep, these agents of the liquor traffic steal in to rob, plunder, and murder my people. The same is true of every county, every township, and every city that is dry and is up against a wet locality.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HERSEY. No. Here in Washington you have passed a dry law, and it is being violated by wet Baltimore every hour in the day. You never can have bone-dry prohibition until you have it through a national amendment to the Constitution.

As to the war, we must conserve our food resources if we are to win the war. It is utter nonsense to try to win without it. The greatest waste of our resources to-day is caused by the breweries of this Nation.

I want to say that we ought to learn something from history. Rome, once a great world power, collected her people into a great city and then sent her soldiers abroad to conquer her foes. She then took her resources—her foods, grains, and fruits—and converted them into strong drink and said, "Let the dance go on, the soldiers can take care of themselves." What happened? Why, her armies never came back. Her enemies thundered at her gates, and "where the temples of the Caesars stood the lean wolf unmolested makes her lair."

Mr. Speaker, I hope it will never be said of America that she gave her soldier boys to die to save democracy to the world but herself she could not save. [Applause.]

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON].

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, Senate joint resolution 17, now under consideration, provides as follows:

> The manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes is hereby prohibited.

This measure, when passed by a two-thirds vote of both branches of Congress and ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the States, will become a part of the Constitution of the United States, which every person who holds a public office, from President to constable, will be required to take a solemn oath to support. By this measure it is proposed to confer upon the Federal Government the sweeping police power necessary to enforce this drastic piece of legislation in all of the States and territory under the American flag.

A proposition so radical and revolutionary as this, which proposes to repudiate the principle of home rule and local self-government, to invade and violate the reserved rights of the States under the tenth amendment, to deprive them of a material source of their present income, and to take from them and confer upon the Federal Government the police power over what has always been considered and recognized as a subject of State and local jurisdiction and control, ought not to originate in, much less be passed by, the American Congress.

If this measure passes the House by a two-thirds vote and is approved by a bare majority of the legislatures in 36 of the 48 States of this Union it will become a part of the organic law of this Republic, although a large majority of the people of the United States may be opposed to its adoption.

Under the peculiar system of representation in the legislature which prevails in many States, by which the land area instead of the population is represented in their lawmaking body, it frequently happens that the legislature is not representative of the great body of the people of the State.

Some of the New England States have a system of town and township representation in their legislatures regardless of the population that they contain, which creates a rotten borough system and denies equal representation to the great body of the people residing in the populous centers. Under the constitution of my own State, as amended some years ago, each county has a member of the house of representatives, regardless of its population. Omitting the 15 largest counties, the average population of the remaining 73 is but 30,853, while the populous counties have under the last apportionment only one additional member to each 47,671 inhabitants. So that in many States of the Union in which the people have rejected State-wide prohibition by large majorities the legislatures would probably ratify this amendment if given an opportunity to do so, and the action of the legislature in so doing would not be subject to review by the people, even in those States which have the initiative and the referendum provided for in their State constitutions; and even if all members who vote to ratify this amendment should be defeated for reelection and be succeeded in office by Representatives opposed to the amendment, the ratification of the State could not then be withdrawn. This was determined when the fifteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution was ratified by the legislatures of the several States; a majority of the people in most of them repudiated this action of their representatives by defeating them for reelection, but it was held that the previous action of the legislature was final and irrevocable.

The admitted purpose of this constitutional amendment is to override and nullify the action of a number of the larger States of the Union which have rejected State-wide prohibition. No power is given to Congress by the Constitution to submit this or any other proposed change to a vote of the electors, either as a whole or by and through the States. The nearest Congress can come to giving the people of the several States a voice in the adoption or rejection of this proposed amendment is to submit it to constitutional conventions in the several States elected for the purpose of passing upon the question, but the proponents of this measure are unalterably opposed to giving the people of the States a voice in the matter, even to that limited extent, and will promptly vote down an amendment proposing to do so, as was done when the measure was under consideration three years ago.

Article 10, amendments to the Constitution, provides—

> The powers not delegated to the United States by this Constitution nor prohibited by it to the States are reserved to the States, respectively, or to the people.

This proposed joint resolution is a bald, naked, and palpable repudiation of the letter and spirit of the tenth amendment to the Federal Constitution, the adoption of which was necessary to secure its ratification by the requisite number of States.

This joint resolution proposes to outlaw by prohibiting the use of many hundreds of millions in value of property now utilized in the production, manufacture, and sale of vinous, spirituous, and malt liquors, and to clothe the Federal Government with the police power necessary to enforce this destructive and confiscatory enactment. It is proposed to do this by a majority vote of the legislatures of three-fourths in number of the States of this Union. Eleven of these States—Arizona, Delaware, Idaho, Montana, New Hampshire, New Mexico, Nevada, Vermont, Rhode Island, Utah, and Wyoming represented on the floor of this House by 18 Members and in the Senate of the United States by 22 Senators—had, by the census of 1910, an aggregate population of 3,365,953, while by the same census the State of New York had a population of 9,113,614. Neither of these 11 States had as many people as the city of Cleveland, Ohio, at that time, and all of them combined had 1,400,000 less people than the city of New York. Here we have the impelling force behind this proposition, because the people of States like New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Ohio, Texas, Missouri, Massachusetts Indiana Wisconsin, and New Jersey refuse to conform to the ideas of rural and sparsely settled States, like the 11 I have named, the latter propose to join with the other small and sparsely settled States of the Union and by their preponderating power in numbers, each State having 1 vote on amending the Constitution, to force this amendment on the 10 States last mentioned, whose combined population by the census of 1910 was in excess of one-half the total population of all the States in the Union.

The injustice of this proposition is so apparent that even some of its advocates have sought to delay or mitigate the evil of its enactment by requiring action upon it by the several States within a limited time and by postponing its operation one year after it would otherwise become effective.

There is grave doubt as to the legal power of Congress to limit the time within which the requisite number of States must ratify this amendment, and if that provision should be held to be inoperative, it will remain open for adoption by the legislatures of the several States for an unlimited period. Its rejection by a majority of the States, or by all of them, would not settle the question, and its submission by Congress will simply open and keep open, for an unlimited period of time, a raw and bleeding sore on the body politic of every State in this Union to the exclusion of intelligent consideration of every other public question, however pressing.

It is proposed to postpone the operation of this drastic legislation one year after it has been ratified by the requisite number of States. Is this not an admission of the injustice of the proposition? If it is a wise, just, and proper enactment why defer its operation one year or any other period of time? Why do the advocates of this measure try to shrink away from and defer the consequences of its enactment? Is it because they believe that it will result in financial disaster and ruin?

The enactment of the Webb law and the Reed law removes the only possible justification or excuse for this measure. By the terms of these statutes the several States of the Union may by their own enactment render themselves entirely immune from the importation or transportation to any point within their boundries of intoxicating liquors. The truth is that many men who will vote for this measure do so against their own best judgment and under political duress.

No provision is made for compensating those of our citizens who have large sums of money invested in the manufacture and production of spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors. The enormous increase in the sale of the many different varieties of patent medicines containing large percentages of alcohol throughout prohibition territory in the United States, whereby the consumption of spirituous liquors has actually increased with the growth of dry territory, will probably prevent any loss and damage by the manufacturers of whisky and other hard liquors. The constantly increasing demand in dry territory of alcoholic liquors for "medicinal" purposes, although sold in the form of patent medicines, will no doubt continue to increase with the increase in so-called dry territory; but wine and beer containing a very small percentage of alcohol can not be thus mixed and sold, and their manufacture and sale would stop if this measure could be enforced. No provision is made in this joint resolution for supplying the deficiency of between three hundred and four hundred millions of dollars annually which will be lost to the public revenues of the United States by the adoption of this measure, to say nothing of the loss of revenue to the States and their different subdivisions. The consequences of this legislation have not been fully considered by its authors and proponents.

Would the people of States like New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Illinois, after having this amendment forced upon them by the legislatures of such States as New Mexico, Nevada, Wyoming, and Arizona be disposed to enact the necessary legislation to enforce it? The question answers itself.

The only recourse, then, for its enforcement would be through deputy United States marshals. How many would be required for a serious attempt to enforce such a law no one can even estimate. The only result certain to follow its adoption is a complete breaking down of the whole system of attempted law enforcement by the National Government, and a sickening disregard of this and all other laws as a natural consequence. If it should be adopted a majority of the States would soon wish to repudiate it, and it would hang like a millstone about the neck of this Nation until three-fourths of the States could be induced to join in its repeal.

But we are told that all these considerations must be disregarded because the country is engaged in war and we should adopt prohibition as an "efficiency measure." We have been solemnly urged to profit by the mistakes of the other nations engaged in this war, especially the mistakes of our allies. The only one of the allied nations to adopt prohibition was Russia, where the manufacture and sale of their alcoholic stimulant (vodka) was a Government monopoly. The czar by an imperial ukase adopted prohibition, and it resulted in the loss of his imperial crown and scepter and the national demoralization and anarchy which now obtains in that unhappy country. If nation-wide prohibition promoted efficiency in Russia nobody has discovered any evidence of that fact.

The only other nation engaged in this war to attempt even to restrict the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquor was England, who, in the first year or two of the war limited the amount of grain which might be used in the manufacture of beer, but this restriction, I understand, has since been removed.

The contention that by outlawing and destroying hundreds of millions of dollars in value of the property of our own citizens we would thereby promote the efficiency of the people of this Nation in the prosecution of this war, or for any other purpose, is the wildest delusion that ever took possession of a human brain. Every man of common sense and business judgment knows that the enactment into law of such a drastic and revolutionary measure as this will embitter against the Government thousands of our citizens, whose property will be thereby destroyed or its value greatly reduced by its enactment. To secure the united and hearty support and cooperation of all of our citizens in the successful prosecution of this war, in this the greatest crisis in the Nation's history, ought to be the aim and effort of all good citizens, including Members of Congress. This act will repel and not attract such support and cooperation.

But we are told with vehement emphasis that the proposition to force this measure upon the different States of this Union, which have rejected prohibition and adopted regulation as a means of providing against the evils resulting from the sale of intoxicating liquors, is a moral question which justifies the invasion of the reserved rights of the States and the repudiation of the principle of home rule and local self-government, upon which our dual system is based. If by this it is meant that legislative prohibition raises the standard of morality in the prohibition States above that of similar States having a system of regulation I emphatically deny it and cite the experience of the New England States as examples, all of which have had prohibition at one time or another and all of which have abandoned it with but one exception. There is not much virtue in the term applied, either to an individual or to a system or policy of government. No improvement will be noted in the odor of a jimson weed by calling it a sunflower.

"That which we call a rose by any other name would smell as sweet."

These gentlemen from the rural districts who propose to assume the guardianship over the morals of the people who reside in the great and populous States of this Union are reminded that the great mass of the people of those States were born and have grown up in their own Commonwealths, are more familiar with the people and institutions of their own States than nonresidents possibly can be, and that the morals of the people, so far as the same are affected by what they eat and drink, are not likely to be improved by outside interference.

There is probably invested in property used in the manufacture, production, and sale of spirituous, vinous, and malt liquors, by people residing in the territory covered by this joint resolution, more than one thousand million of dollars. It is proposed by this measure to outlaw this property by prohibiting its use for the only purpose to which it is adapted and to place it in the same category with gambling implements and burglars' tools without notice and without compensation.

Whatever may be our opinions of the business of producing, transporting, importing or exporting, or selling intoxicating liquors, the wholesale confiscation proposed by this measure does present a moral question of much graver magnitude and consequence than is involved in the desire to regulate the appetites by controlling through one enactment the business relations and personal habits of all the people who live under the American flag. [Applause.]

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS].

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I shall not attempt in the short time allotted me to debate the merits of this resolution. I am for it because I believe that whisky, with all of the misery and woes that it wears, should be driven from the haunts of this Nation. I think the time has come now to do that. My purpose in rising, however, is to call the attention of the House to section 3 of this resolution, concerning which I am very apprehensive. I opposed it as a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, and I intend to move to strike it out. The third section of this resolution declares that this amendment shall be inoperative if not acted upon by three-fourths of the legislatures of the States within seven years. Article V of the Constitution says that a constitutional amendment submitted as we propose to submit this shall be operative when acted upon favorably by three-fourths of the legislatures of the States. There is no time limit in the Constitution. The amendment is submitted until enough legislatures have passed upon it to indicate whether or not it will be approved by three-fourths of them. If this constitutional amendment shall be approved by three-fourths of the legislatures of the States in seven years and six months after it has been submitted, it will meet every requirement of the Constitution, because the Constitution says that it shall be operative when three-fourths of the legislatures of the States approve it. The reason for my apprehension is this: I believe this section 3 is unconstitutional. I do not believe it is worth the paper it is written on; but if section 3 should be held by the courts as the section which induced the passage of this resolution, then the resolution itself is void. Section 3 is a joker. It ought to be cut out of this resolution. Never before has there been in any constitutional amendment submitted to the legislatures in the history of this Nation a time limit. For the first time in the history of the Nation you find a time limit that is diametrically opposed to that article of the Constitution which grants authority to make the submission. It ought to be cut out. It is dangerous to leave it in.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEELE].

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I shall confine my remarks to section 3 of this proposed amendment. It is true, as the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] has said, that this is the first time that a limitation of time has been placed on the States for acting upon any proposed constitutional amendment, but the fact that a constitutional power has never been exercised by Congress is no argument whatever against its existence. The question was raised when this resolution was upon its passage in the Senate, and while I admit that there was some conflict of opinion among the best constitutional lawyers in the Senate, the preponderence of opinion, the very large preponderance of opinion, was in favor of the exercise of the right. As was stated upon the floor of the Senate, this resolution would not have been passed by the Senate if it had not been for this limitation placed in the resolution. I propose to show that this is a perfectly proper limitation and one that should be placed in the resolution. Otherwise, when a proposed constitutional amendment goes out to the States it rests there for agitation for all time without any limitation whatever, and, as I understand it, there is one constitutional amendment that was proposed more than 100 years ago that is still out, and if the contention of the gentleman is correct it could still be acted upon by the States, although it has been forgotten for more than a century of time and is not now a living question.

But let us look upon the language of the Constitution and ascertain whether, in accordance with the legislative and judicial practice under that amendment, the contention is correct. This article which permits Congress to submit amendments provides as follows:

The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, or, on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the several States, shall call a convention for proposing amendments, which, in either case, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of this Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States or by conventions in three-fourths thereof, as the one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by the Congress.

Then in Article I, section 8, it is further provided that Congress shall have power to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing power and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States or in any department or officer thereof.

Therefore, so far as the power vested in Congress is concerned, it is a general power, without any limitation, without any prohibition upon the exercise of that power, and it is practically raising the old question which has been in existence from the time of the organization of this Government, the question of strict construction, the question of liberal or rational construction, which was raised in the first Congress under the Constitution, when provision was made for the establishment of the United States Bank in 1791. There was no express power in the Constitution to establish a bank. Nothing is said in the Constitution upon the subject whatever. Provision is made, however, that Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes and regulate interstate commerce, and because of this provision in the Constitution it was held to be one of the implied powers to carry out the express powers which had been conferred upon the Congress, and the Supreme Court subsequently held that it was a proper exercise of power.

Now, take your own experience here as Members of this Congress. The power is given under the Constitution, under the most general language possible, to declare war. There is no specific power conferred as to how war is to be carried on, nor is any power expressly conferred as to what shall happen after the declaration of war is made by Congress. Yet it has been held by the United States Supreme Court, acquiesced in by every Congress, that the mere general power to declare war includes the power to carry it on to a successful issue with all the means at hand by Congress, and one of the first things done by this Congress after the declaration of war was to pass a conscription act. Can anyone point to anything in the Constitution specifically authorizing the passage of a conscription act? I defy any to do so; and yet the power to pass the conscription act is under the general power conferred under the Constitution and has never been questioned by this House. Subsequently you passed a food-control act. Can anyone point to any specific power in the Constitution to control food, to enter every private house in the land and regulate what they shall do in the matter of food? It is simply under the general power to declare war. We then passed an espionage act. Is there any specific power in the Constitution to pass an espionage act? There is none. And so with all the legislation that we have enacted as war measures during this term of Congress, there was no specific warrant in the Constitution to pass, and it was only under the implied power that was given when the express power was given to declare war. And the same way with many other provisions in the Constitution.

We have upon our statute books a penal code. Can anyone point to any language specific in the Constitution that authorizes Congress to pass a penal code or to declare any offense a crime? It does not exist. It is simply part of the implied power conferred upon Congress, and this is under the interpretation of the Constitution the Supreme Court has repeatedly sanctioned. The Constitution used general terms, and whatever is prudent and proper and necessary to carry out those general and express powers are within the powers of Congress. The general power that has been conferred includes in it all that is necessary or proper to make it effective. Here is what Justice Story says upon this subject:

The Constitution unavoidably deals in general language. It did not suit the purposes of the people in framing this great charter of our liberties to provide for minute specifications of its powers or to declare the means by which those powers should be carried into execution. It was foreseen that it would be a perilous and difficult if not an impracticable task. The instrument was not intended to provide merely for the exigencies of a few years, but was to endure for a long lapse of ages, the events of which were locked up in the inscrutable purposes of Providence. It could not be foreseen what new changes and modifications of power might be indispensable to effectuate the general objects of the charter, and restrictions and specification which at the present might seem salutary might in the end prove the overthrow of the system itself. Hence its powers are expressed in general terms, leaving the legislature from time to time to adopt its own means to effectuate legitimate objects and to mold and model the exercise of its powers as its own wisdom and the public interests should require.

Now, when the Constitution further declared that Congress should have the power to pass all necessary and proper legislation for carrying into execution this power, of course it conferred upon Congress the discretion in the first instance of deciding what was necessary and proper. Hence this term "necessary and proper," as conferred in this general power, has been repeatedly passed upon by the Supreme Court, and I will only refer to what is regarded as the classic definition of this power as used by Chief Justice Marshall in McCullough versus Maryland, where he said:

The determination of what are appropriate means—belongs to the government which is to employ them. The government which has a right to do an act and has imposed on it the duty of performing that act must, according to the dictates of reason, be allowed to select the means.

His interpretation of the use of the word "necessary" in this clause was as follows:

The subject is the execution of those great powers on which the welfare of the Nation essentially depends. It must have been the intention of those who were giving these powers to insure, as far as human prudence could insure, their beneficial execution. This can not be done by confining the choice of means to such narrow limits as not to leave it in the power of Congress to adopt any which might be appropriate and which were conducive to the end. This provision is made in a Constitution intended to endure for ages to come and consequently to be adapted to the various crises of human affairs. To have prescribed the means by which government should for all future time execute its powers would have been to change entirely the character of the instrument and give it the properties of a legal code.

So that in the language of the Constitution itself Congress has the discretion to adopt all necessary and proper means of carrying into execution the power of submitting amendments to the States. That power has been exercised in this instance, and a very appropriate power, in my judgment, it has been. Now, just one other thought and I have finished. It is contended here that if this proposed amendment is submitted to the States in the form in which it is, with this limitation of time upon it, that then the States can act, whether it be 7 years, 10 years, or 15 years thereafter without any limitation upon them whatever. Is that a correct interpretation? Congress sends out to the States this proposed amendment. It attaches to it a limitation that they must act upon it in seven years. The State can only act upon the amendment as it is submitted to it by Congress. It is not within the power of the State to change any term of that submission. They must either accept it or reject it in the language sent out to them to act upon. Therefore, suppose that 30 States should act upon it with the limitation in it, ratify with the limitation in it, and then 7 States seven or eight years thereafter should attempt to act upon it, they could only act upon it with the limitation upon it just the same as the other States, and it would be clearly beyond their power to do so.

Now, that Congress can attach conditions of this kind to the action of the States has been expressly decided by the Supreme Court. And I wish to call attention to the facts under which it was submitted to them. In the submission of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution there were three States which ratified the amendment, and subsequently, upon the election of new legislatures, those new legislatures rescinded the previous action of the States and rescinded the ratifying resolution. It was necessary that the votes of those three States should be counted for the amendment or it would not be ratified. Mr. Seward, who was Secretary of State at the time, was doubtful about the matter, and he issued a proclamation reciting the facts and stating that if the States of Ohio, New Jersey, and New York had properly ratified this amendment, then the amendment was ratified, but otherwise not. The leaders in Congress were not satisfied with that statement, and they passed a resolution affirming that the amendment had been properly ratified, and Mr. Seward then issued a second proclamation, and in pursuance of this resolution of Congress he proclaimed the ratification of the amendment. In the reconstruction legislation afterwards enacted it was provided that the States that had been at war with the Federal Government should not be again admitted as member States of the Union unless they ratified this fourteenth amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. STEELE. I would like three minutes more.

Mr. GARD. I yield three minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. STEELE. The States of the South, in pursuance of that, were coerced into the ratification of the fourteenth amendment, and the question of the legality of the action of Congress in attaching that as a condition before these States could be admitted as members of the Union came before the Supreme Court for action. And you will be unable utterly to point to any provision in the Constitution which gave Congress the authority of imposing that as a condition upon the readmission of the States of the Union, and all the States, even though in rebellion, were in fact never out of the Union, so far as the Constitution was concerned. They were simply denied their political representation here because they were at war with the Federal power. When the question came before the Supreme Court as to whether or not that was a valid condition attached by Congress to the action of the State the Supreme Court, in White v. Hart (13 Wall., 643) said:

> The third of these propositions is clearly unsound and requires only a few remarks. Congress authorized the State to form a new constitution, and she elected to proceed within the scope of the authority conferred. The result was submitted to Congress as a voluntary and valid offering, and was so received and so recognized in the subsequent action of that body. The State is estopped to assail it upon such an assumption. Upon the same ground she might deny the validity of the ratification of the constitutional amendments. The action of Congress upon the subject can not be inquired into. The case is clearly one in which the judicial is bound to follow the action of the political department of the Government and is concluded by it.

[Applause.]

Upon any point of view, therefore, the limitation of time for action by the States is a valid exercise of power by Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I shall support this resolution, whether amended or not; but I wish to use the time allotted to me in a discussion of the very interesting question raised by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] and replied to by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEELE].

I think it is of the very greatest importance, because if the argument of the gentleman from Nebraska is correct, it is possible that if section 3 shall be held by the courts to be an inducement to the passage of the joint resolution itself, and that that was beyond the power of Congress to validly enact, this entire matter may become invalid and fall to the ground, even though ratified by three-fourths of the States.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me very clear that in the submission of the constitutional amendment Congress is given the naked power of submitting proposed amendments, and Article V itself takes care completely and effectually of everything beyond that. And if that is so we have no power to attach any condition to the ratification. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEELE] undertakes to support his argument by citing the section of the Constitution that gives Congress the power to enact legislation necessary to put into effect the powers granted by the Constitution. But Congress has no power to enact legislation that is in conflict with the provision of the Constitution itself. And Article V expressly provides that once this proposed amendment has gone from the halls of Congress and rests with the States, when ratified by the States it becomes a part of the Constitution. And that being so, Congress has no power, without violating that article itself, to say that the States must do it within 1 year, 2 years, 3 years, 6 years, or 10 years. I believe that section 3 is absolutely invalid, and if that be true the very serious question presents itself whether, when this amendment shall have been ratified by three-fourths of the States, the court may hold that section 3 was an inducement to the passage of the resolution, and if section 3 is invalid then the entire constitutional amendment may be held invalid.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GALLAGHER].

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Speaker, again the valuable time of this body is taken up and diverted from the consideration of many important legislative matters relating to the war and the general welfare of the country, again we are to interrupt and disturb business throughout the land, and many who are now doing a prosperous and successful business—and I do not mean saloonkeepers, either—will be ruined if the promoters of the pending measure have their way. A number of busy agitators and handsomely paid reformers are constantly at work keeping this prohibition wrangle before Congress and the country.

They are the same forces that upset and obstructed the plans of the administration at the late special session of Congress, and prevented the prompt enactment of a law for the conservation of food and fuel; as a result of needless controversy and delay at that time the poor and unfortunate in many sections of the country are to-day suffering because of the high and unreasonable prices demanded for food and fuel. There is a lobby here in the interest of prohibition, but none here in behalf of those who are suffering from hunger these cold winter days and freezing for want of coal.

If the people of the several States are anxious for prohibition, if they have such a desire as the promoters of this legislation claim to live in dry territory, there is no need of coming here demanding the passage of this joint resolution. The several States now have the power and can regulate by law the manufacture and sale of all intoxicating liquors. Congress has already stopped the manufacture and importation of whisky and has empowered the President to say whether light wines and beers shall be manufactured in the country. In view of all this, is it not a fact that we have all the law that is now necessary to make this country dry whenever it is essential to do so?

But this is not what the professional prohibitionists are after; they would stop the gathering of needed taxes, National, State, and municipal, that are now derived from the sale of liquor, ruin millions of dollars' worth of valuable property without recompense to the owners, destroy real estate values and rentals, make vineyards valueless, cause strikes and unrest among workmen and deprive them of opportunity to labor.

They would throw the entire country into violent and destructive political turmoil; bring about expensive, angry, and riotous election contests everywhere; disturb, hinder, and prolong legislative sessions in the various States; and destroy public interest in a cause that all should be interested in—that of winning this war.

I believe in temperance and favor laws that will regulate the liquor traffic. I also have some respect for the personal liberty and rights of others. I am against unjust and tyrannical laws. Merchants and manufacturers who contribute large sums of money to further this prohibition movement with an idea that they will receive greater efficiency from their employees may find in the end that it is simply money wasted, and if we knew now what it cost the Government to maintain a police force of United States marshals in many of the so-called prohibition States to prevent the manufacture and sale of liquor it might surprise many who favor this unnecessary legislation.

Many here who pretend they are anxious to pass this joint resolution that may change the organic act of the Nation to stop drunkenness and crime will assume a different attitude when the suffrage amendment is before us. We can then tell by the vote cast those who really favor law, order, and good government.

I hate hypocrisy and false pretense; there is more unfairness, deceit, and insincerity mixed up in the prohibition movement than any other I know of. A secret ballot here would show it. I am opposed to the pending resolution for national prohibition and will vote against it. President Wilson has wisely said—> that every self-governing community which constitutes a social unit should have the right to control the matter of the regulation or the withholding of license.

And I feel positive that no people will be happy or contented in a State where the people of other States force upon them laws that they do not favor; and, further, I believe with the fathers of the Republic, that the just powers of the Government are derived from the consent of the governed. [Applause.]

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. RAMSEY].

Mr. RAMSEY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House of Representatives, this important matter now before us is of that character which prompts me to make some expression upon it and to in a way demonstrate to my constituents and to the people of this House the reasons why I shall vote as I will in a short time. The Constitution of the United States is a document which ought not to be disturbed without the most serious thought and the greatest consideration. We all recognize that probably the minds by which it was framed were those of some of the strongest men of our Nation, and I am speaking upon this question principally for the purpose of demonstrating and showing that I believe it ought not to be disturbed now. The Constitution of the United States, as we all know, reserved to itself certain policies of government, and it created practically a new form of government by giving to the States certain rights and powers. It provides as follows:

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States, respectively—

And so forth. My conclusion is this: That until the Constitution of the United States is amended, and particularly that part of it which I have just quoted, this resolution is without right before us. This is a policy. It is not a principle of government. This matter which we are considering now is a police regulation which, under the Constitution, is vested in every State. I should like to know by what authority we have the right to interject as a constitutional amendment a matter which is merely a matter of police regulation.

This is not an amendment to the Constitution of the United States. It is a supplement or an addition to the Constitution. You might as well undertake by reason of logic and by reason of thought to say that we shall pass a constitutional amendment whereby the rite of marriage in each State should be regulated under it, or the right of divorce should be regulated under it, or the right of an insurance company to do business in a State should come under a constitutional provision. My conclusion, as I read it—and I believe it to be true—is that it is not a matter of proper constitutional action.

On the other hand, under this provision of the Constitution each State has successfully, so far as the desires of its inhabitants or voters go, determined the question of prohibition. I am not opposed to the regulation of the liquor traffic, even by prohibition, in the States where they desire to have it, nor in my own State, if the people therein so declare. A local-option bill will undoubtedly be passed by our legislature at its next session, and I am in favor of such legislation.

Under an act recently passed by this Congress, and for which I voted, the power is given to the President of the United States to exercise such privileges as to practically create prohibition throughout the whole country. The manufacture of spirituous liquors has been stopped, and under the regulations proclaimed by the President the percentage of alcohol in beer has been reduced to 2¾ per cent, which makes it practically a nonintoxicating beverage. Mr. Speaker, there has been and is great unrest in this country because of the war. This unrest should not be augmented and made greater. The war must be won, but I want to say that it is not alone the brave, courageous, and patriotic young men of this country who are and will be on the firing line that can or will win it.

There are thousands—yes, hundreds of thousands—of American citizens who are employed in the performance of honorable duties in factories, mills, and plants of various descriptions, making not only munitions of war but every other device and thing that is of advantage to the Government's and our people's interest, who not only desire their beer but who feel as if they are entitled to have it. Must we by our action to-day deprive them of that privilege, or at least put in operation a constitutional amendment which, if adopted, will do so? I think not. It is the boast of our people and the principle which has been instilled in the minds of American youth that we are a Republic of freedom, liberty, and democracy, and to destroy that conclusion by this proposed amendment, which I believe to have no legal standing here, I sincerly believe to be bad legislation.

It was only a few days ago when I sat in this House and heard with feelings of great pleasure and satisfaction encomiums paid to one of our Members. I doubt during the entire existence of Congress has a living man and one of its Members ever so justly received such flattering and just expressions as were accorded to him and his worth. They were based not only on the individual worth of the man—and I refer to the Hon. JOHN J. FITZGERALD, of New York—but because he was possessed of certain attributes, namely, intelligence, judgment, and courage. When he came to a conclusion honestly formed he had the courage of his conviction. Probably no greater, and I am sure no better, legislator is now a Member of this body.

And it is this courage of our convictions that we should have; and in the exercise of my prerogative at this time I am impelled by this alone, believing that my reasoning has brought me to the proper conclusion.

Mr. Speaker, the States that have exercised their rights under the sovereignty of the States as given to them by the Constitution of the United States upon the question of prohibition ought not to be permitted to force legislation for other States contrary to and against their will.

Again, let me say that, in my congressional district there is not a brewery located, to my knowledge, and I have no personal acquaintance, with one exception, as I now recall, with an owner of a brewery, and further, may I say, that I have not been approached by any person connected with a brewery as to how I should or will vote on this proposed amendment.

Mr. Speaker, therefore, in justice to my constituents, in justice to the people of my State, in justice to the people of this great Republic, and in justice to myself, I must conclude, for the reasons I have given, that this proposed constitutional amendment should not be adopted and made a part of the organic law of our country. And, regardless of the consideration of political favor or disfavor, I am constrained in the performance of an honest, fearless, and conscientious duty to vote against the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Connecticut is recognized for one minute.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, it will not require one minute for me to state my position.

In my judgment this is not the time, the place, or the manner in which to bring about either prohibition or woman suffrage. Both should be accomplished, if at all, by means of the ballot at the polls within the several States, and at a time when the country is not in the midst of a great war. [Applause.]

I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I do not dwell upon the fact that the foundation of civil liberty lies in local self-government or upon the fact that the democratic power of the majority, exercised from a distant capital, may be just as tyrannical and arbitrary as a pure empire. This has been proved in Europe. The laws of the neighborhood, known and approved by the neighborhood, can be and will be enforced by the good will of the people; nothing else. One trouble with such a doctrine as National or State-wide prohibition is that it takes away the power to regulate according to the needs of locality, whether by license or by local legislation or by getting rid of saloons; I care not how. Let us have the locality determine what is best for itself.

But the main trouble is that this issue, when introduced, becomes the sole issue, as it has been in some of our States for 30 or 40 years. Our country has too many needs and too wide a variation of social requirements to be covered by the single question of rum or no rum, and in the States where this issue has once prevailed it has been paramount for years, with successive evasions or else attempts to change the constitution. A law not approved by the people is likewise the fountain of fraud and evasion and contempt for the law. I have seen in an Eastern State whisky sold as soda water in the railroad stations. I have seen in Western States whole towns wide open in the face of the State constitution. It becomes a burning issue. That is our trouble now. It will last through this war—this issue.

I have just been to Europe and have seen that the effective way of carrying on war is for the whole people to think about and deal with nothing else and not to be divided on issues of that sort, which will make some of our localities discontented when we want them all to be whole-souled for the war. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TILLMAN].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas is recognized.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Speaker, in this discussion it is neither my purpose nor desire to wantonly insult any man who may be engaged in the liquor business. The expression "Down with the saloon and up with the saloon keeper and the saloon patron" has obtained wide currency and generous approval in prohibition circles. But I shall not search for soft phrases in which to express an opinion of a traffic which is destroying men and women in this Republic alone at the rate of 100,000 a year, a traffic which fills the land with beggars and tramps, a traffic which draws from the pockets of the people of the United States two and one-half billion dollars annually and gives in return sorrow and suffering and tears and poverty.

King Alcohol collects from his vassal more of his substance than is required by any other potentate on earth, and when he has stripped him to his foolish hide he kicks him out of his palace into the street. The princes of earth, the executives of commonwealths, send abroad their taxgatherers once a year to collect from the people a small part of their earnings for government expenses, and they furnish officers to protect the life and preserve the peace and property of the citizen; they provide armies, hospitals, asylums, and pensions; but King John Barleycorn, who bestrides the narrow world like a colossus, haughty and heartless, the mightiest monarch of earth, greater than George the Fifth or William of Germany, greater than Sultan or Mikado, stations his collectors all over the land and gathers tribute from his thirsty subjects every hour in the day and every day in the year. Fair and generous rulers pension their servants, soldiers, and sailors when they become old or disabled, and provide for their widows and orphans if they fall while serving the State. Individuals and corporations do likewise, but you may serve this hard master till your money, character, happiness, and life are gone, and you will find that King John will not even provide a poorhouse to shelter your helpless wife and babies. If a subject flushed with the king's beverages, in lightsome sport or otherwise, kills a fellow man, King John does not draw from his well-filled purse money wherewithal to employ counsel to defend him, but he lets him hang, undefended, so far as he is concerned, when the real criminal is King John's agent, the man who sold the whisky. If a faithful subject, after paying tribute for many and many a weary year, at last yields to delirium tremens and dies a pauper's death, King John does not even give him swift burial in the potter's field. Pitiless King John! And yet men will march under his scarlet banner and give up honor, home, wife, and children that he may reign in guilty splendor. Men will serve this red despot and give him everything they have, even their bodies and their souls, and get not a pleasant look in return. The most arrogant, the least polite, the coldest mannered, the most disdainful citizen, is that haughty plutocrat, the American brewer, usually tainted with Teuton sympathies and damned by a German conscience. The average barkeeper—and it has been my ill fortune to meet him a few times in days long gone by—is as cold as the heart of the dead. One thing that can be said in his favor, however, he is always sober, because, paradoxical as it may seem, saloon keepers want bartenders who do not drink. They will cheerfully sell you their wares, but they have too much sense to drink their own liquors. A cynical old miller of my town once said of the flour made by a rival mill that it was not fit for anything except to sell. In the eyes of the sensible barkeeper, whisky is good for nothing except to sell.

Royal King Alcohol, let us drink his health in pure water. Sweet, beautiful water. "Brewed in the running brook, the rippling fountain, and the laughing rill; brewed in the limpid cascade, as it joyfully leaps down the mountain side; brewed in the mountain top, whose granite peaks glitter like gold, bathed in the morning sun; brewed in the sparkling dewdrop; sweet, beautiful water; brewed in the crested waves of the ocean deep, driven by the storm, breathing its terrible anthem to the god of the seas; brewed in the fleecy foam of the whitened spray, as it hangs like a speck over the distant cataract; brewed in the clouds of heaven. Sweet, beautiful water! As it sings in the rain shower and dances in the hailstorm, as it comes sweeping down in feathery flakes, clothing the earth in a spotless mantle of white, always beautiful. Distilled in the golden tissues that paint the winter sky at the setting of the sun, and the silver tissues that veil the midnight moon. Sweet, health-giving, beautiful water; distilled in the rainbow of promise, whose warp is the raindrop of earth, and whose woof is the sunbeam of heaven; sweet, beautiful water." But the drunkard prefers Budweiser or Anheuser, Old Crow or Moonshine, to this blessed, God-made, health-giving beverage.

And, King John, since the world began history records no instance where an individual was injured by being denied liquor for beverage purposes; and, moreover, your liquors, drunk as beverages, never yet benefited a single human being, either physically, morally, intellectually, or financially, but instead a million bloody deaths lie at your door, and the billion heartaches, headaches, and miseries you have caused would blight and sicken your conscience or your soul if you had either. King John, you are an awfully expensive luxury. Last year you taxed your subjects in this Republic over $2,000,000,000 and gave them in return debauch, disease, death. This vast sum is paid by our 20,000,000 who drink, so that one-fifth of our people drink an average of $70 worth of liquor annually per capita. In 10 years this annual expenditure would buy a comfortable home, and at least one-half of the 20,000,000 who drink are homeless. These drinkers, for the most part, compose the dangerous class. Besides this tribute, exacted by this royal despot, the total abstainers, estimated at four-fifths of our population, are taxed to assist in paying heavy court expenses caused by drink. This is King John's record, and yet he lords it over mankind like a purple-clad Cæsar, and people say that we are too pitiably weak or too cowardly to stab him to death as Cæsar was stabbed. King Alcohol is a tyrant, and when men fight tyrants they serve God. This amendment will pass and we will soon see a dry Nation, and King John's lofty crest will trail in the dust forever.

Among others, I have three good reasons for being against whisky; that is to say, I have three children. I do not fear intoxicants on my own account, because I have been a total abstainer for more than 30 years continuously—practically so, in fact, all my life—but parents live again in their children, and a parent who is normal wants to see his children sober and happy.

I want our boys to keep as far away from liquor as possible. Therefore I do not want the brewery, nor the distillery, nor the saloon. I do not want the blind tiger, nor do I want the jug trade. Make whisky difficult to obtain; outlaw it, and less of it will be used. The farther removed the boys and men are from whisky the safer they are.

An old king lost his charioteer and let it be known that he wanted another. Four men presented themselves as candidates for the place. He said to the first one, "Tell me, sir, how near with safety can you drive my chariot to the edge of that precipice near by the castle?" "Sire," he replied, "I can drive you within 1 foot of the edge of the precipice at full speed and not endanger your life." "What can you do?" said the king to the next applicant. "Why," he said, "I can drive you within a hair's breadth of the edge and carry you safely by with the horses at a gallop." "What can you do?" he said to the third man. "Why, sire," said he, "I can drive your chariot so close to the edge of that dangerous precipice that one-half of the tire will be on solid stone and one-half extending over the precipice, and yet carry you safely by." The king said to the fourth man, "What have you to say for yourself?" "Sire," said the fourth man, "if your majesty directed me to drive you by that precipice, from which if you should happen to fall you would go to certain death, I would drive your chariot just as far away from the edge of that dangerous cliff as the road would permit me to go." "You are the man I want for my charioteer," said the king. And so our young men should keep as far away from liquor as possible, and we should keep the saloon and liquor as far away from the boy as possible.

I do not want a saloon or blind tiger next to my home, and I am not going to have one there. I have as much respect for law as any man, but I think I have the right, under the common law and under statute law, to abate an indisputable nuisance, and if nothing else will suffice it can be abated by the open, notorious, and orderly use of reasonable community, physical force. Let us first protect our own homes, and then our neighbors' homes, and then drive the liquor nuisance from hamlet, city, Commonwealth, and Nation. We have now driven it out of so many States that the time has come when it is meet and proper to make a final drive and banish it from the Nation. This has been no holiday task. Of all the trusts in this trust-ridden land, the most sinister, the most aggressive, the best organized, is the Liquor Trust. We fight the Baking-Powder Trust, while the souls of countless thousands, ruined by rum, are baking in purgatory. We fight the Cracker Trust and forget the millions of alcohol victims now crackling in the fires of eternal torment. We denounce Standard Oil and John D. Rockefeller, and are selfishly indifferent to the pernicious activity of Sir John Barleycorn and Col. Gambrinus as they oil the way of a million victims in their swift, descending flight toward hell.

Liquor enjoys the countenance and friendship of able defenders and advocates. You go forth to fight rum and you will meet a Prince Rupert of the breweries at every crossroads, armed from head to heel and ready to fight you to the death; and he often fights an unclean fight and an unfair fight. If you are timid or thin skinned, you are in danger of being made uncomfortable, if you fight rum. But get on one side or the other of the question; in other words, "under which flag will you fight Benzonian," under the milk-white flag of prohibition or under the blood-red banner of booze?

You need not leave your party to fight for prohibition. Most men have a sentimental love for the party of their fathers and their own. Third parties have played but a farcical part on the American political stage. There is one notable exception to this rule. The Progressive Party really served a useful purpose while it strutted its uneasy but wholesome hour upon the stage. And it will not be forgotten. This is the greatest question before the American people to-day, but it is not the only question, and while we should labor earnestly and aggressively to properly settle this question, we should desire to take a hand in settling other great issues at the same time. A party can not be builded upon a single idea in a Government as complex as ours. Besides this is no more a party or a political question than "Thou shalt not steal" is a political question. It is a question of economics, a question of business, a question of morals. In the South, the dominant party there has given prohibition to Oklahoma, to Georgia, to Alabama, to Mississippi, to Tennessee, to Arkansas, and other Southern States. We now have a practically dry Dixie. It is distressingly dry to just a few of our nonmilitary colonels. These colonels are golden-hearted old fellows, but occasionally you will find one who is not pleased with prohibition. To cite an instance:

Colonel Dryus Dustin Ashes, fond of rickeys, straights, and smashes, with a blinking of eyelashes, pushed the door to the buffet.
He was not an early riser, but on rising he felt wiser for a bit of appetizer just to cheer him on his way.

To the bar he strode not knowing how reform waves had been growing, never ebbing, always flowing, and declared himself for rye.
Whereat Bill, the big barkeeper, felt his sympathies grow deeper, and he rubbed his tearful peeper, which is common slang for eye.

Bill was used to thirsts diurnal, thirsts autumnal, and thirsts vernal, and he knew the fretful colonel of his bitters was in need;
But alas, the new laws drastic were not pliable or plastic, even if for reasons gastric eye was half the colonel's feed.

So with courtesy and tritely he apologized politely, smiling pleasantly and brightly, and said he had no grudge,
But as pity must not swerve him, or cupidity unnerve him, quite the strongest he could serve him would be buttermilk or fudge.

Then the colonel said: "Demnition, demn this deuced prohibition!
Who plunged us in this condition?" And the faithful Bill replied:
"'Tis a law they've been enacting by the States in concert acting, and the Union is exacting, so the fount of joy is dried."

And the colonel, fierce umbrageous, said "By jove, sir, 'tis outrageous that such blue laws should engage us and make gallant hearts to bleed.
"Of the Union I'm a lover, but by all the skies above her, to perdition they may shove her, for by jove, sir, I'll secede."

The South has had her share of problems. She sustained herself with credit under the blight of slavery, during the ravages of a great war, and during the tragedy of reconstruction. The South is to-day the most intensely American portion of the Republic. The South believes in old-time American religion and is dominated by it. No modernism, no higher criticism. Dixie is for prohibition. As this House knows, we depend largely on negro labor and all the negroes take Saturday for "town day," and the saloons on that day strip him of his week's earnings, leaving him in such a condition that he does not feel like work until Tuesday or Wednesday of the coming week. They spend their money for drink, which should go to buy tools or provisions and for the payment of their debts. The white South is against the saloon, because it is a bad thing for the white South, and also because it decreases the negro's economic efficiency and increases the menace of his presence. Discussing for a moment the cause of this steady progress of the prohibition march through the South, many things have contributed to bring it about, the moral sentiment of the people, economic reasons, the conviction that it is right, and added to this the compelling argument that drink influences the negro and prepares him to commit the crime which the South regards as the blackest of all crimes. This Government, ever sentimental in dealing with the Indian, properly makes it a crime to sell him whisky, but the negro, who is rapidly ruined by rum, can still in some sections purchase it without restraint and drink it without interference. The less liquor the negro drinks the fewer unspeakable crimes he will commit and the fewer lynchings there will be. I think an undefiled womanhood is more worthy of our concern; indeed, I value a million times more the purity and happiness of even one American woman than I do the prosperity of all the breweries, distilleries, saloons, and blind tigers on the wide earth.

A negro preacher once announced the startling doctrine that "there is a great deal of human nature in man" and declaim as we may against the sudden and terrible executions of Judge Lynch, deplore it as we may—and we do deplore and condemn mob law and mob murder—yet many a red-blooded Anglo-Saxon is tolerant of that wild justice which decrees the immediate death of the man who outrages the home. Home! That is the dearest word in the language, save the word "mother," and both must be protected. Our civilization is builded on the home, and the saloon is the home's worst enemy. You assail the home and the babe with his dimpled fist and toothless gums will fight you back. You attack the home and the mother with bare hands will fight you as fiercely as a tigress fights for her young. You assail the homes of the country and the decent manhood of the land will come to the rescue, and the blood of the brave will be freely shed in their defense. I prefer to stand for the home rather than stand for distillery or saloon. I prefer to take my place among the defenders of the home rather than among the apologists of the rum makers and rum sellers.

Oh, but the saloon helps business. Yes; it does help some kinds of business, to be perfectly fair. I rode on a train the other day with a man whose business is helped by liquor. He was in the tombstone business. The saloon is the best friend the undertaker has. It furnishes business for the criminal courts. But it greatly injures other business. A short time ago, in a saloon town, I saw a finished product of the saloon. He was drunk and hungry and had no money with which to buy breakfast. The hotels and restaurants suffered by reason of his poverty. Through his crushed hat a lock of his uncombed hair protruded. The hat business was suffering because of the saloons. His coat was out at the elbows, and the clothing stores were denied a customer by reason of the whisky traffic. His toes peeped through his shoes. Therefore the shoe business was not being helped by the saloons. Oh, the saloons help business.

"You hurt business by prohibition agitation," say the liquor men.

Said the hawk to the farmer, who winged him as he swooped down on a brood of chickens, "Don't you see you are hurting business by shooting around here with that old gun?"

"Don't you see you are hurting business?" said the red fox to the hound when he chased him away from a flock of geese.

"You are simply ruining business," the gray wolf said when a pack of offensive and noisy shepherd dogs camped on his trail so persistently that he could not get within striking distance of a bunch of sheep.

The saloon is everywhere cordially disliked. Women will not visit one. More than 50 fraternal orders exclude liquor sellers from membership. Most of the saloons, a large part of the breweries, and many distilleries are owned by men with foreign names. Read a list of license payers, and you will find such names as Sandefur, Steinberg, Schaunberg, Diffenderfer, and Hirschbaum. So I am not attacking an American institution. I am attacking mainly a foreign enterprise.

Three men were once seated at a table in a café. They were discussing the future of their boys. One said, "I am a lawyer, and I want my boy to practice law. He can have my library and the benefit of my reputation and clientage." The other man said, "I am a physician, and I now have my son in a medical college. When he finishes I shall form a partnership with him and thus start him on his career." The third man said, "Gentlemen, you are right; but I do not want my boy to follow my business or enter into partnership with me. I am the proprietor of a saloon."

It is a business that is hated by the very men who engage in it. The only reason men engage in it is because the profits are large. And I have often thought how unfair and unfortunate it is that the farmer who sweats in the sun to raise a bushel of wheat, something that is absolutely necessary for men to have, can get in normal times only a dollar for the bushel of wheat, a very small profit, but a distiller can take that bushel of wheat and by a simple process and with small outlay of money or energy convert it into 3 gallons of poison which is by no means a necessity, but which will make the cars seem to run both ways at the same time, and this poison which makes the cars perform these stunts sells readily for 15 cents a drink. A bushel of corn ordinarily sells for 75 cents; convert it into liquor that will make a man whip his wife and it will bring a dollar a quart. The law should intervene to right this gross injustice by prohibiting the manufacture and sale of such beverages.

Liquor is responsible for another queer discrimination. A man and a dog will go into a saloon together perfectly sober, and in 20 minutes they will come out. The man will be drunk; he will stagger and fall in the gutter and lie there like a hog, while the dog will walk away like a gentleman. I object to an institution that works such a difference in 20 minutes between a man and a dog.

But they say you can not make a man sober by law. Not entirely, but law works wonders and makes men do many things they do not want to do. Law is a great civilizer and a great persuader. It is interesting to trace law to its birth. I imagine it began in this way: A giant in the presence of his fellows struck a weakling to the earth. Out of the giant's presence the friends of the weakling conferred together and agreed to combine to protect each other from the assaults of the giant. So they notified the giant that in future they would jointly punish him if he injured without cause any of their number. The many would be more than a match for the giant. One of their number unaided was defenseless. I imagine the first crude larceny law was enacted in like fashion. A strong and vicious character by superior strength took from one of our rude ancestors his horse or his wolf-skin coat and the friends of the loser reasoned like this: Unless we combine and punish this man and let others know that we will punish such offenses none of us are safe in our property. From these crude beginnings a splendid system of law has been evolved, protecting the citizen in his person and his property. Legal suasion is stronger with the vicious than moral suasion. Law and order rule the universe and people should be made to respect the law and usually they do respect it. Lincoln said: "Let reverence for the law be taught in the schools and colleges, be published from pulpits and proclaimed in legislative houses, and enforced in the courts of justice. In short, let it become the political religion of the nation." The law should prohibit wrong and uphold the right. Law, of course, will not enforce itself. You must have officers behind the law. You may go to a hardware store and purchase a wood saw, but that saw, no matter how bright and sharp it may be, will not cut your wood by itself. It is necessary to have a man behind it. If you have no law against whisky, it will certainly be sold, but if you have a law against it you will in time get officers who will enforce it.

The Ten Commandments are often violated, and yet God never did a greater kindness for humanity than when he gave us these commandments and ordered their observance. Who would wipe these blessed laws from the record, although they are broken by thousands every hour in the day? Who wants to go back to savagery? Laws prohibiting murder, arson, burglary, larceny, pistol carrying, breach of the peace, and assault and battery will not enforce themselves and are violated every day, and yet shall we turn back the dial of progress 4,000 years and repeal the laws declaring these things to be offenses simply because these statutes do not altogether prevent the commission of crime?

They say prohibition does not prohibit. It does not annihilate, but it does withhold legal sanction from a crime-producing traffic; it does seek to uphold right and to discourage wrong; it is a bold step forward toward an ideal civilization, and not a cowardly standstill or a still more cowardly retreat. God give us men who go forward, men who do things, men who act, men who are willing to blaze out a pathway to higher and better things! Who says prohibition is a failure? The men who do not want it, the men who contribute large sums of money to defeat it, the men who violate the law under high license or no license, the wine merchant, the distiller, and the beer baron. These disinterested witnesses loudly proclaim the failure of the law. Who says prohibition does prohibit to a successful degree? The people who want it, the people who have tried it, who have lived under it and watched its operation, compared it with high license, and vote for it year after year because it reduces drunkenness and crime. No one need expect a perfect system of law enforcement. Where there is prohibition whisky is shipped in in nail kegs, in coffins, in disguised packages, under false bills of lading, but it is under cover, unlabeled, and out of sight. It is outlawed, and hence less dangerous. The saloon is worse than the tiger or the bootlegger. It is bold, brazen, boastful, stamped with the tainted O. K. of Federal, State, and municipal government. The tiger is apologetic, blind, a self-confessed public nuisance, and hence less harmful. An unlicensed grog shop compared to a licensed saloon is like a tied-up blind puppy compared to an unchained mad bulldog.

The solution of the liquor problem is attempted in three ways—local option, license, and prohibition. Local option is an attractive system to many. It sounds well. It is catchy. It allows a majority to say whether or not liquors shall be sold; but here is the distinction: Local option applied to material questions is all right, but applied to moral questions is all wrong. No county has a right to vote to do wrong, no brutal majority has the right to vote away the health, the peace, or the morals of the people. High license is going into partnership with wrong and crime, and accepting a bribe to allow men to poison their fellow men.

License is a timid surrender to the wrong. Prohibition is a bold challenge to fight the wrong. License is a cowardly yielding to expediency. Prohibition is a brave repudiation of outlawry. If public sentiment indorses a glaring and outrageous evil, then public sentiment should not prevail. If a thousand burglars form a majority in a ward or county and vote to legalize burglary, burglary should still be a felony and punishable as such. A law that sanctions wrong is a legislative crime. Duelling and smuggling and piracy were once popular, but they were not right. The law and enlightened conscience have made them disreputable.

In Maine prohibition has reduced the ratio of drinking. Kansas has had prohibition a long time and shows no disposition to go back to license. Years ago a legislative act made it unlawful to sell liquor in my town. It has not been entirely free of liquor, but no one would think of going back to saloons. Prohibition does prohibit. I can quote you by the hour the unbought opinions of ministers, business men, physicians, Congressmen, governors, Senators in support of this statement. The claims of the liquor men that more whisky is sold under prohibition is discounted by their frantic efforts to have license voted.

Now, let me call some distinguished witnesses in support of prohibition, witnesses whose characters are unimpeachable and whose means and opportunities for knowing the facts to which they testify are exceptionally good. Most of them have passed away, and yet they are like "those dead but sceptered sovereigns who still rule our spirits from their urns."

Senator Frye, of Maine: "Prohibition law a wonderful success."
Senator Hale: "Maine people believe in prohibition because every day they witness its good effect."
Senator Ingalls, of Kansas: "Drinking of intoxicants enormously decreased under prohibition."
Senator Plumb, of Kansas: "Great diminution in consumption of liquor under prohibition."
Gov. Martin: "Nine-tenths less of drunkenness than under license."

In Maine 49 per cent of heads of families own their own homes—nearly twice as many as in any other State or country. She has larger per capita interest-bearing accounts in savings banks than any other country in the world. She has had more than half a century of prohibition.

I quote from reports from counties in Kansas, in answer to the question, "Does prohibition prohibit to a successful degree?"

"Yes; 90 out of 97 counties show decrease in crime."
Barton County: "Yes; jails empty, crime largely reduced."
Bourbon: "Yes."
Chase: "Pauperism and crime reduced 50 per cent."
Cloud: "Yes; expenses of criminal court much less than under license.
Dickinson: "Loss of revenue not more than $3,000, saving to families, $50,000."
Pawnee: "Yes; taxation and crime decreased, business benefited."

Oh, yes; prohibition almost ruined poor Kansas. Just recently a well-edited journal told the country how prohibition killed Kansas:

The grape industry is not the only thing ruined by prohibition in Kansas. In fact, prohibition has killed about every industry in Kansas, excepting the raising of wheat and corn, alfalfa, and fruit, and live stock, and potatoes, and pease, and cabbage, and garden sass, and chickens, and ducks, and geese, and horses, and mules, and blooded cattle. It busted up quite all of our flourishing saloons and beer gardens and paralyzed many of our prominent gamblers. It absolutely killed the bartenders' union. Where once the thriving saloon sent the clamorous odor of its prosperity out upon the sidewalks and clear across the street we find nothing but shoe stores, dry goods stores, meat markets, clothing stores, grocery stores, and other sordid activities of an unhappy people. Where once you saw the long strides of men on Saturday night going joyfully into the rooms where the doors were locked securely, where there was sawdust on the floor and a merry crowd at the mahogany bar treating all around, and a man could get his salary check cashed and spend it all right on his boon companions and go enthusiastically home and break up furniture and give his wife a black eye, instead of all these manifestations of a prosperous and thirsty citizenship, as in our saloon days, we see men go quietly into butcher shops and grocery stores and then go home lugging great bundles of supplies for their wives and children—beefsteak for supper, Sunday dinner, etc. Ah, what a sad result of the banishment of saloons! Prohibition has left little of Kansas except her fields, and factories, and schools, and stores, and pens of fat cattle, and her sober and happy and prosperous people.

IOWA.

A railroad officer in Iowa testified with reference to prohibition there:

One barrel of whisky under prohibition, when there was a carload under license. One keg of beer now, when there was a trainload before.

On November 27, 1887, Henry W. Grady, the most eloquent southerner for a generation, made a statement about prohibition in Atlanta, and his splendid words ring like a trumpet. He said:

When everything else I have said or done is forgotten I want the words I have spoken for prohibition in Atlanta to be remembered. I am firm in the conviction that Atlanta has prospered under her two years of prohibition as she has never prospered before, and the experiment of prohibition in a large city succeeded in Atlanta as no experiment under like obstructions ever succeeded before.

But the revenue. Many people can not be influenced by any argument other than the dollar argument. Our lust for gold should not outweigh our love for our children, but to many men and to some women the clink of gold and the rattle of silver are both music and poetry. Prohibition greatly reduces taxes by lessening court expenses; but admit the loss of revenue, I for one am willing to pay something for the protection of our boys. If you want the saloon for its revenue you should be willing for your boy to patronize it, because the saloon can not run without boys any more than a gristmill can run without corn or wheat. If you want the saloons' revenue are you willing to contribute your boy to keep the saloon running? And how little you get for that boy! The average town will get about 30 cents per capita from saloon licenses. Sell for 30 cents your self-respect, your boy's chances of success, your girl's prospects for happiness! Men who do that feel like 30 cents and look like 30 cents. A month-old Jersey calf will sell for more than a whole room full of fellows who assess themselves at 30 cents a piece. The man who grows a bushel of wheat or a bale of cotton adds that much to the world's wealth. He is a producer. The saloons are not producers. They pay money, it is true, for license, then they collect it back and millions more from those who are least able to pay it. Say a laborer drinks three beers a day. At the end of a year that will buy a long list of groceries, flour, beef, vegetables, coffee, and other necessities. Say the mechanic spends 20 cents a day for whisky, a very modest sum, and yet that is $70 a year, and more than enough in 10 years to buy a modest cottage. Who pays the liquor tax? Do you see that faded, wrinkled, poorly clad woman at the washtub? She is paying the liquor tax. Do you see that barefooted newsboy with his hair peeping out through a hole in his cap? He is paying the liquor tax. Do you see that pale-faced girl with her little tin dinner bucket going to the factory? She is paying the liquor tax. Oh, the cry of the children and the wail of the women condemned to walk the treadmill for King Alcohol! Their cries should smite our hearts when we grow weary and are inclined to rest from liquor fighting. Oh, what a long list of sins many of us will have to answer for for our neglect and ill treatment of the mother of our children. Let us quit it, and by leaving off liquor and by helping to destroy it we will paint on the white cheek of many a suffering child the red roses of health, and the ringing laughter of childhood will take the place of groans of sorrow. We will lift from the backs of prematurely aged women grievous burdens and feed their starved hearts with joy and love and tenderness. Revenue! No matter how badly the Government of Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln, McKinley, and Wilson needs money, it should not permit any individual or corporation to capitalize the sins and appetites of our people. Revenue! Judas took the accursed silver and threw it at the feet of the high priests, and even they would not put it into the treasury because it was tainted with blood and bribery. Revenue! It is a great consolation to a hungry homeless wife to know that her husband died by drinking a high-license whisky. The majority of women are against whisky, and I have great respect for the judgment of good women. Womankind has a long indictment against King Alcohol. He has torn her husband from her side and hurled him into hell. He has snatched her father from her and hurried him to a drunkard's grave. He has stolen her first born from her arms and landed him in the penitentiary for crimes committed while under the influence of drink.

I congratulate the Christian ministry and Christian laymen for the fight they have made on this giant evil. The saloon would destroy the church if it could, and the church can destroy the saloon if it will. I love and respect a church militant. Nothing of lasting good has ever been obtained without a fight. The world's great men and women have been fighters. Peter the Hermit in the eleventh century tramped over Europe preaching the crusades. "Deus vult!" was the rallying cry of the crusaders. This was a religious crusade solely. No spoils were to be gained. Pope Urban II at Clermont, in one of the greatest speeches ever made, told the crusaders that they would march to Jerusalem and take it from the ungodly, but that they must not expect earthly reward. He told them that they must turn their backs on the home they loved; they must cross wide and stormy seas; they must walk with bleeding feet over the burning desert; they must face with dauntless breast the sword of the infidel; they must do all this without hope of reward other than a consciousness of a high duty loyally done. In passing, it is a happy Christmas consolation to know that Jerusalem and the Saviour's tomb has just fallen as a war prize to the Christian soldiers of England. In this crusade we are fighting for home and family, and we shall receive both spiritual and material reward. Martin Luther nailed to the church door at Wittenburg a bold challenge that is still echoing around the world. The men who have done things for God or humanity have fought, sword in hand, for the right as they saw it. Even the Prince of Peace Himself overturned the tables of the money changers and scourged them from His Father's temple. He died a bloody death, and most of His disciples died martyrs in the cause they loved. One hundred thousand twentieth century priests as consecrated as Peter the Hermit and 100,000 Martin Luthers are now waging a crusade in a nobler cause than those waged by the medieval friar and the German monk. But these minister leaders must have followers, and all men and women who love their country should fall in and fight under the snowy banner of national prohibition.

They say we can not stop the sale of whisky. Why, we have the blood of the Vikings in our veins. Must we tremble and whine at the feet of the beer barons and let them whip us like curs? We can not enforce our laws? Why, man, if you will not help do that, go home and put on your wife's dress and wash the dishes and rock the baby and let her take an ax and go out and smash the tigers. Can not drive out blind tigers? Why, a few honest, courageous officers and a half dozen determined men can search the joints every day if necessary and pour the life blood of the tiger into the street. It will do less harm there than anywhere else in the world. Can not enforce our laws? What do you say to that, descendants of the English Puritans? What do you say, children of the French Huguenots? What do you say, men with Cavalier blood in your veins? We are not cowards. Must we, in a slave's whisper, say to King Alcohol: "Sir, your hand is always raised against our laws; you sell on Sunday; you sell to minors; you sell to drunkards; you are the foe of the church, of business, and of the home; you are a menace to the manhood and womanhood, the peace, and virtue of the country, but we are afraid of you. We haven't got the courage to take you by the throat and hurl you from your throne?" In the South and West live the descendants of the pioneers who won this fair land from savage beasts and savage men. No braver, no more determined people ever lived. Here live the best types of American manhood and womanhood, and we can and we will protect and defend the land of our birth from any lawless power that seeks to rule and ruin us.

This amendment will soon pass and liquor will be driven from our shores like pirates were driven from the high seas. Twenty years before slavery was destroyed but few believed it would ever be done. Liquor will go like slavery, and it is a thousand times the greater curse. The people are now in arms against it. But few States have saloons without restrictions. The people will fight liquor fairly, but they will with the ballot and with the law destroy the traffic in the end. A Texas judge, just after the Civil War, was engaged in the trial of a horse thief, and in the opinion of the Texas people then horses were more valuable than horse thieves, and they always hung the thief. The judge before proceeding with the case said to the defendant, "Now, sir, I am going to give you a fair and impartial trial; but I am going to hang you just the same." Such should be the attitude of the people toward King John Barleycorn, and such will be his fate.

Oh, the miseries, the tears, the crimes, the deaths chargeable to this prince of destroyers. King John lays his heavy hand on the smallest and the greatest of earth, and they die his victims. The great son of Phillip conquered every foe save wine and death, and died like a dog. Lord Byron's brilliant mind and handsome face were debauched and destroyed by drink. The great Burns drank heavily, and going home one night from a drunken orgy he sank in a stupor by the roadside and thereby contracted an illness which soon stole the color from his splendid face and the glitter from his fine eyes, and long before his time this gifted son of Scottish song struck his colors to the pitiless foe that always conquers.

Who are for whisky? Those who make fortunes out of it.

Who are against it? The mothers of the land, because it destroys their loved ones. The ministers, because liquor undoes what they do. The officers of the law, because alcohol is the unapproachable chief of all causes of crime. The doctors advise against it because there is no more potent source of disease. The judges are against it because of its appalling record of misery, pauperism, and crime. Statesmen are against it because it is a menace to stable government. Educators are against it because it is a grim threat to every child in the land. Oh, I can call a cloud of witnesses to condemn it.

Mrs. Lititia Youmans says:

We have been selling our boys to pay the revenue. It is a crime.

Dr. James Miller says:

Alcohol is a poison. It kills in large doses and half kills in smaller ones. It produces delirium, insanity. It poisons the blood and wastes the man.

Blind old Homer, 900 years before Christ, said:

Far from me be the gift of Bacchus, pernicious inflaming wine that weakens both body and mind.

Bishop Foss said:

As a Christian minister I oppose drink because it opposes me. The work I do it undoes. It is an obstacle to the spread of the gospel and whose complete success would drive the gospel from the earth.

Judge Allison says:

We can trace four-fifths of the crimes committed to the influence of rum.

Years ago Lord Chesterfield said:

Luxury, my lords, is to be taxed, but vice prohibited. Let the difficulty in the law be what it will, would you levy a tax on a breach of the Ten Commandments? Governments should not for revenue mortgage the morals and health of the people.

On the 10th day of November, 1890, the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Cowley, chief of police, against Christiansen, said, among other things:

The statistics of every State show a greater amount of crime and misery attributable to the use of ardent spirits obtained at these retail liquor saloons than to any other source. There is no inherent right to sell intoxicating liquor by retail. It is not a privilege of a citizen of the United States or a citizen of a State. As it is a business attended with danger to the community it may be, as already said, entirely prohibited.

This great court has recently upheld prohibition legislation.

They say that when saloons are legislated out blind tigers will follow. Yes; for a time, perhaps for a long time. Maine has had tigers for more than half a century, and decidedly prefers them to the saloon, but gradually she has been ridding herself of the worst of them. Of course blind tigers will follow saloons, but one saloon is worse than many blind tigers. If we wait 10 years and then abolish the saloon, they will then be followed by the tigers, so that the quicker we begin the fight against the licensed evil the quicker we shall get rid of the unlicensed evil. The sooner we get to the tigers the sooner we shall kill them. The longer we defer the coming of the tigers the longer we shall have liquor.

We must not give up the fight. The god of battles is with us. The great spirits of Gough, Neal Dow, Frances Willard, and a thousand other brave men and women who fought wrong and rum before we were born are looking down on us to-day and are bidding us Godspeed. Outlaw this giant outlaw that has ever had his hand raised against our law and against our best interests. Give us a sober America and we shall have a free and prosperous America. Men who drink, have you not served his majesty, King John, long enough? Are you not tired seeing the brewer's wife and daughter sweep by you in silks, furs, and diamonds, paying no more attention to you than if you were a slave, while your own unhappy wife lives in a rented home and your daughter is clerking in a department store when she should be in school? What money bought those silks, furs, and diamonds? The money you spent for beer. Men, have you not been building palaces for the distillers and brewers long enough? Quit drinking and build a cottage for your own family.

Whatever is wrong, per se, can not be made right by honied excuse, by golden bribes, or by specious promise of improvement. The Model License League, alarmed over the fight now being waged against liquor, is advocating respectable saloons, improved groggeries. When serpents, with their fangs undrawn and their poison sacks undisturbed, get to be harmless and attractive pets, then I will believe that the saloon can be purified and made useful.

We must have nation-wide prohibition. We must pass this amendment. We want the strong arm of the Government on the side of the people in this fight. Then we shall have potent protection.

After all, the only sane course is to oppose with the utmost vigor wrong wherever you find it. It is the only consistent course. This liquor evil should ask no quarter. It degrades all it touches from the time it leaves the still till it lands its victim in jail, in the poorhouse, or in the grave. It makes the tender-hearted man cruel as a murderer. It converts a man of energy into an idler. It smothers the laugh on the lips of the child. It fills the home with hunger and silence. It changes the wife's love into despair and her pride into shame. Do not tell me that we shall in any way compromise with the evil that has wrought such misery in the world. What excuse is there for its existence?

There is an old legend that once upon a time an angel visited this earth, and he came to a sawmill and said, "What are you?" "I am a sawmill," was the answer. "What do you make?" "I make lumber." "What is your raw material?" said the angel. "Logs." "Is your finished product, lumber, worth more than your raw materials, logs?" "Yes," said the sawmill. "For what is lumber used?" "It is used to build houses for the people and for many useful purposes." "Very well," said the angel, "you serve a useful purpose. Turn on the steam and let me hear the music of the saw and the hum of the machinery." He next went to a gristmill, and he said, "What are you?" "I am a gristmill," was the answer. "What do you make?" "I make meal and flour." "What is your raw material?" "Corn and wheat." "Is your finished product worth more than your raw material?" "Yes." "Very well," said the angel, "you are a public necessity. You contribute to the comfort and convenience of mankind. You deserve to live forever. Turn on the steam and let me hear the melody of your busy wheels." He next came to a distillery, and said, "What are you?" "I am a distillery," was the answer. "What do you make? Now," said the angel, "tell me the truth, because from your appearance and from the crowd around you, you do not look very truthful. Tell me what you make." "I make drunkards," said the distillery. "What is your raw material?" said the angel; "now, tell me the truth." The distillery said, "My raw material is the American boy." "Then," said the angel, "I know that your finished product, the drunkard, is worth less than your raw material, the American boy, with his happy face and his heart free from care. You have no excuse for existing. You ought to be banished from the face of the earth."

The old negro mammy who nursed me used to tell me that "white folks and niggers must each eat a peck of dirt," and I think I got my share. I know two young men who were reared 3 miles south of my home town who swallowed 900 acres of the best black river-bottom dirt I ever saw. They got more than their share.

Strong drink is a warrior whom no victory can satisfy, no ruin satiate. It pauses at no Rubicon to consider, pitches no tents at night, goes into no quarters for winter. It conquers amid the burning plains of the South, where the phalanx of Alexander halted in mutiny. It conquers amid the snowdrifts of the North, where the grand army of Napoleon found its winding sheet. Its monuments are in every burial ground. Its badges of triumps are the weeds which mourners wear. Its song of victory is the wail that is heard in Ramah, "Rachel crying for her children and weeping because they are not."

The sword is mighty and its bloody traces reach across time, from Nineveh to Gravelotte, from Marathon to Gettysburg. Yet mightier is its brother, the wine cup. I say "brother" and history says "brother." Castor and Pollux never fought together in more fraternal harmony. David and Jonathan never joined in more generous rivalry. Hand in hand they have come down the centuries, and upon every scene of carnage, like vulture and shadow they have met and feasted.

Yea; a pair of giants, but the greater is the wine cup. The sword has a scabbard, and is sheathed; has a conscience, and becomes glutted with havoc; has pity, and gives quarter to the vanquished. The wine cup has no scabbard and no conscience; its appetite is a cancer which grows as you feed it; to pity it is deaf; to suffering it is blind.

The sword is the lieutenant of Death, but the wine cup is his captain, and if ever they come home to him from the wars bringing their trophies, boasting of their achievements, I can imagine that Death, their master, will meet them with garlands and with song, as the maidens of Judea met Saul and David. But as he numbers the victories of each his pæan will be. "The sword is my Saul, who has slain his thousands; but the wine cup is my David, who has slain his tens of thousands."

This is a great contest. In a short time we shall be voting. The bugles will soon sound the charge. Swing into line, Members, and vote for home, sister, and mother. When the Georgia prohibition bill passed one of the younger members telegraphed home these words: "Mother, you won."

My people were Scotch-Irish, and I have always loved the heather-clad hills of Scotland. In childhood I never tired of reading tales of Bruce and Wallace and the kilted highlanders, the McDonalds, the Campbells and the Camerons, the Murrays and the Lindseys. It was the custom there in the wild days of border warfare to summon the clans to battle by sending a fleet-footed messenger through the highlands with a burning cross, and as the cross was carried by each clansman's door he was expected to hurry at once to the meeting place, and no loyal highlander ignored the summons. Scott's heroic verse vividly describes this scene:

> When flits the cross from man to man,
> Vich Alpin's summons to the clan,
> Burst be the ear that fails to heed,
> Palsied the foot that shuns to speed.

Let us pass this amendment and go forth to the States to secure its legislative ratification. Carry then the burning cross of this crusade to every home in our great Republic and invite every man and woman to rally to the support of the ratification of this amendment, and "burst be the ear that fails to heed, palsied the foot that shuns to speed."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] is recognized.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California is recognized for seven minutes.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, immediately after the Civil War Congress for days wrestled with the adoption of the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution. They were ultimately sent to the States for ratification. They were finally written into the fundamental law of this country. They are to-day a dead letter. Nobody recognizes them as law. No effort is made to enforce them. And you now propose again to write upon the statute books of the Nation a provision that will become a dead letter. You are simply creating a contempt for law. We have prohibition laws in many of the States of the Union. Are those laws enforced? You know they are not enforced. You know that there is drunkenness even in Maine, which was the first of the prohibition States, and it will continue so, because man will get liquor by hook or by crook if he wants it.

There are more people who die every year from overeating than who die from overdrinking. The doctors will tell you that. There are 7,000 people drowned every year in the United States. Do you want to stop people from going in swimming because you have a large number of deaths from drowning every year? By analogy you ought to be willing to pass prohibitory laws against swimming. Oh, those who favor this legislation tell you that liquor is the cause of the downfall of many men. I recognize that fact. The abuse of liquor, not its use, does cause the downfall of many men. But there are thousands of women in this country each of whom will tell you that her downfall was caused by some man. Do you want to kill off all the men on that account? [Laughter.] There are thousands of men in this country each of whom will tell you that his downfall was brought about by some woman. Do you want to kill off all the women on that account? [Cries of "No!" "No!"] By a parity of reasoning you ought to be willing to kill off the human race because, forsooth, some men and some women can not withstand the temptations that beset them. This legislation will result, in my opinion, in placing thousands of private stills in the very homes of the land. Distillation is the easiest of all processes. Men are going to get liquor if they want it.

The Speaker of this House [Mr. CLARK of Missouri] told me of a case of a man in the Missouri Penitentiary—a prisoner who had a fondness for alcohol. He got hold of a gun barrel and made a worm out of it. He took the corn meal that was given him for food and made a mash out of it, and in his cell in the prison he distilled whisky. [Laughter.] You can not prevent men from getting it if they want to get it.

This country will be infinitely better off if you teach men the need and importance of temperance, of sobriety. You can not curb intemperance by prohibition laws. I venture the assertion that such legislation is constantly violated in practically every State in which it has been tried. But you make sneaks and liars and hypocrites of men whenever you attempt to put into force laws of this kind, and that is what I object to. I do not believe that is a good thing for this country. I said at the outset that the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments are held in contempt. This legislation will create additional contempt for law if it is eventually written on the statute books. And that nation is in a bad way indeed when its people hold its laws in contempt. It were infinitely better for this Nation if this question were left to the individual States of the Union.

If the people of the States want prohibition, they can have it. In my State we have local option. Here is an extract from the San Francisco Chronicle of Wednesday, November 4, 1914. We had our first State-wide prohibition election on the day previous, the 3d of November, 1914. This article is headed:

SHOUTED FOR DRYS—SOLD BOOZE TO WETS.

Rogers, a druggist whose show window prominently displayed signs "Vote California dry," was arrested to-day, charged with conducting a blind pig. He was released under $200 bail.

This was in Pasadena, which is one of the largest dry towns in the State.

That shows how it makes hypocrites of men. That shows how it makes liars of men. That shows how it makes sneaks of men. Let us be honest, with ourselves at least, in this matter. Let us leave this question where it rightfully belongs—to the individual States of the Union. [Applause.]

Mr. WEBB. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING].

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I was impressed by the strange logic of the gentleman who has just taken his seat. I do not think he has gone far enough, however. I would call his attention to the fact that we have on our statute books laws against stealing. Those laws are repeatedly violated. Why not be frank with one another and repeal them?

I know of a case where a man was in the penitentiary for murder. He secured a heavy tool with which he worked, and he killed a guard. Why not be frank with one another and repeal the law against murder because it is being violated?

A short time ago several hundred men and women were drowned through the capsizing of a steamer near Chicago, and a clamor went up all over the country for laws to safeguard steamships. Why indulge in such nonsense? As the gentleman has told you, thousands of men and women are drowned every year. Why enact laws calculated to safeguard men and women against being drowned?

My friends, what arrant nonsense is this? Of course prohibition laws are violated. I presume that prohibition laws will always be violated. But that does not affect the principle of the proposition we are considering.

I am in favor of this amendment and will vote for it, because I believe that the liquor traffic should be outlawed in this country, and I know of only one way in which that result may be secured, and that is to place upon the statute books a law which will forbid the sale, the manufacture, and the importation of intoxicating liquors and then give to the State and national authorities full power to enforce that law.

We are about to pass this amendment. The people of this country want their Constitution amended so that the liquor business will be destroyed; and their Representatives in this Chamber, in voting as they will vote to-day to submit this amendment to the State legislatures, are responding to that appeal of their constituents.

My own State has adopted prohibition. It adopted it by a very narrow margin, and those who were opposed to prohibition were loud in their predictions that the people would soon tire of it. And yet two years later, when a proposition was submitted which would permit the manufacture of light beers, the people of Colorado defeated it by more than 50,000 majority.

As a further evidence of the sentiment of the people of Colorado on this issue, every Representative from that State will vote for this amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the real question before the House to-day is whether or no we believe in representative and constitutional government; whether or no we believe that governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed, and that the governed therefore have the right to say whether those powers shall be extended. There may be gentlemen who doubt the efficacy of prohibition as a perfect cure for the evils of intemperance. There may be gentlemen who doubt the wisdom of prohibition through Federal enactment. But unless those gentlemen assert and contend that the people are not capable of judging and determining those questions they can not logically vote against the resolution now before the House. I am one of those who believe that under our form of government the right of the people to an opportunity to determine whether or no the powers of the Federal Government shall be extended is beyond controversy or question; therefore as a very considerable number of very respectable people desire to have the question of prohibition through Federal constitutional enactment submitted for decision in the constitutional way I am in favor of giving them that opportunity, because I am a believer in a government of the people with such powers as the people desire it to have and exercise. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CRISP). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON].

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I have listened to-day with a great deal of interest to many of the opponents of this proposed amendment to the Constitution of these United States for prohibiting the manufacture, sale, and transportation of intoxicating liquors. Their subtle and specious arguments have forced me to the conclusion that many of these gentlemen have unquestionably missed their calling. They very evidently have made recent and most careful study of the most modern and up-to-date methods of strategy and deception practiced on the battle fields of Europe in the present world war. These gentlemen are here when they should be using their great talents elsewhere. Their arguments in this debate evidence that they would make marvelously great camouflage artists. They are wasting their time and talents here in Congress when they might well be making our German enemies across the sea believe molehills are mountains and that broomsticks are 20-inch cannon. Some of these gentlemen would have you believe that this amendment is contrary to the whole spirit of our original Constitution and of our established form of Government. Nothing is further from the truth. This resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of these United States is in every way properly before this body, and it is in every way proper for this body to submit this amendment to the several States and to the people thereof for approval and ratification. I shall unhesitatingly support this resolution, first, because it is in every way properly before this House, and because it is in every way right and fitting to at this time submit it for approval to the several States of the Union. I shall support it for the further reason that I firmly believe that if this resolution could be adopted and approved by the necessary number of States at once it would not only not interfere with our winning of the war, but would, on the other hand, greatly help and aid us in winning the war. [Applause.]

I shall support this resolution, gentlemen, because its passage in this House will mark one of the final steps in the great work of driving from this Nation for all time one of the greatest causes of crime, misery, and unhappiness among our people. I shall support this resolution, gentlemen, because I have been witness for many years in the splendid State I have the honor in part to represent here in Congress to the marvelous benefits of prohibition as shown in the homes and among the families of my State.

I shall support this resolution, gentlemen, because I know that when it is finally adopted and when it becomes a part of the law of our land there will then no longer be found in this great Nation of which we are all so proud those poor, pitiful, blear-eyed, woeful wrecks of humanity now found in every city, town, village, and hamlet where a saloon exists and where intoxicating liquors are dispensed. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MERRITT].

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Speaker, nobody questions that we are living in a government in which the majority rule. Nobody questions that this amendment is properly before this House and that it is constitutional if passed in a constitutional way. But that does not prevent this resolution from being revolutionary, because if passed it will put into the Constitution social legislation that has never been there before. It will take away the great distinction of our Constitution that it is the fundamental law and not an instrument for social legislation.

In Connecticut years ago, before I became active there, we passed a State-wide prohibition law. It went on for five or six years and was so unsatisfactory that it was repealed. Since that time we have gone under local license, which has been very satisfactory. As a matter of fact, none of the large towns or cities has continuously been under no license because that was found unsatisfactory for them. The small towns and country places are under no license, which works satisfactorily, and the large towns under license, which works satisfactorily.

I think that is a fair example of what should go on. There is no possible objection on our part to what the Middle West or the West may have. If they want license or no license they should have it. All we want is to have the say as to our own social legislation.

We have in Connecticut a thickly settled manufacturing district, and I am perfectly sure that if this legislation could be passed and passed promptly you would not help the war at all. As a matter of fact, no crisis of that kind exists at all because under the act of this Congress giving power to the President and the food administration we shall have practical temperance, and that will enable us to see how it works. That will be real national temperance. It seems to me to put through this so-called emergency legislation when there is no emergency, raises a question during the war that is unwise. [Applause.]

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ROBBINS].

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Speaker, there is pending in this Congress three proposed amendments to the Federal Constitution:

1. For the purpose of establishing national prohibition.

2. For the purpose of conferring the right to vote upon women.

3. For the purpose of placing the name of God in the Federal Constitution and by this means recognizing the name of the Supreme Being in our organic law.

We are now engaged in the consideration of the first of these proposed amendments, which is designated as Senate joint resolution 17 on House Calendar No. 79 of the Sixty-fifth Congress, second session. This amendment proposes as follows:

After one year from the ratification of this article the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes is hereby prohibited.

Seven years are given to vote upon this amendment. Even if adopted eight years may elapse before it becomes effective.

The Government of the United States is one of delegated powers and the Congress possesses only such powers as are found within the written Constitution. The Constitution of the United States is a compact made by the people of the United States to govern themselves as to general objects in a certain manner. The meaning of the Constitution as to the document itself rests on judicial interpretation and extension of the law. Its meaning is found not only within the Constitution itself but in the judicial interpretation placed upon its clauses by the Supreme Court out of which has grown up the extension of authority known as the "doctrine of implied powers" whereby the Constitution has been made flexible and a living growing compact governing perfectly this Nation of over 100,000,000 people with perfect adaptability as it governed 130 years ago this Nation when it consisted of less than 6,000,000 people with limited commerce and few wants.

For the people of the United States loyalty consists not in devotion to a sovereignty or fatherland but to the law itself, and to an ideal, to a Constitution, and this ideal found its supreme expression in the United States in the Constitution adopted in 1787. What, then, is the Constitution that we are here proposing to ask the people to amend?

In the case of Horne v. Dorrance (2 Dall. Rep., 304) it is thus defined by the Supreme Court:

It is a form of government delineated by the almighty hand of the people, in which certain first principles of fundamental laws are established. The Constitution is certain and fixed; it contains the permanent will of the people and is the supreme law of the land; it is paramount to the power of the legislature and can be revoked or altered by the authority that made it. The life-giving principle and the death-doing stroke must proceed from the same hand. What are the legislatures? Creatures of the Constitution; they owe their existence to the Constitution; they derive their powers from the Constitution. It is their commission, and, therefore, all their acts must be conformable to it or else they will be void. The Constitution is the work or will of the people themselves in their original, sovereign, and unlimited capacity. Law is the work or will of the legislature in their derivative or subordinate capacity. The one is the work of the creator, the other of the creature.

The amended Constitution of the United States: The people's law of the United States now consists of the written plan of government prepared by the convention of 1787 and 17 amendments which have been added under the provisions of the amending clause.

The first 10 amendments, usually called the Bill of Rights, state in separate articles as additions to the Constitution the rights, privileges, and immunities of citizens of the States.

The eleventh and twelfth amendments limit the power of the Federal courts in actions against States and correct the defects in an impossible plan of choosing Presidents and Vice Presidents of the United States.

The three amendments adopted at the close of the Civil War are additions to the Constitution rather than alterations.

The sixteenth amendment permits national taxation of incomes derived from any source, including real estate.

The seventeenth amendment provides for the election of United States Senators by the people instead of by State legislatures.

We are now proposing to add an eighteenth amendment to the Constitution, which amendment I shall briefly describe as prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors.

The people have purposely made the amendment of the Constitution difficult and incapable of haste. The fundamental law of the land is not to be hastily changed, modified, or extended.

In order to amend the Constitution it is necessary to pass through both the Senate and the House the proposed amendment in identically the same form by a two-thirds majority and then submit the proposed amendment to the people of the various States, which must be adopted in the same form by the legislatures of three-fourths of the States before it becomes operative. In this case it would require the affirmative action of the legislatures of 37 States.

A vote, therefore, in favor of submitting this amendment to the people means that the question will be submitted and made an issue in the election of the next members of the legislatures of all the States and of the governor in most of the States, and the question of prohibition will be fought out on all the hustings and in the legislative contests of each of the States of the Union. In this way all the electors of the country will be given an opportunity to register their opinion on the propriety of adopting this amendment and prohibiting or continuing the manufacture and sale of liquor in the United States, and that is exactly as it should be.

The responsibility for this legislation should be with the voter who resides in the district and knows the local conditions and wants of the people and not with the Members of Congress, who may not be familiar with the local situation.

In the district which I represent, the twenty-second Pennsylvania, composed of the counties of Westmoreland and Butler, there is a population of over 400,000 people and a voting population of about 40,000. To expect me to vote against submitting this proposed amendment to these 40,000 voters for their consideration and decision would be to require me to act arbitrarily, unreasonably, and contrary to the duties of a Congressman.

The office of a Congressman is representative. On all questions except moral questions he should represent the sentiment of his district, but on moral questions he should act according to the dictates of his conscience.

I am not now arguing or commenting on the moral features of the liquor traffic. Time forbids a discussion of this. This does not necessarily enter into the consideration of the submission of this amendment at this time. That question must be decided by the voters of the different States when the question is presented to them. The situation that confronts me as a Member of Congress is, Shall I by my vote oppose the submission of this proposition to the voters and thereby say to them that they are not to be trusted, or that they are unable and unwilling to decide this question, or shall I, by my vote in favor of it, refer it to them for their consideration, as I would any other constitutional amendment.

That there is a great demand among the people for the submission of this question to them is admitted. It is stated in the report of the committee in this House on the bill, and not denied in the minority report, that 80 per cent of the population of the United States has declared for prohibition, and that more than 60 per cent of the population live in dry territory, and that approximately 10,000,000 of the people of the United States residing in all sections of the United States have petitioned Congress for the passage of this resolution. Surely, to disregard the voice of the people so emphatically uttered would be folly upon the part of a Representative in Congress and would be turning a deaf ear to the people who are entitled to favorable hearing and consideration. Never before was such a petition presented and such demand made for the enactment of legislation as this.

I am in favor of all the amendments above referred to. I could not vote to withhold any of them from the consideration of the electors and discharge, as I view it, my duty to them as their Representative.

It will be urged here and elsewhere that this is an inopportune time to consider this proposition. That the consideration of it will bring dissension, dissatisfaction, and unrest among our people at a time when they ought to be united, determined, and in complete accord in the prosecuting of this great war to a victorious conclusion. That I do not believe to be true. I am not a member of the committee that reported this resolution. The question is here and must be met and decided. There is no escaping the responsibility. I am also aware in my own case that it requires great courage to vote in favor of the submission of this amendment to the people; it means much for me and probably will affect my political future; it certainly means the estrangement of life-long friends, the breaking up of political ties, and the engendering of more or less personal enmity; but I must not consider my personal situation, my personal feelings, nor my personal future. My duty, in this instance, I believe to be plain and clear. That is to vote to refer this whole question to the arbitrament of the voters of my own congressional district and all the congressional districts in the country for their ultimate consideration and determination. They will determine it rightly. In a Republic the final decision of all questions must ultimately come to the people themselves, and from them all authority must proceed. In this instance we can trust the people implicitly. Our trusts will be met; our anticipations will be fulfilled. They will decide this question rightly, and until it is so decided it will never be finally settled. I trust the people; I believe in their judgment and their honesty. Their love for the Constitution and our republican institutions is an ample guaranty that these will always be safe in their hands and keeping. Their patriotism and devotion will guide them aright. Their voice in this instance, as in every other similar instance, will prove again the truth of that maxim of our political life, that "vox populi vox Dei." [Applause.]

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. OSBORNE].

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker, the question before the House is the adoption of a joint resolution proposing to the several States of the Union an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting the manufacture, sale, transportation, or importation of intoxicating liquors.

It is in the nature of an enabling action, permitting the States to ascertain the sentiments and desires of their citizens upon this very important question of public policy. In other words, it is not a question as to the merits of prohibition, but the question is whether or not the people of the various States shall be permitted to vote on the merits of prohibition.

As greatly as I deplore the evils attending the intemperate use of intoxicating beverages, I have never considered indiscriminate prohibition as the best and only method of coping with the evil.

In a long experience while a young man as a newspaper reporter on police-station details, and later during several years spent in mining camps on the Pacific coast, I reached the conclusion that an enormous percentage of all the evils of intemperance arise from the use of strong spirits—whisky, brandy, gin, rum, and so forth, but, in our country, principally whisky. I have observed that all of my acquaintances of earlier years who were drinkers of spirits have passed away. It is only the temperate who are left, and who still perform useful functions in the world.

In a life of several years in a noted mining town of the Sierras, where, in an isolated locality, one knew the individual characteristics and personal habits of nearly every resident, I knew a number of very bright and capable young men who fell into the habit, not unusual in such frontier towns, of taking an appetizer in the form of a cocktail before breakfast. A cocktail, I am told, is a very insidious and virile concoction, embracing a number of most potent ingredients of high spirits and various appetizing condiments. It is said that one will create an appetite where none existed before. But the appetite is not confined to food, but extends to further stimulants, and the young men I have referred to soon acquired the habit of taking a second cocktail, usually at a second saloon, and after no great interval they had what was locally termed a "cocktail route," which they traversed morning after morning, from one saloon to another, absorbing three or four or even a half dozen cocktails before breakfast. I hardly need say that all of these young men, some of them very capable and promising, have passed away, most of them over 25 years ago. I occasionally meet an old acquaintance whom I knew at the intensely active mining camp of Bodie, which flourished contemporaneously with Leadville and the later days of the Comstock, 35 or 40 years ago, but not one of the followers of the cocktail route do I ever see. They have all passed "beyond the great divide."

I have never been able to observe any permanent or even temporary good in the use of whisky and kindred spirits as beverages, and I have seen great and appalling evils result. As I advance in years, the less of good and the more of evil are apparent to me in their use. I have no difficulty, therefore, in reaching the conclusion that high spirits of every form as beverages ought to be got rid of.

So far as the beverages are concerned of light alcoholic content, such as beer and light wine, they are not subject to the same objections as high spirits, and they should be treated in an entirely different way. Their use may be abused, it is true, but they are not so likely to be, and they are in their nature incapable of so much mischief. If there were no high spirits to be had and nothing with higher alcohol content than beer and light wines, I doubt if there would be much intemperance. Such is usually reported to be the fact in those countries where this condition exists. A very great distinction ought to be made between high spirits and wines and beer in legislation.

Having reached the conclusion that high spirits as beverages are an unqualified detriment to the people and to the country, the problem arises as to how to rid ourselves of them. We certainly ought to do so in a way that would do injustice to no one, or as little injustice as possible, in carrying out so sweeping and radical a measure.

Light wines and beer of small alcoholic content ought not, in my opinion, to be included in the prohibition, unless it be for the purpose of conservation and as a war measure. That power is already in the hands of the President.

For a half century the State of California has been at great pains to build up an extensive viticultural interest. Large sections being specially adapted to the raising of wine grapes, it has encouraged and fostered the industry in many ways. It has been maintaining and is now maintaining a State viticultural commission, which obtains information of interest to wine-grape growers from all European wine-making countries and distributes it to those interested in California. Many people have the accumulated work of half their lives or more represented in their vineyards, at the inducement and encouragement of the State. The value of these vineyard properties runs high in the millions, and it would seem a great wrong if these people were to be deprived of their property, or of the only use to which it could be placed, without consideration of any kind. The same reasoning applies to wine-grape growers in Ohio, New York, Missouri, and other States.

I opened my remarks by a statement that this joint resolution is in the nature of an enabling act. Aside from the merits of the particular measure, I should be inclined to favor permission to the State, when asked by large numbers of citizens (and in this case some 6,000,000 of people have so petitioned), to vote upon any large question of public policy, whether it be prohibition, suffrage, or any other important question. In this case there is the undoubted fact that a majority of the citizens of my own district would favor the submission of this amendment to the people of the States and an opportunity to vote on it. At an election held throughout the city of Los Angeles on November 20, 1917—only a month ago—by a majority of over 20,000 it was voted to exclude saloons from the city. About 80 per cent of the voting population of the city is within the tenth congressional district, which I represent. I believe that a Representative in Congress should faithfully represent the sentiment of his district, if he knows what that sentiment is, unless he regards the sentiment absolutely wrong or immoral and he can not vote in conformity with it without violence to his conscience. There is, of course, no such difficulty involved in this case. There is nothing wrong or immoral in permitting the people of the United States to vote their convictions on a great public question. A Representative of a district which he feels sure would favor such action would be in an incongruous position to vote to prevent such a Nation-wide expression, even though he might prefer that the proposed action should be less sweeping.

In this view, I shall vote for the joint resolution. [Applause.]

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. BURROUGHS].

Mr. BURROUGHS. Mr. Speaker, I hope this resolution will pass. I was elected to this House on the 29th day of May last largely upon this very issue. The State of New Hampshire, which I have the honor in part to represent, has voted to be a dry State after the 1st day of May next. The district I have the honor to represent has been said to be the wettest district in New England outside of Boston. There are many breweries in that district, but that district on the 29th day of May voted in favor of a dry candidate—voted to send me to this House as its Representative in Congress.

Now, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I shall not attempt in two minutes to argue this question; but, to my mind, when approximately 10,000,000 people in this country have petitioned, as they have petitioned Congress, to submit this amendment it is sufficient reason why we should at least submit the amendment to the people. That, I understand, gentlemen, is the exact situation at the present time.

Much has been said in regard to disunity, that we should take no action that will bring on disunity, but let us remember that the question is here. We can not avoid it or get rid of it. Do gentlemen think that by voting down this resolution at the present time you are going to get unity when the people are divided on it all over the country? Do gentlemen think they are going to get rid of the question in that way? [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA].

Mr. LEA of California. Mr. Speaker, I shall propose an amendment to the resolution exempting light wines, and beers containing not more than 3 per cent of alcohol, from its application. In the brief time at my disposal I want particularly to refer to some conditions that affect my district. There are in California 160,000 acres of wine grapes. The adoption of the amendment to the Constitution proposed here to-day would mean a loss to the farmers of California, the grape growers, of not less than $30,000,000. The men who have planted those vines, which produce practically a lifetime, have done so because they have been encouraged by this Nation and by the State of California to do so. The United States to-day maintains 12 experimental vineyards in the State of California to encourage those farmers. Those grape growers are worthy men. They are of that type that represents the worthy farmer of this country. I have here a letter that I want to read and which illustrates one phase of the question involved at this time. It is from a grape grower, a man who went out and cleared the land and planted a vineyard of about 40 acres, upon which he is to-day dependent for the support of his family. The body of the letter is as follows:

> I have given my son to the Army to go to France to fight my country's battles. I learn from the papers that there are Congressmen at Washington who want to destroy the value of my vineyard, which has been raised at great labor and expense to myself and upon which my family is depending for support. Do you think this is a square deal?

I replied to that farmer that I did not think it was a square deal. His only son is preparing to leave for France. The writer is himself a member of the home guard and willing to serve his country when called. The parents of that boy, like the parents of other American boys, will daily await with anxiety the news from the battle front. Even in their dreams at night the peril of their son fighting for our country will startle them in dread. That family is typical of hundreds of families in California. It is not right at this time, when we ask of them a sacrifice that is dearer than themselves—their children—that we should also haunt them with the fear of losing property upon which they largely depend for livelihood.

However, I do not speak from the standpoint of the grower alone. The evils of the liquor business are known to all. I am not here to find fault with those who seek to curb those evils. Indeed, I believe it would be a reflection upon the worth of our people if in recent years no effort had been made to restrain the liquor business. But the resolution proposed to-day, in my judgment, goes to an extremity that is not sanctioned by the moderate and best opinion in our country.

My amendment proposes the elimination of the fundamental evil of the liquor business—strong drink. Under normal conditions the country consumes about 100,000,000 gallons of whisky and strong drinks. It consumes over 1,500,000,000 gallons of beer, the percentage of alcohol in which has heretofore ranged from about 3½ per cent to 5½ per cent. It has heretofore consumed something like 30,000,000 gallons of light wine and about 20,000,000 gallons of fortified wine. My amendment, if adopted, would eliminate whisky and the other strong drinks. It would eliminate all but the light wines. It would reduce the percentage of alcohol in beer to a basis practically nonintoxicating. The adoption of this amendment would eliminate the extremists from both sides of this controversy. Those extremists are the radical, aggressive, assertive advocates that do not represent those upon whom we must rely for a sensible solution of this problem.

Those who fail to discriminate between light liquors and strong drink refuse to see facts that are apparent to all open minds. You say alcohol is a poison. It is. So is the caffein in coffee. So is the nicotin in tobacco. But all men discriminate between coffee and cocain and between tobacco and opium. So intelligent minds must discriminate between 3 per cent of alcohol and 50 per cent of alcohol.

Some regard must be had for the appetites of other people. We do not force even a sick man to take medicine unless he wants it. Our right to curb the appetite of another is limited to cases where the gratification of that appetite is in itself immoral or destructive of the rights of others. For that reason we have a right to restrain the use of opium, cocaine, drugs, and strong drinks, and for the same reason we have not the right to restrain the use of coffee, tobacco, and other drinks which are not substantially injurious to the users or others.

I am not willing to give to the other States of this Union the power to deny to California the right to permit or regulate the sale of beer containing only 3 per cent or less of alcohol. I am not willing to give to the other States of this Union the power to destroy the value of the 160,000 acres of wine-grape vineyards in California and at the same time deprive my own State of the power to protect them, or abolish them, as it sees fit. On the same day that I was elected to Congress my district voted against destroying those vineyards by a majority of 10,237. I will not to-day authorize the other States to impose upon California a law which her voters have already rejected.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, my theory of the duty of a Representative upon this floor is that he should, in so far as he can, consistent with his oath of office, vote the sentiments of a majority of the people of his district.

I came here knowing a majority of those whom I represent are strongly in favor of submitting the question of national prohibition to the several States for such action as they may desire to take upon it. Knowing this when I submitted my candidacy to the people of my district, and knowing it now, I shall cast my vote for the passage of the resolution.

When this resolution providing for national prohibition has been adopted by Congress and submitted to the States it will require the approval of three-fourths of the States before it becomes effective. It seems to me no one can seriously question that if the people of three-fourths of the States of the Union desire national prohibition the demand for it is so strong among our people as to justify the adoption of prohibition as a national policy.

We are now engaged in a great war to make the world safe for democracy we are told. This being true, we should not by our action here refuse to three-fourths of the people of America the constitutional right to determine the policies that shall prevail in their own country.

Aside from giving voice to the sentiments of the people I represent in voting for the passage of this resolution, I also express my own convictions of this important question. The organized liquor traffic is the greatest curse of the present age. No good has ever come from it or ever will. Its every influence is bad and the American people have made up their minds to banish it from their midst. They have decided that the method of its destruction most certain and speedy is by way of an amendment to the Federal Constitution. Representing a great district where the people have by their votes in every county, in every town, and every precinct driven out the saloon, and entertaining the sentiments I do, I shall most cheerfully vote for this resolution. [Applause.]

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, my district is as dry as a covered bridge and we had secured prohibition for every county in it before the other counties in the State went dry. So you can very well understand why the people of my district and State do not enthuse over your proposition to take from us the power that we have already used successfully and at the same time place Alabama in the attitude of denying to other States the right to use the very same power that we used to suppress the whisky traffic.

Just a few years ago whisky was legally sold in every State in the Union, but the local crusaders at fireside, in school room, in pulpit, press, and forum have carried on their campaigns of education against the evil until to-day more than half of the States, through the exercise of their own sovereign powers, have driven out the whisky traffic and established prohibition. Mr. Speaker, 27 States have suppressed the whisky traffic, and by so doing they have given to their sister States the benefit of their example, and they have demonstrated beyond peradventure that the State has the right and the power to suppress the whisky traffic, and that the State can and has suppressed it in the most effective way possible. And now the States that have not yet adopted prohibition are begging us who come from the States that have prohibition to let them convince their people as we have convinced our people of the evils of the whisky traffic. The question is: Will we be patient and tolerant enough to accord to other States the right to settle the whisky question just as we ourselves settled it through the rights and powers reserved to the States?

Gentlemen, are we willing to take away from the State that sovereign power without whose exercise we would not now have prohibition in any State in the Union and, in taking that power away, surrender forever the right and power of the State to control its own domestic affairs? No emergency has arisen that would justify me in surrendering to the Federal Government this cherished right of the State. If the State were powerless to carry out its own will and to do with the whisky traffic what the people of the State had declared they desired to do, then—having discovered that it was unable within itself to execute its own will—then, I say, and then only, would we be justified in calling upon the Federal Government to interfere in the domestic affairs of a State.

The cause of prohibition is growing everywhere, and all that has been accomplished for the cause has been accomplished by the States acting through their separate sovereignties. Now, then, if the whisky traffic can be and has been suppressed through the police powers of the States, there is no reason or justification for taking this right away from the State and depriving the people of the States of the right and power to do that which they can do and do more wisely and effectively than can the Federal Government. All candid people must admit that the wisest and best way to handle the whisky question is through the exercise of the police power of the State. When you get prohibition that way you have a strong and sympathetic public sentiment to sustain the State in its action. Thomas Jefferson and the fathers of our Federal Constitution provided that it should be handled in that way. Under this plan, through the police powers of the States, prohibition has been established in more than half of the States of the Union, and under this plan the work goes on. State by State the Commonwealths of this Union are taking their places in the prohibition column.

Mr. Speaker, in the first place, it is not necessary in the interest of prohibition to surrender this right of the State, because the surest and safest way of suppressing the whisky traffic is through the police power of the State. The State of Alabama, through the exercise of her police power, has already suppressed the manufacture and sale of whisky within her own borders, and Congress has made it unlawful to ship whisky into a State where the manufacture and sale of it is prohibited, and now the Supreme Court of the United States has declared that the State, through the exercise of its police powers, can even prohibit the citizen from keeping whisky in his own home for personal use. If the individual State now has the power to suppress the manufacture, sale, and use of whisky within its confines, why should we surrender that power to the Federal Government, and why should we aid in depriving other States of the very same power through whose exercise we suppressed the whisky traffic in Alabama?

Mr. Speaker, it is not here proposed to submit this amendment to the people of the various States and I am not willing to take from my State this sovereign power without giving the people themselves an opportunity to vote upon the question. We were going back to the people when we took away from the State legislatures the right to elect United States Senators and conferred that right upon the people themselves, but here you propose to take away from the people a cherished and a valuable sovereign right by the action of the State legislatures, some of whom have already been elected, elected before this amendment became an issue.

Gentlemen of the House, the framers of the Constitution wisely reserved to the separate States certain powers. They realized that it was best for the State and Federal Government for the State to have and exercise certain fundamental rights and powers. In the old days the man who was willing to strip the State of its sovereign powers and turn them over to the Federal Government was properly called a Federalist. Gladstone said truly that the Constitution of the United States was the greatest civic document that ever emanated from the brain of man, and that great document recognized the wisdom and necessity of forever preserving in their vigor and integrity every sovereign State in the Union. The advocates of home rule and local self-government labored hard in the constitutional convention to secure for the States the rights and powers necessary for their well-being and preservation, and I wonder what they would think if they could come here now and see some Members of the House and Senate surrendering to the Federal Government powers that rightly belong to the State. Instead of rendering unto the Federal Government the things that rightly belong to the Federal Government and safeguarding the State in the full and free use of the things that rightly belong to the State, they are joining in the Federalist movement which takes away from the State the very lifeblood of its sovereignty.

Mr. Speaker, when you deprive the State of her sovereign power you weaken the State. You impair her usefulness. You take away from her the right to manage the affairs of her own household and deprive her of the power of self-preservation. Shall it be said that she has been humiliated and betrayed by those chosen to protect and defend her, and that those selected to safeguard her rights have surrendered them? If you surrender this police power of the State and say that the State shall no longer determine her own domestic policies, you have drawn an awful indictment against your State, for, in effect, you have charged her with being indifferent to her own interests or incompetent to manage her own affairs, or you have branded yourself as one careless and indifferent as to her well-being and standing in the sisterhood of States. If the State has become incompetent and unworthy to longer have and exercise the sacred rights and powers that the fathers said were necessary to her well-being and preservation, then, gentlemen, you are justified in calling upon the Federal Government to come in and take control of the domestic concerns of the State. But, gentlemen, such an indictment against the State can not be sustained. The State is more competent than ever to conduct its own affairs and more responsive to the righteous demands of its people than ever before. The very thing that we boast of here to-day—the rapid growth of temperance and prohibition—had its origin in and made its progress through the States acting in their sovereign capacity and using the very same police power that you now seek to destroy.

Gentlemen of the House, the time was when all of the States authorized the sale of whisky. Suppose at that time, when all of the States legalized the sale of whisky, Congress had submitted and three-fourths of the States, through their legislatures, had ratified an amendment declaring the sale of whisky proper and legal in every State in the Union. Why, if that had been done and the State had been stripped of the police power that you are trying to take from her to-day, we would have no prohibition. If the legislatures of three-fourths of the States can ratify an amendment saying that no whisky can be sold in any State in the Union, the same number of legislatures could, by an amendment, declare the sale of whisky legal in every State in the Union and thus banish prohibition from the States that now have it. The Nation is going dry by and through the exercise of the police power of the States. The antiwhisky campaign is being waged in every locality in the country, and the people are being educated on the evils of the whisky traffic, and the result is that when a State goes dry in this way you have public opinion to sustain the law, and prohibition is not a success anywhere unless it is supported by public opinion. But for the police power of the State, the very power that you are seeking this day to destroy, we would not have prohibition on a single foot of American soil.

Mr. Speaker, instead of making it a national question, let the States go on educating their people and holding elections, if they wish, but do not foist upon the Nation at this time an issue involving the destruction of the rights of the State. The President, by act of Congress, has the power now to stop the manufacture and sale of whisky, beer, and wine all over the country. He can commandeer every drop of it at any time. Gentlemen, is it not wise and best to leave this question in the hands of the President for the present? If he favored this method of handling the question he would advocate it and give us his reasons for wishing to deprive the States of their right to deal with the matter as they deem wisest and best. We have already conferred upon the Federal Government all the power necessary for the handling and the suppression of the whisky traffic during the war, and we have done this without stirring up strife amongst the people and without emasculating the States and amending the Federal Constitution. Would it not be better to wait for further suggestions on this question from the Commander in Chief of our Army and Navy before we plunge the American people into a bitter campaign in every State in the Union? It is unwise and unnecessary to precipitate this fight at this time, and, in the interest of complete harmony and concerted action on all war questions, a campaign such as this issue would present ought not to be forced upon the country at this time. Any State can now act upon the question of prohibition without regard to action on the part of the Federal Government, but if this amendment is submitted the question becomes a national issue and, right here in the midst of the war, the attention of the people would be distracted and sharp division in feelings would result. And it seems to me that it is the patriotic duty of all Members at this time to prevent the doing of anything that will embarrass and handicap the President in his patriotic efforts to bring about unity of purpose and concerted action on all matters pertaining to the war.

Mr. Speaker, no Member of the House or Senate can dispose of this question by simply saying that he was tired of being bothered with it. The man who will surrender a vital power of his State because he wants to get rid of those who want to deprive his State of that power is unworthy of the commission that he holds. Mr. Speaker, just a little while ago the gentlemen who are here to-day urging the destruction of the police power of the State were saying to me and to others, "If we can suppress the manufacture and sale of whisky in the State and keep whisky advertisements and shipments of whisky out of the State, we will have accomplished the desired end, and we will not call upon the Federal Government for action in the matter." Well, the manufacture and sale of whisky has been suppressed in Alabama. Whisky advertisements and shipments have been prevented, but here they are, with no reason or necessity to warrant it, asking us to surrender to the Federal Government the right of the State to manage its own domestic affairs. The police power of the State is one of the cherished landmarks of the fathers, and the people of my district and State do not want this landmark removed. They are opposed to surrendering this right and power to the Federal Government, and they want me, as one of their Representatives in Congress, to protect the State in the full and free exercise of her sovereign powers.

Mr. Speaker, in 1909 the legislature of my State submitted a prohibition amendment to the constitution of Alabama, and I supported that amendment. Every county in my district was dry at that time, and yet the district gave a majority of over 2,000 votes against that amendment. The State, with nine-tenths of the counties dry, gave a majority of nearly 30,000 votes against it, every congressional district in the State going against the amendment. In view of the fact that my district refused by over 2,000 majority to place a prohibition amendment to the constitution of the State, and in view of the further fact that the people of the State refused by a large majority to ratify a prohibition amendment to the State constitution, I would not be justified, even if I desired personally to do so, in using the power delegated to me as a Representative in Congress from Alabama in doing to the Federal Constitution, through the legislatures of three-fourths of the States, what the people of my district and the people of the State by direct vote refused to do to the State constitution when the State prohibition amendment was submitted to the people of Alabama. Why, Mr. Speaker, in 1776 the 13 Colonies took up arms against the mother country because they were denied the right to shape their own domestic policies and to manage as each Colony thought best its own domestic affairs. But in 1917 a proposition is submitted to the legislatures of the States which places in the hands of 35 State legislatures the right and power to disregard the registered will of the entire population of 13 States in the Union. Never has the Democratic Party in my district or State declared in favor of a Federal prohibition amendment. The Democratic Party in the Nation has never declared in favor of it, and yet we are urged here to surrender a right that has endeared the Democratic Party to millions of American people.

The trouble with some Members of Congress is that they seem to become infatuated with the idea of a strong centralized government and instead of safeguarding the State in all its rights and powers, they are ready to surrender to the Federal Government the very things that support and sustain the life of the State.

Mr. Speaker, it is the solemn duty of every Member of the House and Senate to protect and not to surrender the police power of the State. For the time being we are the guardians of these sacred sovereign powers, and God forbid that we shall prove recreant in our obligations to the States whose rights and powers we have sworn to protect and preserve. History teaches us that in all Republics, centralization of power is the great danger to be dreaded. Fortunate, indeed, is the country whose national lawmakers "take care," as President Jackson said, "not to confound the powers of the Federal Government with the rights and powers reserved to the States." Mr. Speaker, I regret to see that some gentlemen here from the South in their enthusiasm for certain federalistic theories on prohibition do not seem to realize that we are treading on dangerous ground when we deliberately surrender our sovereign powers and invite Federal interference in the domestic affairs of the State. They do not seem to realize that we are setting a precedent for Federal control over other things in the State—things that touch the very heart of our civilization. We are not situated as some of the other States are, and we of the South have problems entirely different from the problems that confront the people in many of the other States. Our people have not forgotten the dark days of reconstruction when the negro, drunk on his newfound freedom and led by scalawags and carpetbaggers, threatened the civilization of the South, and that it was the State, through the exercise of its sovereign powers that saved our civilization; that protected our women from the lust and carnality of the brutes in our midst; that drove out the scalawags and carpetbaggers and gave back home rule and self-government to every Southern State. Surrender these rights? No, gentlemen, the very heart of my State cries out against it. [Applause.]

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, in determining our attitude upon this great question, we need not journey far into the realms of metaphysics or philosophy. We need only to consider whether the thing we propose to eradicate is an evil and whether our Nation and the world will be better and safer when it no longer exists. Having determined these questions, our duty is made plain and will be fulfilled in proportion as we act upon the conclusions we reach in the exercise of our moral and mental perceptions.

There was a time when men could be found who would defend the saloon and the liquor traffic as an institution. That time has passed. No man in his right mind now attempts to defend the American saloon. Men there are, no doubt, who seek by indirection to defend it by resorting to the subterfuge of "personal liberty" or to the ancient cry against "sumptuary legislation" or to the convenient fetich of "States rights." But no man who is jealous of his reputation for moral or intellectual integrity will any longer attempt to defend or justify the continuance of the saloon or the liquor traffic in this Nation upon any ground of principle, either moral, social, or political. [Applause.]

Is the saloon an evil? Does it contribute to the physical strength and well being of mankind, or does it retard them? Does it lengthen or shorten the lives of men? Does it conserve or dissipate the mental vigor of our race? Does it accentuate and buttress the moral perceptions of those who are its devotees, or does it warp, debauch, and finally destroy them?

Does the liquor traffic bring happiness or misery to those whom it touches? Does it fill our land with riches, or does it bring poverty instead? Does it fill our churches with worshipers and our schools with children, or does it fill our jails with criminals? Does it clothe the naked, or leave them to shiver without raiment? Does it drive hunger from cottage doors and humble homes, or is it the prolific source and cause of unfed mouths and unnurtured bodies? Are happiness and sunshine its finished product, or does gloom settle upon all that comes within its blighting touch? Does it foster the refinements of art and of literature, or does it appeal to the most brutal and coarsest appetites of which men are conceivably capable? Does it lighten the burdens and solve the problems of Government, or does it increase and complicate them? Does it seek to advance and uphold public and private morality, or does it invade every private and public right that stands in its way and seek to befoul and corrupt or destroy every agency that is not its willing tool?

To answer these questions with honesty, and many more of a similar character that might be propounded, is to lay out the course of our duty as with a chart and compass.

We know that the saloon is an evil. We know that the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors have been responsible for more things that degrade and debase humanity than any other cause, and we might with equal truth say than all other causes combined. We know that the use of intoxicating liquors retards and undermines the physical strength and shortens the lives of men; that it dissipates the mental vigor of our race; that it warps, debauches, and finally destroys the moral perceptions of those who are its devotees.

We know that the saloon and the traffic in intoxicants have brought misery to millions of homes; that it has brought poverty instead of riches; that it has filled our jails and almshouses with criminals and paupers; that it has invaded homes without number and left women and children hungry and cold; that it has been the harbinger of gloom and despair wherever it has flourished; that it magnifies the coarser and more brutal instincts and appetites of men, infinitely increases and complicates the problems of Government, national, State, and local, and seeks to perpetuate its existence by corruption, intimidation, misrepresentation, and every form of false pretense that the ingenuity of its apologists can conceive. [Applause.]

It has stalked into the corridors, and sometimes into the halls, of every legislature that ever attempted to rid the people of it. It has haunted the chambers of courts and of executive officers charged with the enforcement of laws restricting or abolishing it, and its agents and hirelings are here now in this Capital seeking by persuasion and impudent threats to deter Members of Congress from following their conscientious judgment and performing their duty to the people.

Thus believing, I would be false to myself and to those who have honored me with membership in this body if I did not use every legitimate means within my power to safeguard the people of this Nation from the destructive effects and influence of this business. Thus believing, I rejoice at the opportunity which we now enjoy of submitting to the States of this Union a constitutional amendment forever banishing the liquor business from this land. This is no longer a local issue, if it ever was. It is a national issue, and ought to be dealt with by the Nation, just as many other conditions, far less harmful in their extent, have been dealt with by the Nation as a whole. [Applause.]

No institution that destroys the efficiency of a nation or robs its citizens of billions of dollars in money and wealth each year has any right to invoke the doctrine of local self-government in order to lengthen its days as a legalized business. And besides, they are not sincere in their pretended respect for local authorities and only resort to it as a subterfuge in the absence of legitimate argument. We might be more easily convinced of their good faith now if in the past they had not sought to block every attempt of local and State governments to abolish or restrict their business. They did not respect State or local governments in the past when their traffic has been endangered, but, on the contrary, threw every obstacle they could contrive in the way of States and local authorities who attempted to enact or enforce laws against it; and having exhausted themselves in their efforts to thwart and override the States they come here now as the champions of the States and local governments whose laws and whose agents they have always sought to cripple and nullify. [Applause.]

This amendment ought to be submitted, and it ought to be done now. The people, through their legislatures, have a right to determine this question, and no Member of this House ought to allow his personal opinions to stand between the people and the exercise of their rights. The framers of the Constitution provided a wise method for its amendment. No amendment can be submitted to the States except by a two-thirds vote in both the House and Senate; and after it is submitted, so careful were they to guard and fortify the rights of minorities and of the States, they provided that no amendment should become effective or be a part of the Constitution unless ratified by three-fourths of all the States. I am for this amendment. Not only do I believe it ought to be submitted to the States, but I believe it should be ratified by them. And millions of patriotic and brave men and women will feel prouder of our Government and of this Congress when they shall have an opportunity to banish forever by constitutional amendment a business which from every moral, economic, or political standpoint has no right to exist. [Applause.]

We are told by those who pretend to defend the existence and continuation of this business that the Government will lose vast revenues if the manufacture and sale of liquor is stopped. Admitting that the Government will lose this method of collecting revenue from the people, it will be necessary only to substitute another and more honorable and righteous method. The liquor business creates no wealth. It merely acts as a collecting agent, paying into the Government Treasury only about one-tenth of what it exacts in money from the people. I am not willing that the Government shall any longer be the moral, political, or business partner of any business which destroys wealth honestly created, shatters bodies that have a right to remain strong, lowers the efficiency of all who come under its blight, and saps the morals and withers the will of those who become its victims.

It is reliably estimated that more than two and a half billions of dollars are expended in the United States every year for intoxicating liquors. If this enormous sum were left in the channels of legitimate and wealth-creating enterprises the people could well afford to pay to the Government more than it will lose in revenues by abolishing the liquor business. We are compelled to levy enormous taxes upon the people now in order to carry on the great war in which we are engaged for the principles of democracy and civilization. But if all the money expended for and the wealth destroyed by the liquor business in the United States during the last 25 years had been set apart as a war fund, it would be more than enough to win this war and guarantee freedom and liberty to all the nations of the earth without collecting an additional dollar in taxes from the people. Shall Congress longer refuse to allow the people to express their will in determining whether this endless sink hole shall continue to receive the stream of wealth and energy which has flowed into it in the past?

We are at war. We are at war with the cruelest, most brutal military nation in the history of the world. We need all our wealth, all our economic and physical power to win that war and make the world safe for democracy. We have asked the housewife to waste nothing that can be utilized in feeding the world. Yet enough foodstuff goes into the manufacture of intoxicating liquors to feed 7,000,000 of people each year. We have said by law that our soldiers and sailors shall not be debauched by the use of liquors, and we have made it a crime for any man to sell liquor to those who wear the uniform of their country. Why was that done? Because we know that the use of liquor makes unsteady the nerve and inaccurate the aim of those who fight for humanity. Because we intend to see to it, in so far as lies within our power, that these boys taken from Christian American homes shall come back to them as clean and as strong as they were when they left. If this rule is wise for the army in the field, it is wise for the army which must remain at home. If liquor lessens the efficiency of a soldier, it lessens the efficiency of a civilian; and in this great world conflict for the principles of human liberty and self-government we can not endanger the life of our Nation to save the brewers and distillers. [Applause.]

Let this amendment be submitted. Then let it be ratified by the States. When this task shall have been accomplished we will have set before the world an example of democracy at home which will be coincident with our supreme effort for democracy throughout the world, and millions of human souls here and elsewhere will lift up their faces and their voices in the proud possession and full acknowledgment of a wider, deeper, and truer freedom than has dawned upon the world in all the centuries. [Applause.]

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE].

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] claims to have discovered a "blind pig" in Passadena, and he argues, therefore, prohibition should be abolished there. Some 19 years ago, when I was in San Francisco, they arrested and tried three men for burglary. I presume, with the same process of reasoning he will go home and attempt to do away with the laws against burglary. Furthermore, at that time the press stated that several friends of the burglar were guilty of perjury in assisting him in his difficulty. I am satisfied from this that the law against burglary has a tendency to hypocrisy and false testimony, and I want to commend the suggestion to the gentleman from California.

A well-known scientific authority has suggested that if you put liquor in a man's mouth it will steal away his brains. After sixty centuries of tabulated observation the consensus of opinion seems to be that the human race never did have any too much brains, anyway, and wise legislation will save what we have. This amendment is an effort to conserve the physical and mental resources of the human race, and I do not see how anybody can make an argument against such an attempt, especially when you realize there has been nobody here to contradict that self-evident fact. The Congress of the United States, perhaps realizing our mental deficiencies and inability to resist temptation, has abolished the sale of liquor in this city, in self-defense, I suppose, and this is simply a proposition to extend that rule, established by the Congress, to the rest of the Union and to give the rest of the Union a chance to adopt that policy. When this legislation goes out, followed by the commendation of this act of Congress, which we have just seen go into effect so successfully, it ought, because of improvement in Washington, to be very kindly received by the people of the other States.

It has been suggested that this attempt to reform the world sprang from the Jack Rabbit States, and I want to hasten to accept that charge as a compliment before some other State takes it up. I do sometimes think that possibly the last rays of the sun as it climbs the Rocky Mountains linger a little longer and with more kindly benediction over the States west of the Mississippi than over any other, and perhaps because of that fact we receive each night a loftier inspiration, a mightier impulse for every to-morrow's work to uplift the race. Another gentleman from some semicivilized foreign colony in New York City [laughter] said that the friends of this measure come from "the outlying settlements." I am afraid if they ever get any reforms in New York City they will have to come from "the outlying settlements," and I think the gentleman was probably right about that.

It has been suggested here as against this proposition that it interferes with the President's control of the liquor traffic and will create dissension and make more difficult our war problems. The contrary is the fact. As it is now you pass up to the President the only authority to decide whether the manufacture and sale of beer shall stop. You have placed him in an embarrassing position. Whichever way he decides, he will receive the criticism of one element. Take the responsibility off the shoulders of the President and assume it yourself and meet this proposition. The gentleman from California, to follow out his logic, wants us to kill all the men and women if we kill whisky, as if they are in the same class; but whisky rather belongs with the burglar. You must decide now whether the whisky goes with the burglar and is an outlaw or is a proper companion for good citizens. It is either right and should be left to live with men and women, or it is an outlaw and ought to go out with the burglar. You have reached after 60 centuries this milestone in civilization.

In two or three or four or five years prohibition will come anyway. Why not face this proposition now? Do you want to be recorded in the annals of time with those who call a halt in the march of civilization? [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH].

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to reiterate any of the many and valid arguments against the passage of this resolution, but I do wish to throw some light on a controverted fact on which some of these arguments have been predicated. It has been repeatedly stated here this afternoon that there is no opposition to the passage of this resolution on the part of workingmen as they have expressed themselves through their labor organizations.

New Jersey is one of the great industrial States of the Union. The city of Newark, which I, in part, have the honor to represent, is one of the great industrial centers of the country. On the 20th of August the New Jersey State Federation of Labor, comprising all the labor unions in New Jersey affiliated with the Federation of Labor, met in the city of Paterson, and they unanimously passed a resolution opposing the passage of this resolution, and they there spoke through their delegates for 80,000 workingmen of New Jersey. The Essex Trade Council, Essex County being the county comprising the city of Newark, representing all the building trades—masons, bricklayers, roofers, and all the other trade—unanimously in their county meeting opposed the passage of this resolution. I have in my hand resolutions opposing this resolution by the local unions in Newark—of the bakers, of the confectionary workers, of the councils of the leather workers, of the ivory-button makers, the cigar makers, and others. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. NOLAN].

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, in the time allotted to me so generously by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HULBERT] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MEEKER] I am going to read a communication from Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, addressed to me under this date, on the question of the pending amendment. It is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 18, 1917.

SIR: Because of the very serious situation created by the pending joint resolution now before the House of Representatives, being a proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States, commonly known as the Nation-wide prohibition amendment; and because of the wholly untoward position taken thereon through the publication in this morning's press by Mr. William Jennings Bryan; and because there is no other opportunity that the truth may in time come to you and to all others whom it may interest before final action upon the proposed amendment in the House of Representatives, I feel constrained to address this letter to you.

At the outset I should say that on behalf of the men vitally and primarily interested in their work I addressed a letter to the Hon. EDWIN Y. WEBB, chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, requesting that hearing be had so that arguments might be presented in opposition to the proposed amendment. Of course I gave into the hands of Mr. Joseph Dehan, the secretary of the Labor's Emergency Liberty League a copy of that letter, with authority to make such use of it as might be necessary, by reason of the fact that I had duties to perform between Friday evening and this morning in New York City. When Mr. WEBB informed me that the committee would give no hearings I so advised the secretary of the league, and the executive board thereof directed its publication in the Washington Sunday papers. The faddists and fanatics upon the subject of prohibition could find no better personage than Mr. Bryan to undertake to answer the letter I addressed to Mr. WEBB.

There are but a few thoughts I desire to express here regarding Mr. Bryan's letter, for he gives no good reasons for the need of the proposed constitutional amendment at this time, and he indulges himself with clever witticisms to hide the shallowness of his entire effusion.

With a word Mr. Bryan dimsisses the question of employment or unemployment of large numbers of men and naively states that they can easily find employment in other industries or occupations. I wonder whether Mr. Bryan is aware of the fact that for nearly three months more than 30,000 men in the garment industry of the city of New York alone have been and are now unemployed; that nearly 60 per cent of the bricklayers and masons of the United States are now and have been for months unemployed; that more than 30 per cent of the men in the building trades have been unemployed for the past five months and are still unemployed. Of course this may have no influence upon Mr. Bryan's mind or life. He can continue to talk and write profitably whether we have prohibition or not, but it does cause these men and it causes me grave concern, as it does those who are at all familiar with the situation.

But quite apart from Mr. Bryan I desire to present to you additional considerations, in a hurriedly expressed word, why the prohibition ought not to pass.

Did I for a moment feel that the subject matter were of but passing or momentary interest, or that it did not involve grave injury and danger, I should hesitate long before interposing this letter upon your consideration. But because I am so apprehensive of the consequences to our people, our country, and the titanic enterprise in which we are engaged, I feel it incumbent upon me to trespass upon your time so that you might in your own way use your own good judgment to aid in averting what I am fully convinced would be the gravest cause of dissension and discontent among our people if the pending prohibition constitutional amendment were passed by Congress at this time and submitted for ratification.

As you know, the Congress has passed and the law now obtains prohibiting the manufacture of spirituous liquors (whisky, etc.) during the period of the war. That law also gives the power to the President to modify, limit, and, if necessary, even prohibit the manufacture of beers and light wines. The President has already exercised that power in part and whenever or wherever it shall appear to him that either of these powers conferred upon him shall be necessary to be exercised no one whom I know will find the slightest cause of dissent or disapproval.

The advocates of the proposed prohibition amendment have disingenously declared that the amendment is necessary as a war measure. How fraudulent is this pretense is best understood when it is known that the amendment can not become effective until after the legislatures of three-fourths of the States shall have ratified it, and, as is known, it is hoped that the war will have been successfully fought and won and come to an end long before the proposed constitutional amendment could come into operation.

But in the meantime, that is, between the time of the passage of the amendment by Congress (if it should pass) and until its ratification or defeat, covering a period of from six to seven years, and during the time when it is most essential that there shall be unity of spirit and action among the people of our country, the apple of discord will be thrown among them and the minds of the people will be diverted from the essential subject of winning the war to a proposition which can only become operative after the war has been concluded.

Beer is the general beverage of the masses of the people of our country. Light wines are used among large groups of our people. Many of them have acquired the habit by heritage of centuries and generations. The workers—the masses—no more than others in their indulgence in beers or light wines, have found them a healthful part of their daily diet, particularly with their meals. With the cosmopolitan character of a large mass of our people, their divers habits and customs, I submit that it is neither wise, practical, nor beneficial to divide them into opposite camps upon a nonessential to the winning of the war, when its effectiveness—even if it is advantageous—could only become operative after the war is closed.

In the countries of our allies liquor—spirits, beer, and light wines—are under control and regulation. Not one of our allies has attempted either during the war or proposed thereafter to prohibit their manufacture or sale. Indeed, the regulations provide as part of the rations to the fighting men some portion of beers or light wines, and in some instances a limited quantity of spirituous liquors.

Upon the proposed constitutional amendment neither the Senate committee nor the committee of the House of Representatives having this proposed constitutional amendment under consideration has given one moment of time for the purpose of hearing those who are vitally interested in this question. Requests for hearings of those vitally and primarily interested have been disregarded, ignored, and denied. Hundreds of thousands—aye, perhaps more than two millions of wage earners—would be effected and thrown out of employment were nation-wide prohibition forced upon our people. * * *

SAMUEL GOMPERS.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend the rest of the letter in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. REAVIS. I object.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON].

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, there is all too much to justify the cynicism of the gentleman who intimated that Members of Congress are no longer controlled by considerations of political principle, but that they are influenced wholly by expediency, and that State's rights doctrines and other political principles are merely used as subterfuges to justify them in positions they wish to take. I do not fully agree with the gentleman. I believe that there are Members of this body who will not take a near cut, but who will stand by their principles even though they sacrifice themselves in so doing.

I am a prohibitionist. I have been a prohibitionist from boyhood. I have always voted for prohibition when I felt it was the legitimate thing to do. I voted for prohibition when it was a matter of local option in my county. I voted to put prohibition in the constitution of Alabama. I voted for prohibition for the District of Columbia, for Porto Rico, and for Alaska.

I am a prohibitionist, but I am also a Democrat. I hold that the right of self-government is more important than prohibition—more important than anything else in the world.

During recent months we have heard much said about democracy and about making the world safe for it. We are sending young American men by the thousands to the blood-stained fields of France to battle for democracy's cause. It is time, then, that we should analyze what is meant by the term and what ideal is expressed in it. Democracy worth fighting for is more than a mere word—a political formula—it is a real vital thing, having a moral aspect, a principle founded in justice and righteousness.

DEMOCRACY IS SELF-GOVERNMENT.

Democracy has its application to individuals as well as to communities, States, and nations. The individual has a natural right to order his own life. It is an unalienable right, coequal with the right to breathe the air, to live. It is recognized by the Declaration of Independence as among the rights of "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." Anyone who presumes to interfere with that right commits a moral wrong greater than if he had interfered with the right of property. "Whoso steals a man's liberty is more a thief than he who steals his property."

The individual's right to freedom of action is limited to such of his acts as may affect himself alone. To the extent that his acts may affect the right of another the other may interfere. Where the individual's acts affect himself and another equally both have an equal natural right to decide upon that action. This necessarily follows from the equal right of each in matters affecting himself.

Of course, it is obvious that an individual may perform few acts which do not affect others. Men's interests are so interwoven that few, indeed, are the actions which may affect single individuals alone. Men's lives are so interlocked that they must stand together or fall together and a wide stretch of imagination is required to conceive a thing which a man may do and touch no one but himself. This interrelationship, however, does not destroy the abstract principle or its application to acts if such there may be which affect alone the individual who performs them.

But to warrant another to interfere with the actions of the individual they must be such as directly and of reasonable necessity affect him. He may not indulge in remote speculations nor figure upon extreme contingencies. The democracy of individuals will not even permit that the individual's freedom of action may be restrained for his own good. Where the individual has the discretion belonging to sanity he may not be restrained merely for defective judgment, for if such might be done there is no limit to which autocrats might not go. Autocracy is necessarily indefensible, whether benevolent or otherwise, for it usurps power over men reserved to Deity itself.

The democracy of the community rests upon the same principles as the democracy of the individual, upon natural right and justice. To the extent that the community alone is affected, the individuals composing it have the natural right of unrestrained decision and action. That another community whether of greater or less enlightenment should interfere is intolerable to justice and democracy. The right of the community to govern itself is not a mere privilege. It does not exist by virtue of political agreement. Its foundation is not in custom or precedent, but it has a moral aspect springing from the very roots of man's existence.

The principles of individual and community democracy are fundamental; they are wholly applicable to aggregations of communities, and to States and nations as well. Liberty for the individual is but another phase of liberty for community and for nation. It secures the nation's right to rule itself in those things which concern itself alone.

To the same extent that the individual may rule himself, he must not impose his will upon another; and this, again, is true of communities, States, and nations. It is as violative of fundamental democracy that a nation should rule another as that the nation should not be permitted to rule itself. Democracy, then, may be said to have two aspects—the right of self-government of individuals, communities, and nations, and the denial of interference with other individuals, communities, and nations. The truly democratic nation rules itself and does not usurp dominion over its neighbors.

FUNDAMENTAL AMERICANISM.

Upon the fundamental principles of democracy Americanism itself is based and the institutions of our country have their foundation. Fundamental Americanism is the right of the people to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, which includes other principles into which it has been amplified and which are designed to secure it, such as the right of free religion, free press, and free speech, the right of the people to bear arms, to peaceably assemble themselves together, to security against unreasonable seizures and searches, and to trial by jury. All of these relate back to the fundamental right of self-government, the essence of democracy.

When we apply the principles of democracy to our form of government and to the Union of American States few difficulties are presented. We are a Union of States, of self-governing communities. These communities have organized themselves along certain lines acceptable to a majority of their members, each having the right separately to deal with certain local matters and to exercise police powers for the preservation of order, security, and the protection of home and property interests. Each of the States in consideration of admission to the Union ceded to the Federal Government certain governmental functions which otherwise the State might have exercised, but by universal practice and common consent the police powers were reserved.

For one State to dictate to another how it shall exercise the police powers reserved to itself is a gross usurpation—yea, more, it is a denial of democracy and a moral wrong more serious in its nature than the taking of property without the consent of the owner. Dictation by a number of States to a sister State is not different in its moral aspect from dictation by a single State. The compelling force is greater; that is all. By the Union of States there is a pledge of faith that each State may continue to exercise powers not granted to the Federal Government. A change in this principle constitutes a breech of faith, even though such change be wrought under forms of legality.

SELF-GOVERNMENT IS WISE AND EXPEDIENT.

In view of the different origins of the people of various sections and their consequent difference in religion, ideals, customs, and modes of thought, each community is better fitted to deal with questions concerning itself alone than is the Nation as a whole. Each community is a better judge of its own habits, manners, and moral standards. Community matters left to settlement by the majority of community opinion will be dealt with more wisely and with a better understanding. So that reasons of expediency, were it not also a matter of justice, call for local self-government in all matters of purely local concern.

These considerations apply to many questions in addition to prohibition; especially are they applicable to the exercise of the voting franchise. In some communities the harmony of the people is such that a vote may be given to every individual. In other sections such a course would disrupt its civilization. In certain localities in the Southern States the population is as much as seven-eighths colored. To give a vote to every individual in such localities would mean the reduction of its civilization to negro standards and would be harmful alike to both white and black races. In other regions of the country the population is overwhelmingly of alien ideals and birth. If each individual in such sections were given an equal voice, alien sentiments, ideals, and institutions will prevail, and what we cherish as a distinctive American civilization be extinguished.

The arguments in behalf of local self-government as most wise and expedient apply to many subjects, such as marriage and divorce, schools of mixed races, housing conditions, Sunday observance, the teaching of religion in public schools, the sale of intoxicating liquors, and many other subjects. In all this class of matters the community is best qualified to deal, and a gross mistake will be made if the National Government assumes control. The ideal for which America should strive is the solidarity of our people—not in petty things touching each community at a different angle, but solidarity in the big thing of loyalty to fundamental Americanism.

For generations the Democratic Party has steadfastly adhered to the principles and advocacy of States' rights. Declarations in favor of the protection of the rights reserved to the States and of respect for the sovereignty of the State in the exercise of powers reserved to it are to be found in every platform of the Democratic Party for 50 years and more. That the abandonment of the doctrine of States' rights should be advocated by any true Democrat at this time is grossly inconsistent. However, the right of self-government is fundamental and may not be changed or abandoned as a principle of mere political expediency. It is of the essence of democracy and may not be abandoned without turning one's back upon natural right and basic Americanism.

PROHIBITION AND DEMOCRACY.

The principle of prohibition of the sale of liquors is not violative of the democracy of the individual. The liquor traffic concerns not alone the buyer and the seller but the entire community—the entire State. Local option should be equivalent to State option, for the interests of the entire State are involved. The sale of inoxicating liquors means disorder, insecurity of the home, lawlessness, and violence. It means frightened and abused women and children, poverty, degradation, and disease. It lays its burdens upon the county poor house and orphan asylum. It is reflected in public charities and wayside beggars. It shows itself in hospitals for sick and insane. It fills jails and penitentiaries and furnishes grist for the courts. These matters touch the interests of the State as a whole, and it would be absurd to leave to the decision of the saloonkeeper and his hapless victim whether the traffic should go on; absurd to leave it to the community in which the sale is made. It is the State, which must deal with all the evils that flow out of the liquor traffic, must rescue its widows and orphans, patch up its wrecked lives, defend the innocent, and make good the ravages of this awful business. The State is the local unit which should make final decision.

The decision whether liquors should be sold belongs to the exercise of police powers. Upon the fundamental principles of the Union it is a decision belonging to each separate State. It is clearly within the powers reserved to the States under their contract with each other by which they formed the Union. It is a matter which relates to the right of the State to govern itself. If it is taken away, a denial of self-government occurs; a natural right is invaded; a moral wrong is done.

No assumption of superior wisdom or virtue upon the part of other States can justify such usurpation and denial of self-government, for in any event the smaller wrong is corrected only by committing a greater wrong, for after all human liberty is the most important thing in the world.

In some sections of the country it has been sought to leave the decision upon the sale of liquors to the option of the immediate locality. It has been argued that the citizens of the circumscribed locality where the actual sales are made should be allowed to decide upon the matter; that the few who might be in the immediate vicinity where the sales take place should alone be consulted to the exclusion of those among whom the liquors are consumed after sale, and whose peace and security are jeopardized by those who consume the liquors. A decision of such a question by only a fraction of those directly affected necessarily is undemocratic and can not be defended on grounds either of justice or expediency. Such questions are not to be decided by the village, township, or county in which sales are made. If it were possible to confine the consumption and evil effect of liquors to a restricted area, it alone should decide the issue, but such is manifestly impossible. Therefore it would seem that the larger local governmental unit, to wit, the State, is the political unit to which should be left the decision. Necessarily some middle ground should be found between the extremes of selecting the individuals who are most immediately affected by the sale of liquors for an electorate and leaving the decision to the people of the whole Nation, the vast and overwhelming majority of whom have no interest, direct or indirect, in the matter. Therefore logically it is by the people of the separate States that the decision should be made. In the nature of things a juster and wiser decision may be made by each separate State for itself than by a majority of the States for the remainder. We are not yet a homogeneous people. Our country is peopled by immigrants from various European countries and their descendants, having widely divergent social ideals, customs, and habits, each people having its own peculiar strength and virtue. Customs and laws suited to one section of the country do not find favor in others, and there is no place nor propriety in iron-bound uniformity. Therefore it would seem desirable that it should be left to each State to decide for itself matters which do not affect our whole people.

The sale of liquors in a given State can not reasonably be said to directly affect the people of a distant State; the latter have not such knowledge of local sentiment nor skill in local affairs as would qualify them to intervene. Such intervention can but result in confusion, disorder, and dissatisfaction. Prior to the adoption of the "bone-dry law," States in which the sale of liquors was legalized were enabled to endanger the safety of adjoining States for their citizens by sending liquors into adjoining States, could provoke disorder and lawlessness. The adoption of the bone-dry law, however, has ended all that. It is now as unlawful to carry liquors into a prohibition State as to manufacture them therein. The strong arm of the Federal Government is thus called into action in defense of a State's prohibition laws. It is only through the failure to enforce the Federal statute that the security of a State may be impaired.

PROHIBITION IN ALABAMA.

The results of prohibition in Alabama have been all that its advocates hoped for. It has caused great moral, spiritual, and economic advances. A few years ago, during the time of the open saloon, the jails in my home city, Birmingham, became habitually so crowded as to become dangerous to health. A new and handsome city jail was constructed and was soon filled with prisoners. Then prohibition came in and soon the number was cut in half. Since the passage of the bone-dry law the new jail has been emptied. It has now been unused for several months and recently the city authorities have tendered it to the Government for hospital purposes. The offenders in this city of 175,000 are now confined in the small prison adjoining the police court. A few days ago the coroner of my county told me that in May last we had 31 deaths from industrial accidents, sulcides, and manslaughter, and that in September last the number was reduced to 4. This resulted, as he believed, from the bone-dry law.

I have been an advocate of prohibition even from my boyhood. As a citizen I have voted for it whenever I consistently could. I voted for prohibition when it was a matter of local option in my home county. I voted for it when it was proposed to put prohibition in the Alabama constitution. As a Member of Congress I voted for prohibition for the District of Columbia, for Porto Rico, and for Alaska. I have voted for it on every occasion when I felt that it was a legitimate subject for Federal legislation. I would gladly vote to put prohibition in the Federal Constitution if my conscience and my principles did not forbid. I am a prohibitionist, but I am also a democrat. I do not mean that I am a democrat merely in the party sense, but that I am a democrat in that I am a believer in the right of self-government—in the right of every community and State to decide questions which concern themselves alone.

It is exceedingly painful to me to find myself out of harmony with so many of my friends upon the prohibition question, men with whom I have been associated in church and social life and in movements for the public welfare, and for whose views I have profound respect. Only to-day I received a telegram from my Sunday-school class urging me to vote for national prohibition. It is most embarrassing to find myself in opposition to some of the great Christian influences of the Nation—influences disinterestedly devoted to progress and to the public welfare. However, painful as it is to oppose the wishes of my friends, my conscience demands that I should remain faithful to the principles of democracy as I understand them. The future of my country depends upon the preservation of democratic principles. I can not now ignore them, even though I might approve the object sought to be achieved. I can not take this near cut and thereby establish a precedent which will greatly vex us in future.

I believe in prohibition. I look on it as a good thing, but I can not vote to force it on communities remote from my own, of which I have no specific knowledge and in which I have no particular interest. In my own State we already have prohibition. The Federal amendment will be of no benefit to us. It will merely serve to inject the prohibition issue more fully into State politics. This will be harmful to Alabama. It will delay much needed reforms and divert attention from grave public matters of more pressing concern to my State. Alabama through her legislature chose prohibition voluntarily. It was not forced upon us by other States. We accepted it deliberately, not as the result of outside dictation. I am willing to accord to the people of other States the same privilege that Alabama has asserted for herself; that is, to decide for themselves whether they will stop the sale of liquors. I should resent with all my soul any attempt upon the part of a combination of other States by amendment to the Federal Constitution or otherwise to force the liquor traffic upon the people of Alabama. Likewise I shall not take part in an effort to prohibit such traffic in other States, the people of which desire that it should continue.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, that the abuse of the use of intoxicating liquors has resulted disastrously to many persons is unquestioned. Everyone interested in the happiness of our people and in their proper physical and moral development is anxious to do everything possible to eliminate the evils that result from the abuse of intoxicating liquors. I am one of those who do not believe that by sumptuary legislation success is attained along such lines. The experience of our own country, as well as the experience of other nations, demonstrates that the attempt to control by legislation the habits of the people, in so far as they affect matters not inherently immoral, results in failure. I have as a demonstration of that fact a report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917. I have only time for brief reference to it, but it emphasizes the fact that laws prohibiting absolutely the use of intoxicating liquors have not been effective in the United States.

There were in Alabama in the year ending June 30, 1917, 374 illicit distilleries; in Georgia, 472; in Kentucky, 90; in North Carolina, whence hails the champion who leads this cause, 680; in South Carolina, 308; in Tennessee, 192; in Virginia, 299.

I do not criticize nor have I fault to find with the people of any State for adopting prohibition legislation. In my opinion it is a matter to be determined by the people of the respective States; and when the people of the States have determined that there should be no intoxicating liquors manufactured or sold within their borders, in my opinion the Federal Government has acted properly in attempting to assist those States in excluding liquors from their territory.

It is proposed, however, by a combination of persons residing in various States wherein they have not been successful in their effort to prevent the manufacture of intoxicating liquors, the abuse of which only is harmful, to impose upon the people of the entire country prohibitory regulations, to which great numbers of our people are violently opposed. In my opinion it is not a proper subject for regulation by the Constitution. If it were not that there are so many fanatical persons interested in this movement this amendment would not be in the form of prohibiting the manufacture of intoxicating liquors, but it would be in the form of conferring upon the Federal Government the right to exercise the power by legislation to prohibit the manufacture of intoxicating liquors if that were deemed necessary.

It is an unwise time to press this question. It is ill advised. The experience of Great Britain in this war already demonstrates that it would be unwise absolutely to prohibit here the manufacture of intoxicating liquors. The British Government was compelled to increase by 6,000,000 barrels the amount of beer that could be brewed for the use of those engaged in essential industries during the war.

Every Government participating to a great extent in it finds it necessary in certain industries to provide that those engaged therein shall have certain sustenance from the use of beverages containing some alcohol. Under the regulations adopted by the President it is well to recall that beer, as it can be now manufactured, containing only 2¾ per cent of alcohol, about 30 per cent of the alcohol contents of the favorite tipple of the most stringent advocate of temperance.

Mr. Speaker, I shall not be much longer a Member of this body, and yet before I go I wish to speak a word to my colleagues in the Democratic Party upon the unwisdom of such legislation as this. Our party has always been opposed to sumptuary legislation. Our party has been the one political party in all the history of the Union——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I decline to yield. It has been the one party in all of the history of the Union that has stood for the freest action on the part of the individual, consistent with law and order. Legislation designed to eliminate——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I used only 7 minutes, according to my watch, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HULBERT. That is all you had.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then I have finished. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the Congress, I have some profound convictions with reference to this amendment, and yet I can scarcely hope by an expression of them to change a single vote, for perhaps every one has already determined his own action in respect to this question. But as we are met here for the purpose of conference as well as voting, I am going to trespass upon your time for a few minutes to express those convictions.

I voted to send this article out of the committee, while not concurring in the recommendation that it be passed, because I felt that it ought not to be allowed to slumber in the committee, but ought to come forth and be discussed and acted upon by the entire House.

I do not regard the question that is presented to-day as one which involves a struggle between the wets and the drys. That has not been reached. So far as I personally am concerned, I am not classed with the wets. If this question came before my State in proper form, I might possibly do again what I have already done when a candidate coming up for election as district attorney of my city. Then I voted an open ticket in favor of prohibition. So that when I state certain views which impressed themselves upon my mind I am following the line of conscientious duty, and I wish to make an appeal to my brethren here and try to influence them to see this subject as it presents itself to me.

First, let me say there is no difficulty about the third section of this bill. I conferred a moment ago with the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], and I think that perhaps I am at liberty to say that he concurred in the view which we expressed together. The limitation here is in the article that is to be submitted and is not a separate proposition. Hence, when it is voted upon by the States and adopted it is as much a valid article and amendment to the Constitution as was the fifth article of that instrument, which itself contained a limitation as to any amendments being made with reference to slavery, or affecting the question of slavery. Congress has the power to propose amendments. That means to state them in their entirety, and it has proposed this amendment with a limitation of seven years as the period within which the legislatures may act upon it.

So much for the question of constitutionality. In my judgment it is absolutely constitutional, and I say this so that it may not be a bugaboo to any Member who wants to vote for its adoption. It is idle and unwise for us to send proposals for amendment loose upon the fabric of this Nation without some limitation. As the chairman of the committee himself said, one of them got astray and has never been heard of up to this date. But the time and the occasion when the proposal is made is when the States ought to be called upon to make their ratification or their rejection; and every time hereafter that a constitutional amendment goes forth from this House, so far as my vote is concerned, it shall have a time limit in it.

Now, gentlemen, is it not true that to-day in this country you can have prohibition in one or two ways?

As a war measure we have clothed the President of the United States with power at once not only to prevent the manufacture and distribution of distilled spirits but also to regulate and prohibit the manufacture and sale of other beverages containing alcohol. We have clothed the President also with power to guard the various cantonments where our soldiers are gathered. Within proper limitations, he can forbid all use of liquor at or near any of these places.

You have another method by which prohibition can be reached. It can be reached by every State in the Union acting upon the subject, and that is the right and the privilege of every State—to act upon this question for itself. Its neighbor has no right to say to it, "You shall prohibit within your dominion." Each State is yet a sovereignty in this Union of States, and no one sovereign State has the right to impose its will upon the other sovereign power and to say, "You shall prohibit, willy-nilly. Whether you wish it or not, it shall be done." My colleague from New York [Mr. CHANDLER] very convincingly pointed out to you how in four combinations 36 States can be obtained representing a minority of the people of this country, and by adopting this amendment they will impose their will upon the rest of the States against their wishes. When once adopted one-fourth of the States can forever prevent its repeal.

You gentlemen know that when the Constitution of the United States was adopted it was adopted by unanimity. It could not be adopted in any other way, and it could not become a document binding upon any State unless that State in particular gave its assent and approval to the instrument. That was the unanimity required, which was foreshadowed in the Articles of Confederation, which could not be altered except by the unanimous consent of the States. When these States unanimously gave to the United States certain powers they retained all the rest; and to show that that was their purpose and thought the tenth amendment to the Constitution embodies that thought specifically in words. There never was an intendment on the part of the framers of the Constitution that the States should surrender their police power over the regulation of their internal affairs, and this proposed amendment is an exact and direct evasion of that reserved power in the States and means the destruction of local self-government and the creation of illimitable officers and agencies on the part of the Government to carry out the provisions of such an amendment as this. Think of the spy system that will be inaugurated. Think of the employees that will be gathered in the effort to put this amendment into effect.

And in that connection I call your attention to section 2 of the article, which says that the United States and the States shall have concurrent jurisdiction—two sovereign powers to be exercised in company. The State may pass its legislation, may attempt to enforce the law in its way, and the United States in another way. This will not raise the question that came into being, for instance, under the bankruptcy law; for while the State may legislate on questions of bankruptcy, for instance, up to the time that Congress acts, but when Congress acts the supremacy of the United States' enactment has to be acknowledged throughout all the States; but here you have two entities, struggling one with the other, and it leads to illimitable and immeasurable confusion. It can do nothing else.

Now, my friends, it has been said that this is the only way in which to reach the people, and a whole mass of claptrap has been poured out here in the way of sentiment and suggestion about appealing to the dear people whom we are to consult. Is it consulting the people when you send this amendment to the Constitution down to the States to be voted upon by the legislators in those States? This is no direct referendum to the people. Let each State act on an amendment to its own constitution, and then you have the direct and absolute action of the people of every State. It can not be said any longer that a State has no power to enforce bone-dry prohibition within its limits because the recent legislation of Congress has given it that power, and the decision of our United States Supreme Court has declared that it can within its own borders protect itself even to the extent of excluding from interstate commerce every package of rum or other liquor that may be sent from one State into another. I raise my voice in protest against subjecting the majority of the people possibly to the will of a minority.

You may say this is a moral question, and I will grant you for the sake of argument, and for the sake of the fact I will admit that it is; but you have no right to legislate in behalf of the accomplishment of a moral reform by adopting illegal measures to accomplish your purpose. When men become fanatical in any movement they become unreasonable. Men have been known to try to make others religious by violence, by the sword and the flame. Men will not hesitate to prostitute the great Constitution of your country and trample it under foot by imposing upon it legislation of this sort which does not belong in it. There is no semblance of grant in that instrument to control this subject. This is an effort to put a policy in the fundamental law, which should only be a declaration of principles.

I verily believe that so far as the power to amend the Constitution is concerned it relates only to and ought only to be exercised upon the delegated powers unless the unanimous consent of the States is obtained in the matter of the new delegation of power. Amendment means what the word implies and should be made only to affect the delegated powers that were given to the National Government. The National Government is not a sovereignty of itself. It is the creation by the States delegating some of their powers and rights in order that it might exercise the functions of a government. [Applause.] I speak thus in obedience to my oath upon entering this body, that I would support the Constitution of my country.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COADY].

Mr. COADY. It is a pity, Mr. Speaker, that a great public question like that involved in the pending resolution, affecting as it does not only the property rights of individuals but their personal liberties as well, can not be considered in the light of reason and the experience of mankind and decided upon its merits; but it seems it can not be done.

Most measures that come before this body are debated fully and considered with the greatest deliberation; but, as a rule, when a prohibition bill is before us deliberation is thrown to the winds and we cease to be even fair. We had an illustration of this when the District of Columbia prohibition bill was before the House. The Rules Committee brought in a rule absolutely preventing the opponents of the bill from voicing their opposition to it—completely gagging them, although they knew their action meant the confiscation of property running into the hundred thousands and the denial to the owners of such property of the right to have a voice in their own affairs. Those of us who served in the Sixty-fourth Congress remember that this report was concurred in by some members of the Rules Committee who before that time had ably and consistently fought the adoption of rules limiting debate, but who on this particular occasion tamely and meekly submitted without a word of protest. It was the most arbitrary action I have witnessed here or elsewhere. It was an absolute denial of the right of a majority of the people to be heard through their elected Representative and the absolute surrender upon the part of some Members of their honest conviction that every question should receive fair consideration and its proponents and opponents given a reasonable amount of time to discuss it. It was a denial of the right of free speech. We talk about democracy and the rule of the people, but every man here knows that if this resolution passes and is ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the States it will mean the rule of the minority. The wishes of the few will prevail over the protests of the many. The great States of the Union wherein live a majority of our people, from which the Government receives an overwhelming portion of taxes, will vote against it. Gentlemen in favor of this resolution, and who come from States that have statutory, and not actual, prohibition, tell us that their States have advanced in prosperity. They have told us this so often that we began to accept it as the truth until the publication of the report by the Treasury Department of the collection of income and excess-profits taxes. This report shows than an overwhelming portion of such taxes came from those States that do not have prohibition, while those States that do have it showed surprisingly small returns. I am told that in my own city of Baltimore four or five men there paid more income and excess-profits taxes than were collected from five of these legally but not actually dry States. This proves to me that there is more real sobriety, industry, and prosperity in those parts of our country where the sale of liquor is licensed and regulated by law than in the sections where it is prohibited.

Some time ago, I received in my mail, as no doubt all other Members of this body did, a copy of a speech on prohibition delivered by a member of another legislative body before a society of New Yorkers, all of whom were former residents of a Middle West State. The speaker told of the wonderful benefits that had accrued to his State by reason of prohibition, of the great prosperity of his people, and how they were all making money. And let me say here, by way of parenthesis, that his is one of the dry States that brought so little into our National Treasury; and yet the gentleman was talking to a body of men who had left a dry State where they could not find success, and had located in a wet State where they all had achieved splendid reputations and had secured abundant prosperity.

An overwhelming majority of people of the district I represent are opposed to this resolution. They are industrious, successful, sober, law-abiding citizens—men of substance and character, broad minded, liberal, and free from cant and hypocrisy. They know that you can not make men lead clean lives and be sober by the passage of a law. They are too sensible to believe that.

The laboring people, through their accredited representatives, are protesting against the passage of this resolution, so we should be slow to antagonize the wishes of those who toil and spin to please those who neither toil nor spin because they are too busy lobbying.

Do not let us make the toilers dissatisfied, and thereby injuriously affect the industry of the country.

It will be impossible to secure a substantial enforcement of a law of this kind in those cities and States where an enlightened public sentiment prevails against it. An attempt to do this would involve the employment of thousands of Federal officers and the expenditure of large sums of the public money, without any corresponding moral benefit accruing to the people.

It is far better to license, regulate, and supervise public drinking places and get the enormous revenue that comes from such licensing than by prohibition close them and cause to spring up in their places untaxed and unregulated speak-easies, such as exists, I am told, in many of the States that have prohibition laws. [Applause.]

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON.]

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. I also yield him one minute.
Mr. WEBB. I also yield the gentleman one minute.
Mr. VOLSTEAD. I yield the gentleman one minute.
Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, on the Princess Alexandra's arrival from Denmark, Tennyson, the poet laureate, wrote:

Saxon or Dane or Norman we,
Teuton or Celt, or whatever we be,
We are each all Dane in our welcome of thee.

I am charged, as the agent of the House of Representatives, to state that within the last hour the Members have expressed a unanimous desire upon their part to extend a memorial to our departing friend in public life, the Hon. JOHN J. FITZGERALD, a memento for him to take with him of our love and respect, to the amount, when selected, of a thousand dollars. [Applause.] I can suggest to him that—

Democrats, Republicans, Progressives are we,
But we all unite in our love for thee.

We love him as a man and as a legislator. [Applause.]
One thing further. The leader of the minority, who has the respect of every man in this House, is sick at Johns Hopkins Hospital, and we have also concluded to send to him on Christmas-morning a floral tribute of our love and respect for him. [Applause.]
Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].
Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire the RECORD to indicate that I had not expressed my overwhelming gratitude for this addition to the innumerable favors I have received from my colleagues in the House. I wish to express to them my sincere thanks for this added manifestation of their kindness. [Applause.]
Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, in closing this debate I shall only be able to touch on three or four points: First, gentlemen, this is not a prohibition vote. It is a question of referendum. We had not long ago the question of a referendum, and a great many of the "wet" men in this House voted for a referendum in the District of Columbia to an unorganized electorate. Will you balk on submitting to States of the Nation this great question whether or not liquor as a beverage shall be banished from the country? Are you afraid to trust the States? The States made the Constitution, reserving to themselves the right to amend it, and that is when two-thirds of both Houses of Congress deem it necessary that an amendment should be submitted. I submit to you gentlemen, "wets" and "drys" alike, that you should be willing to stand by your States in giving them the opportunity to amend the greatest instrument ever struck off by the pen of man, and submit to the 48 sovereign States the question whether liquor as a beverage should be banished from the land. [Applause.]
Mr. DUPRÉ. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. WEBB. For a question.
Mr. DUPRÉ. How is the gentleman going to vote on the amendment for woman suffrage?
Mr. WEBB. I am going to vote against it for the same reason that I have expressed. I do not think it "necessary" to submit that amendment to the States of the Union, because there are not enough people in the various States demanding it, whereas 61,000,000 out of 95,000,000 live under the Stars and Stripes in dry territory, and 85 per cent of all that territory under the Stars and Stripes is dry. I do not believe, of course, in submitting any and all proposed amendments.
And you tell me that this Congress has the right to disregard the appeal of that number of people and that much dry territory? I have in my possession petitions signed by eight and a half million American people, 500,000 of whom are among the best women in the world, sent to me by Mrs. Anna Gordon, the head of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Why not give them a chance? If the States do not want to adopt it, you wet men are not hurt; if they want to adopt it, it certainly is your duty to submit it to them, because that is the only way in which they can change their Constitution; and, as Senator Blair said long years ago, if you do not allow the people of this Republic to amend their Constitution when they want to, it breeds revolution. It is the orderly way to amend that sacred document. I submit that when over 61 per cent of the population and 85 per cent of the area of a great country desire to amend this instrument, that opportunity should be given to them. There is no question of State rights in this proposition. It is the right of the States to have the opportunity to determine whether or not they shall vote to amend the Constitution. That is a sovereign right of which they should not be deprived, and which they provided for in that great instrument. If three-fourths of the States say that the manufacture and sale of liquor for beverage purposes shall be stopped, then it is the highest sovereign prerogative left to the States to say that, and there is absolutely no violation of State rights when that question is submitted to them in that way.
It is argued that we will lose some revenue if we pass this amendment and the States adopt it. I would rather adopt the opinions of the great judges in the license cases when they said it may be there will be a loss of revenue, but if there is a loss of revenue to this country under the banishment, the country will be a thousand times the gainer in the wealth, health, and happiness of the people. Everyone in the House knows that that is so. There is not a man, I do not care whether he takes a drink or is a prohibitionist, but knows and admits that the liquor traffic, the beer traffic, and the wine traffic are the most audacious lawbreakers in the land, the despoilers of men, and the terror of women. Think of that poor boy the other day in France, sent there with an American uniform on to defend this great country, to represent us on a foreign shore. Some low-down scoundrel sold him some liquor, some beer or wine, and made him drunk, and he went off and committed an infamous crime. When he was hauled up before the court-martial he admitted that he committed the crime, but said that he was drunk and did not know anything about it. He was told that that would not excuse him, and he was ordered to be taken out to the edge of the camp grounds and hanged in disgrace. That penalty has been ratified by the War Department, and yet that filthy scoundrel who made money on the sale of that liquor is still roaming about the shores of France ready to make criminals out of American boys whom we have sent there to defend this country.
I hope when this proposed amendment is offered to except wine and beer that you will vote it out. A man can become a drunkard on beer and wine just as he can on liquor. It was not liquor that destroyed Rome, it was wine and beer. It was not ardent spirits that threatened to destroy China, but wine, and that was what caused the emperor to order the natives to dig up the vineyards. We did not except wine and beer when we passed the law prohibiting the importation of liquors into the Indian Territory. We did not except wine and beer when we forbade the sending of intoxicants through the mail. We condemned them all. We did not except wine and beer when we prohibited the sale of intoxicants in canteens and on military reservations. All of it must stand or fall together. As the Siamese twins lived, so must the Siamese twins die. Congress did not expect wine and beer when by practically a two-thirds vote it drove liquor out of the Capital of the United States. Congress said all must go. Congress has never made any distinction between wine and beer and liquor, and I hope this Congress to-day will vote down the proposed amendment overwhelmingly. No State in the Union that has voted itself dry has ever given a place of privilege to wine and beer. They have treated intoxicants all alike. Twenty-seven States and the District of Columbia, Alaska, and Porto Rico, have all gone dry, and not a single one of them has ever excepted wine and beer and said it was all right to drink those but that they would put ardent spirits alone out of business.
Something has been said here about the war. You say we want to win this war. We are determined to do that. Here is an article from the Manufacturer's Record, one of the greatest manufacturer's and trade papers in the world, and here is what Mr. Richard H. Edmonds says about liquor, wine, and beer at this moment:

TO PRESIDENT WILSON AND THE NATION—ONE GREAT AID TO WINNING THE WAR.

If we could find labor enough to operate to advantage all the farms of the country we could produce an abundant supply of foodstuffs for ourselves and our allies.
If we could find labor enough to operate to their fullest capacity all of the coal mines of the country, there would be an ample supply of coal to meet every need of railroads, industries, and domestic use.
If we had labor sufficient to man every shipyard in the country and crowd to the utmost limit our facilities for building ships we would soon settle the world's destiny by supplying the shipping which is so essential to our own salvation and that of our allies.
If men could be found in sufficient number to operate to their utmost capacity all of the munition factories in the country we could provide materials for explosives and guns and shells, without which the war can not be won but with which we could win it.
If there were enough men available, working regularly and earnestly, to crowd to their capacity our iron and steel plants we could produce all the iron and steel needed for ourselves and for our allies and make certain that there would be no shortage in steel shipbuilding material and in the iron and steel needed for guns, for railroads, and for other purposes.
If labor in sufficient quantity could be had every wooden shipbuilding yard in the country would be abundantly supplied with the lumber needed for building wooden ships—and these wooden ships may yet prove a deciding factor in the war.
If labor in sufficient quantity could be had for all the other varied activities of the Nation's life, every interest—agricultural, manufacturing, and other lines of work essential to the winning of the war—could be run to its utmost capacity and be made to produce an abundant supply of the materials needed for feeding and clothing the Nation, for feeding the live stock of the country, for increasing the food supplies and for doing the other things without which the world must inevitably drag through years of weary and at times despondent conditions.

How shall this labor supply be secured and thus the end of the war be hastened and our success made certain? The answer is simple.

This labor supply can be had almost to the full extent needed. In potentiality it is here, but it is not being utilized, except to a limited extent. On the farm and in the factory there is a vast amount of inefficiency and lack of ability for regular, systematic work. And this condition, which directly militates against the Nation's ability to fight and to feed itself and the allies, is due to the inefficiency produced by the liquor traffic.

Banish the entire liquor industry from the United States for the duration of the war; close every saloon, every brewery; rigorously and vigorously enforce the laws; suppress drinking by severe punishment to the drinker; and, if necessary, death to the seller or maker, or both, as traitors, and the Nation would suddenly find itself amazed at its efficiency and startled at the vast increase in its labor supply. Shipyards would teem with work. Iron and steel and munition industries and coal mines would vastly increase their output. The production of food would almost instantaneously leap forward, and the Nation would suddenly find itself buoyantly optimistic and dominant.

Against such a Nation Germany would struggle in vain. The end of the war would be hastened by many months; perhaps by some years. Our triumphant success would be made certain. Hundreds of thousands of lives and billions of money would be saved.

No intelligent man looking over the situation will question the truth of these statements, for every intelligent man, be he in public life or a day laborer, a mechanic or an employer, will at once admit that the curse of the liquor traffic is the greatest power that holds us back. It is a weight tied around our neck. It is like the chain of the convict which drags the heavy ball as slowly he moves, with his efficiency lessened and his power to do things decreased.

Let us cut loose from the ball and chain of the convict! Let us throw off the weight that hangs around the neck of the Nation! Let us banish, as a war measure, the entire liquor traffic and make the punishment against the drinker and the seller and the maker of alcoholic drinks so severe as to make certain that the punishment will prevent the crime. Then this Nation will go forward in its work with a song of victory on its lips. Millions of mothers and fathers will feel that the Nation has met the challenge, and they will give their sons to the battle feeling that, at least, the Nation is not doing the utmost in its power to damn their bodies and their souls by its upholding of the liquor traffic.

If there were no higher motives than that of efficiency, if there were no higher motive than that of hastening the end of the war, surely President Wilson and his advisers must be ready to meet this issue and force it to a final conclusion. No halfway measure will accomplish the results. Banish from the land every saloon, every brewery and every open or hidden producer of alcoholic drinks; stand before the firing squad every maker or seller of alcoholic drinks during the war, and then victory will be certain and hastened.

Is the Nation ready to meet the issue?

Every interest of the Nation and of the world demands the closing of every saloon and the total prohibition of the manufacture of alcoholic drinks during the war. The liquor interests have protested in times past that prohibition would throw out of employment many thousands of hands. To-day the country needs millions of hands, and every man who is now operating in breweries or distilleries or standing behind the saloon bar could be turned into employment of benefit rather than be kept in an employment which is a curse.

The liquor interests have protested that the farmers of the country would be injured by the elimination of their use of grains. To-day the world is facing a serious shortage of foodstuffs, and every bushel of grain that can be saved for food for man and beast is an essential factor in the world's salvation. Every bushel wasted in producing alcoholic drinks is a moral and economic loss.

Even the breweries and the distilleries and the saloons could be turned into profitable operation for other things. Increased cold storage is needed and larger production of ice is necessary. Munition making must go on in many places not now available. There will be a great increase in the demand for house room for the laborers drawn into shipbuilding, munition making, and other industries. To-day the Government is calling in vain for houses for the munition men that must be put to work in the great cities of the country in these war activities. Every building now used for a saloon could be utilized for a dwelling or for some business purpose.

If we should entirely disregard the moral issue involved and figure on this matter purely from the economic standpoint in regard to the winning of the war, every argument is in favor of wiping out the entire liquor traffic and banishing every saloon from the land.

We are wasting annually $2,000,000,000 or more in drink, but that is only a small portion of the actual waste. This accursed drinking habit is largely responsible for the number of men in jails and penitentiaries and almshouses. It curtails the working power of men needed to build ships, to make munitions, to operate the iron and steel works and the coal mines of the country, and to make possible an increased food production. The $2,000,000,000 or more actually expended for liquor is a very small item compared with the fearful cost of lessened efficiency of labor on the farm, in the factory, in the office, in the countingroom, and wherever men are engaged in work.

Banish from the Nation every grog shop, every brewery, every distillery; prevent the sale of the whisky that now is in store, at least until the end of the war, and there would come a tremendous increase in the Nation's power to prepare for the war and to carry the war to a successful issue.

We talk about shortage of railroad transportation, and this is vital, and should receive the Nation's attention. We talk about the lack of foodstuffs; this, too, is vital, and every effort should be made to increase the production of food. We talk about the lack of ships, upon which the life of this Nation and the life of other nations hang. But none of these things can be adequately developed so long as the liquor traffic holds sway and so large a proportion of the people who ought to be steadily at work are wasting their time, their bodies, and their souls in the saloon.

Will President Wilson lead the Nation in this, the great, supreme issue before the country for the winning of the war by the development of our economic strength, even if we should be so recreant to our responsibility as to forget the great moral issue involved?

SHALL THE GOVERNMENT CUT OUT LIQUOR AND RACE-HORSE TRAFFIC AND PRIVATE CARS TO SAVE TRANSPORTATION FOR NECESSARY THINGS?

The following letters to Judge Lovett, chairman of the War Industrial Board, will, we believe, meet the approval of all right-thinking people:

NOVEMBER 21, 1917.

Hon. R. S. LOVETT,
Chairman War Industries Board, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR JUDGE LOVETT: I inclose an editorial from last week, suggesting that in view of the importance of curtailing shipments of nonessential things, the Government should forbid the handling by rail of whisky and beer, or of the materials which enter into their manufacture or distribution.

Shortly after writing the editorial I walked out of my office door and saw a big two-horse wagon loaded to the limit with packages of whisky bound for the express office.

You are curtailing, and properly so, the handling of nonessential things by rail in this time of stress, and you are, of necessity, practically cutting out the handling of materials for road and street building, as vital as these are to the best interest of the country, because of the importance of handling coal ahead of them.

Our railroad facilities are heavily overtaxed, and it is not possible to catch up for years to come with inadequate transportation facilities. In an emergency such as this, every carload of materials which enter into the production of alcoholic drinks, and every carload of alcoholic drinks which is shipped, is taking up the facilities of transportation so sadly needed for other things, and is carrying wherever such shipments go a curse rather than a blessing. Is it not, therefore, absolutely incumbent upon your board to forbid the handling of alcoholic drinks or the materials used for the manufacture of them during this war period?

It is also understood that you will shortly have to issue a list of things which can not be shipped by rail because of the lack of facilities. Surely the first on the list of prohibited things should be alcoholic drinks and the material used for their manufacture.

I can not feel that the Government could, under any possible conditions, forbid the handling of things which enter into ordinary trade and commerce of the country, and yet permit the shipment of alcoholic drinks.

In this connection I am taking the liberty of inclosing herewith an editorial from the Manufacturers Record of November 15, headed "Will the Government officials who have the power in the scarcity of transportation refuse all transportation of the liquor interests in order to conserve transportation and increase the Nation's efficiency?" I trust you will do me the favor to read this presentation of the matter.

Very truly, yours,

RICHARD H. EDMONDS, Editor.

NOVEMBER 22, 1917.

Hon. ROBERT S. LOVETT,
Chairman War Industries Board, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR JUDGE LOVETT: Referring to my letter of yesterday, calling attention to the desirability of shutting off the transportation of alcoholic drinks and the materials of which they are made, on account of the inadequate transportation facilities of the country, I beg to inclose an editorial from this week's issue, in which I have published the letter which you kindly sent me in regard to highways.

May I add to yesterday's suggestion the desirability of shutting off the transportation of race horses? Many cars are being used in carrying race horses and race-track gamblers from place to place, a business which, with the liquor traffic, is a curse to the Nation.

Permit me also to raise the question as to whether the handling of private cars, merely because men are able to own private cars, is not against the best interests of the country at present. A few days ago, on a train crowded almost to suffocation with travelers, the private car of a race-horse owner was connected to the train, and this car was occupied by the owner and his wife, and yet the power of the engine was used to pull this heavy car simply for the accommodation of two people, while others were crowded in inadequate accommodations furnished by the railroad. I recognize the fact that these private cars are owned by the men who travel in them, and that they are paying adequate transportation to the railroad, but they are taking up transportation facilities which the public needs.

A few days ago, while many people were standing in line at the depot of the electric line between Baltimore and Camp Meade, trying to send small packages to the soldiers at the camp, and the cars were overcrowded with passengers and freight, there were other cars standing on the track loaded with race horses being shipped from one race-track gambling place to another race-track gambling place. I believe that it is hardly necessary to suggest that at this time the use of private cars or of cars for handling race horses or the liquor traffic is an imposition upon the country.

While I know that railroad officials have been compelled, to a large extent, to use their private cars for business purposes, making these private cars moving offices, I am inclined to think that a considerable amount of this could be cut out, and that many officials who now travel in their private cars could have secretaries with them in the drawing-rooms of the regular Pullmans, and thus economize in fuel and transportation power. Moreover, it is an unfortunate fact that many of these officials use their private cars for pleasure trips, and the visitor to Florida in the winter time will find a string of private cars at nearly every resort place; some owned by railroad officials, some by men and women abundantly able to own such cars. In peace times there can not be any question as to the propriety of the use of private cars by those who are able to have them and to pay the heavy tolls which they now have to pay to railroads for handling these cars, but is there not a serious question as to the wisdom of permitting any of these private cars to be used in this period of tremendous emergency, when every ton of coal that can be saved must be saved, and when every ounce of strength of the railroads to do business must be conserved?

I can imagine that when consideration has once been given to the question of using transportation facilities for the handling of race horses and race-horse equipment and for the handling of the liquor traffic, there can not be any doubt whatever as to the decision of your board in cutting out these things and also in cutting out the use of private cars, except where absolutely essential for public business.

Very truly, yours,

Following up the editorial in last week's issue, urging that in order to win the war by increasing the efficiency of labor for the farm and the factory and the battle field, the Nation should as a war measure adopt prohibition of the manufacture and the sale of all alcoholic drinks, the editor of the Manufacturers Record sent to Judge Lovett, chairman of the War Industries Board, the foregoing letters, calling upon the board representing the Government to forbid the transportation of any materials which enter into the production of alcoholic drinks or the handling of the finished product.

The adoption by the Government of these suggestions would immediately cut out the vast amount of coal which is now used by breweries, at a time when millions are finding it difficult and many of them finding it impossible to secure coal for domestic use, and even Government industries absolutely necessary to produce munitions of war are unable to secure the full supply of coal needed.

Every ton of coal that goes into the manufacture of alcoholic drinks is thus doubly a curse to the Nation, and we do not believe that President Wilson or his advisers can possibly in the light of this situation fail to have the courage to shut off from every brewery the use of coal.

This would save transportation and it would save coal. The handling of the raw material which goes into the manufacture of alcoholic drinks would be saved, and this vast amount of foodstuffs and feedstuff could be used for other purposes. The men at the plants now used for manufacturing kegs and barrels and bottles and all of the other things which enter into the production of alcoholic drinks would be saved, and every one of these plants is needed for other purposes, and every man engaged in them is needed elsewhere in work for the Nation's safety, while now every man thus engaged is working directly against the Nation's safety.

Moreover, the use of transportation for such purposes in this time of terrific crisis is a crime, when many things that are needed for life of the individual and of the Nation must be delayed or completely shut off because of the lack of cars and locomotives.

We are also using railroads for the shipping of race horses from one race track to another, and shipping the materials needed for the maintenance of these race horses, and wasting the transportation of the gamblers who run from one place to another. Cut it all out if the Government wants to be honest with the people of the country. Let us not talk about cutting down transportation by reducing the number of passenger trains and shutting out the handling of nonessential things until we have shut out the handling of race horses and all the paraphernalia connected with race-track operations, and until we have shut out the handling of whisky and beer and everything that enter into their manufacture, sale, and distribution. These are not essential industries. They are indeed handicaps to the winning of the war. The complete closing down of these interests would tremendously increase the efficiency of the Army and of the men engaged on farms and in factories in producing the things without which we can not possibly win the war. Moreover, they would take out of this destructive business at least half a million men who could immediately find work in constructive operations.

From all parts of the country the Manufacturers Record has received enthusiastic commendation of the position which it took last week on this question.

The issue has been squarely put before the Government. It is now up to the people of the whole country to actively and aggressively urge the matter upon the President and the war board.

HOW DOES THE GOVERNMENT STAND ON THE USE OF COAL AND TRANSPORTATION FOR BREWERIES AND RACE-TRACK HORSES IN VIEW OF THE ACUTE SITUATION OF COAL AND RAILROAD FACILITIES?

A dispatch from New Orleans published in the daily papers on November 30 said:

"Five thousand persons were on hand for the opening of the winter racing season at New Orleans. Winners at the new Shrewsbury track were: Lady Eileen, Pilsen, Phochion, Runes, Cliff Field, and Libyan Sands."

Here were 5,000 people and all the paraphernalia connected with their transportation attending a winter racing meet at New Orleans. Every ton of coal that was used in carrying these people, every pound of material used that lessened the supply of things needed for the war was an absolute waste. More than that, it was a curse to the country. Had this racing season at New Orleans been the only one in the country it would have been bad enough, but at other places where race-track gambling is permitted similiar conditions exist, and the coal and other materials so sadly needed by the country were being consumed in order to permit the horse-race gambling to be carried on.

The Manufacturers Record called attention last week to the fearful waste of coal for the running of breweries and lessening transportation now so badly needed and also lessening the supply of food and foodstuffs.

Bearing on the same question is an interesting letter from F. A. Churchill, of the Dunn Wire-Cut Lug Brick Co., Conneaut, Ohio, a copy of which Mr. Churchill sends us. It was addressed to Judge Lovett, chairman, Priority Shipments, War Industries Board, Washington, and is as follows:

CONNEAUT, OHIO, November 26, 1917.

Hon. ROBERT S. LOVETT,
Chairman Board of Priority, Council of National Defense,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In your letter to the Manufacturers Record, Baltimore, explaining Order No. 2, relating to road materials, you say:

"We are forced to a choice between highway material and coal essential for war industries and domestic and other essential uses.

"I trust that you will not misconstrue as disrespectful the query: Does Order No. 2 apply as well to material used in paving the road to hell? In other words, are fuel and grains for the use of breweries and distilleries classified as essential? Does Order No. 2 design to curtail the use of cars for shipping the products of breweries and distilleries as a means of expediting the transportation of fuel and material needed by war industries?

"Breweries are using enormous quantities of coal and grain, yet the patriotic people of this country are stinting themselves in food, and in many sections they are suffering actual discomfort from lack of coal.

"I learn from the newspapers that the public schools at Dayton, Ohio, may be forced to close on account of coal shortage, although brewery side tracks are filled with cars loaded with coal.

"As I have seen no report touching the brewery phase of the transportation problem I take the liberty of asking a few questions for the information of an important industry:

"(1) Are manufacturers of road materials placed on exactly the same plane as breweries and distilleries with respect to coal supply and cars for shipping products?

"(2) While the people everywhere are cheerfully denying themselves food in order to conserve the national supply, is any restriction put upon breweries and distilleries as regards the consumption of grain?

"(3) Is the freight congestion on railroads aggravated to any extent by shipment of fuel or grain to breweries and distilleries or by shipment of beer or fermented liquors from such institutions?

"In the most respectful spirit I submit the foregoing questions, and not only I individually, but thousands of men affiliated with a great industry would appreciate answers from you.

"I am not a temperance fanatic. I write as a man engaged in a business which is sorely hit by Order No. 2.

"I can not conceive it possible that the Federal Government would discriminate against road material and put in the preferential class the coal and grain and beer and liquor of breweries and distilleries; nor can I believe that the Government would withhold coal from schools, churches, hospitals, homes, and legitimate industries, or lay an embargo upon cars for shipping road materials, and at the same time allow wide latitude to breweries and distilleries.

"I have heard of no breweries shutting down because of lack of coal or transportation facilities, but I know of plants engaged in making road materials having to shut down because of fuel shortage and car shortage for shipment of products. I know of other plants preparing to shut down for the same reason.

"No true American hesitates to make any necessary sacrifice, even the supreme sacrifice, if need be; but sacrifices forced by discrimination are a different thing.

"I beg to assure you that I write for information rather than for the purpose of criticism, and I know that if your answer is what confidence in the wisdom and fairness of my Government assures me it ought to be, it will strengthen the patriotic resolution of an industrial army of men to bear with fortitude the ills of the emergency measures of war."

Yours, very truly,

F. A. CHURCHILL.

The statements made by Mr. Churchill demand consideration of the country. He points out the fact, as we have recently done, in regard to the scarcity of coal and shortage of transportation, and he says that while brewery sidetracks at Dayton, Ohio, are filled with cars loaded with coal the public schools of that city may be forced to close on account of lack of coal.

We do not believe that the Government can get away from a question which has been put squarely up to it in regard to cutting out the entire brewery business and the handling of transportation of alcoholic liquors of all kinds as a war measure. Unless the Government cuts this business entirely out of all transportation and out of the use of coal it can have no moral right to cut out transportation of anything else on earth or to require the closing of any plant for lack of fuel.

The production of coal, of foodstuffs, of iron and steel and other things needed for the war and the building of ships is greatly hampered by the fact that many of the men working in these industries have their efficiency lessened by much drinking. There can be no possible argument in favor of permitting the continuation of the whisky and brewery business when transportation and coal and foodstuffs are all so short. The use of these materials or of transportation for the production or the handling of beer or alcoholic drinks of any kind is now a criminal waste which President Wilson and his advisers can not overlook. If the Government will cut this business entirely out, purely as a war measure, leaving, if need be, to the future the question of the moral issue, it will be rendering humanity a service of inestimable value.

Bearing on the use of coal and transportation, when both are acutely short, for the production of beer, Mr. E. D. Leach, the assistant State fuel administrator of Ohio, is quoted as saying:

"If the Lusitania were now floating the seas, the coal used annually in the manufacture of beer in this country would furnish fuel for 726 round trips for the giant ship and transport 23,595,000 tons of supplies to the allies.

"Coal used for the manufacture of beer in Ohio alone would furnish more than 60 round trips and carry nearly 2,000,000 tons of supplies a year.

"It requires 180,000 cars of coal, or 3,000 trains, to move the raw material to the breweries.

"We have heard a great deal about the grain in the beer and about the sugar in the beer, but we have heard little about the coal in beer.

"Coal is one of the principal ingredients. It takes almost exactly a pound of coal to produce a pint of beer.

What is to be the Government's stand in the light of the facts presented as to the criminal waste of fuel or food material and of transportation? Dr. Garfield is urging that in private homes, on street cars, and in many other ways fuel should be saved to the utmost extent, but we have not yet seen any direct statement from Dr. Garfield insisting that the supply of fuel to the breweries shall be cut out. Judge Lovett issued an order cutting out practically all transportation of materials for building highways and streets, things which are absolutely essential to the welfare of the country, and more essential in war times than in peace. But we have not seen that Judge Lovett has refused the use of cars for handling coal to breweries, the use of cars for race-track horses, or the use of cars for the materials which enter into the manufacture of beer, or the use of cars for the distribution of beer and whisky.

President Wilson has rightly appealed to the Nation for increased production of everything which enters into the maintenance of the war, from foodstuffs to ships, and also the cutting down to the greatest extent possible of the consumption of foodstuffs. But we have not yet noticed that President Wilson has taken a definite stand on the cutting out of the manufacture and the handling and the distribution of all brewery and other alcoholic products.

Where does the Government propose to stand on these great economic measures, even if we disregard for the time the moral issue involved?

HOW LABOR SUPPLY CAN BE INCREASED, VICTORY IN WAR HASTENED, AND HUNDREDS OF THOUSANDS OF SOLDIERS KEPT FROM DEATH AND BILLIONS OF MONEY SAVED.

We face a great shortage of pig iron, indeed a famine, with consumers eagerly scrambling for iron without finding an adequate supply.

We have a coal famine upon us, with schools, churches, domestic consumers, industrial plants, and iron furnaces unable to secure supplies equal to their immediate pressing needs.

We have a wood famine, and with vast forests of timbers available it is difficult at times to secure even a supply of kindling wood regardless of price.

Our food production is wholly inadequate to our own needs, and farm labor is inadequate to increase the output sufficient to meet the urgent call for grain and meat.

Transportation facilities by rail and water and highway have practically collapsed as measured by the needs of the time, and billions must be expended to increase transportation, or else all other things that we do will be in vain.

The world's shipping has been submarined to a fearful extent, and the ships that have escaped this hell-devised weapon of murder are being overstrained and overworked.

We must build ships to the utmost stretch of our power regardless of cost.

We must push iron and coal production to the last limit of our capacity, and to do this new coal and ore mines must be opened, new furnaces built, new coke ovens constructed, and existing plants must be crowded even to the danger point of overwork that the present situation may be relieved.

Shipbuilders are calling for timber and steel and laborers; the world is begging for more food and must keep on pleading for meat and bread long after the war has ended. Coal mines are short of labor, furnaces and steel works and lumber yards are hampered for lack of labor. Civilization and our existence as a free Nation hang in the balance for lack of labor.

An ample supply of labor working regularly and efficiently would solve every problem of increased coal output, of more rapid shipbuilding, and of larger food production, and would greatly help to settle the labor question as it affects the expansion of transportation facilities.

There is a way in which this labor problem can to a very large extent be solved to the enormous benefit of the laborers, to the increased efficiency of everything that makes for the welfare of the Nation, to the protection and safeguarding of our soldiers, and to our ability to win the war.

To fail to use such means would be an unspeakable crime against our soldiers; it would mean the unnecessary death of hundreds of thousands who otherwise would be saved, the expenditure of many billions more than would be needed if we should adopt this measure; it would mean the lengthening of the war and privations in the way of lessened food and fuel for a hundred million people.

Has the Nation the courage to meet the issue?

Dare the President and his advisers and Congress refuse to do that which would mean so much for humanity, while the failure to do it would be a crime against Heaven and earth?

The solution of the problem is to be found in national prohibition of the manufacture, sale, and distribution of alcoholic drinks of every kind as a necessary war measure.

This would save $2,000,000,000 to $3,000,000,000 now wasted in drink.

It would vastly increase the efficiency and regularity of work.

It would destroy the power for evil of the German-owned saloon, the hotbed of anti-American and antiwork activities, and it would turn hundreds of thousands of drink-cursed hells into blessed homes of sobriety and honesty.

It would cut out the enormous amount of fuel and other materials used in the manufacture of beer.

It would save the transportation of beer and beer-making materials and whisky for the needs of industry, now sadly hampered by lack of transportation.

It would provide half a million or more able-bodied workers for essential things instead of permitting them to curse the Nation as at present with employment which makes for the death of soldiers, decreased output of food, ships' iron and steel, and coal, and everything that is essential.

On one side stands national efficiency to the highest degree, on the other drunkenness, inefficiency, delays in war, and the utmost power of pro-German activities to bring death and defeat to our armies.

Federal reports show that there are nearly 200,000 concerns in the United States, including drug stores, that are licensed to sell liquors. There are about 46,000 drug stores. This would leave, in round numbers, about 150,000 concerns licensed by the National Government in the country. It is safe to estimate that there are 300,000 men engaged in saloons and hotel barrooms. In 1914 there were more than 70,000 wage earners, not counting employers and salaried men, engaged in the production of liquors. If to this number we should add the men employed in the manufacture of barrels and kegs and bottles and other materials that enter into the production and the handling of liquors it is easily seen that the number of men thus engaged must exceed 500,000.

Every man thus employed could find work in some other line which would be useful to the country.

Here is a drain of 500,000 men, and of all the influences connected with their work, which is a direct and deadly power against national efficiency and national production to meet war needs.

Every saloon in existence is a use of property which could be better employed for some other purpose in the interest of the country.

Every man and woman connected with the trade in all its wide ramifications could become a producer of things needed for the winning of the war rather than a producer or a handler of things which minimize our power to carry on war.

Will the Nation face this issue squarely, and while drafting men for the Army and calling upon men for shipyards and for all other activities for the war, permit more than half a million men to continue to operate industries which specifically and to a tremendous extent lessen the efficiency of all the other working forces of the country? If looked at purely as a war measure, from the economic standpoint, and entirely without regard to the moral issue, the Nation will be guilty of criminal shortcoming if it fails to cut out the entire liquor traffic—brewery and saloon interests.

Where do you stand, business man, laboring man, politician, statesman, Congressman, Mr. President?

WHAT GEN. PERSHING SAYS.

There was a time when it was a natural part of a soldier's existence to drink and carouse. That day is past, with the soldier sworn to defend his country's flag and representing the power and dignity of the Nation. Strong muscles, clear brains, high ideals in the soldier increase the fighting efficiency of the army, and these qualities of the citizen insure the permanency of our institutions.

Gentlemen, I want you to listen to this:

Banish the entire liquor industry from the United States for the duration of the war; close every saloon, every brewery; rigorously and vigorously enforce the law; suppress drinking by severe punishment to the drinker, and, if necessary, death to the seller or maker, or both, as traitors, and the Nation would suddenly find itself amazed at its efficiency and startled at the vast increase in its labor supply.

Mr. Speaker, we are now fighting a number of great enemies. We are fighting Germany and Austria; but my opinion is that the most stealthy and dangerous enemy to our country during the war is the liquor traffic. For God's sake, gentlemen of the House, let us not go through what England has had to go through on this question. This is what Lloyd George said, and I believe he is an authority of the British Empire. Here is what he said:

We are fighting Germany, Austria, and drink, and, as far as I can see, the greatest of these three deadly foes is drink.

[Applause.]

It is true there, and it is true in this country.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. I am sorry, but I can not yield. I would yield if I had the time. Mr. Speaker, the American people, the Prohibitionists, the Christian people of all sections of this country were never more united and determined in their effort to drive the liquor traffic from the face of our fair land. Never was the Roman war cry "Delenda est Carthago!" more ceaseless and remorseless than that of the American Christian and temperance people that the saloons must be destroyed, and I hope to-day's epochal vote will be the beginning of its destruction. [Applause.]

Drunken orgies undermined the character and stability of the Roman people and made them easy prey for the Goths and Vandals. We are determined by the help of God that intoxicating liquors shall not undermine and destroy our people so that they will become a prey to German domination.

For more than half a century Bacchus has held wide sway in the United States, but during recent years the temperance people, including the brave and godly women, have awakened to the horror of his infernal reign.

We have learned that alcohol causes the death of more than 66,000 human beings in our country every year.

We have learned that alcohol is a poison which paralyzes the white blood corpuscles, giving pneumonia and tuberculosis almost a free hand in their remorseless attack upon a drinking man.

We have learned that the burden of drink is not borne by the drunkard, but by the drunkard's children, and that there are in the United States 7,000,000 deficient school children, and less than 67,000 of these are free from hereditary alcoholic taint.

With these facts before him a great thinker has cried out, "We must settle the alcohol question within the next 10 years, or some more virile nation will write the epitaph of this Republic."

We have learned that liquor and the liquor traffic are the greatest crime breeders known since the dawn of civilization and that 80 per cent of the inmates of our penitentiaries were imprisoned entirely or partly on account of intoxicating liquors.

We have learned that the principal agency by which tens of thousands of girls are led astray in this country every year is liquor and the liquor traffic.

We have learned that the greatest "cause of commercialized vice is the use of intoxicating liquors."

Will not these astounding revelations affect mankind? Will not hearts of adamant turn to flesh once more when they think of the thousands of girls lured to their ruin; thousands of homes disgraced and in mourning for the lost child, gone out from the parental roof never to return, garnered in the arms of Bacchus and buried in living, though forgotten, graves?

The thinking people of this country have come to agree with the great Gladstone's statement that the drink traffic has caused more suffering, misery, and death than all the famines, pestilences, and wars during the nineteenth century.

We have learned the truth of Judge Harlan's written opinion, that the idleness, disorder, pauperism, and crime existing in the country are largely traceable to the general use of intoxicating liquors.

We have learned the truth of a great editor's assertion when he said, "Whisky finds a man full of hope and courage and confidence in himself. It finds him with friends, receiving and giving affection, and one by one it takes these things from him. Have you seen a buzzard picking the skeleton of a horse? Whisky does its work as vilely and as thoroughly as does the meanest buzzard. Bit by bit it picks from the man all that is worth while."

Little wonder is it, therefore, that Bob Ingersoll in one of his reflective moments should have cried out, "I do not believe anybody can contemplate the object without being prejudiced against the liquor crime."

Who defends this traffic? The man who makes money out of it and the man who wants to raise revenue from it. But I submit that no person has the moral right to engage in this man-killing business, much less has he any right to profit by it. And, as to the revenue, when the whole business is swept away our country, in the language of the great opinion of the Supreme Court in the license cases, will be the gainer a thousandfold in the health, wealth, and happiness of her people.

With all the unanswered indictments against the liquor traffic before us tell me why one cancerous root of it should be left anywhere within our national confines.

I am filled with unspeakable happiness when I realize that we now have the traffic driven back to its last trench, surrounded in only 12 per cent of our national area, and I am praying that one more drive will result in ending the business on our shores forever.

The prohibitionists, and that includes practically all the great church and allied organizations, are fully alive to the evils of alcoholism and were never more aggressive, active, and determined in their united efforts to destroy the liquor traffic.

During one of the great battles fought by Mahomet, the flag was shot from the ramparts. A daring and devoted soldier immediately seized it with his right hand and held it back on the rampart. Immediately his right arm was shot off, but, never faltering, he seized the flag with his left hand, and that, too, was instantly shot away, whereupon with his bleeding stubs he held the emblem in its place until victory came.

With a zeal and a determination akin to that which animated this devotee of the great Mahomet, let us wage a ceaseless battle and never sheathe our swords until our constitutional amendment is firmly adopted and the white banner of real effective prohibition proudly floats over every courthouse and city hall throughout this the greatest Nation on earth.

America is the pioneer in the modern war on the liquor traffic, so let us continue this great crusade until the last vestige of the evil-born business shall have been swept away forever, and then we shall have "blazed out the path and made clear the way up which all the nations of the earth must come in God's own appointed time." [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SECTION 1. The manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes is hereby prohibited.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

On page 1 after section 1, strike out the word "The" and insert the words "after one year from the ratification of this article the," so that the section as amended will read:

"SECTION 1. After one year from the ratification of this article the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors, etc."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, strike out sections 2 and 3 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 2. The Congress and the several States shall have concurrent power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

"SEC. 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress."

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. REAVIS. May we have a division of the vote on sections 2 and 3?

The SPEAKER. If anybody demands it.

Mr. REAVIS. Well, I demand it, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the first section of the amendment just read, which is:

SEC. 2. The Congress and the several States shall have concurrent power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the second proposition in the amendment, which is:

SEC. 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. STEELE: Insert after line 17 the following:

"SEC. 4. Any State may recall its rejection or ratification of this amendment at any time before three-fourths of the States have actually ratified the same."

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LEA of California: Amend by adding at the end of section 1 the following:

"Provided, This section shall not apply to wines containing not more than 14 per cent of alcohol or to beer containing not more than 3 per cent of alcohol, the power to permit, regulate, and prohibit the manufacture, use, and sale of which is reserved to the separate States."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. CALDWELL. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 107, noes 232.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

So the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. SABATH, Mr. STAFFORD, Mr. NORTON, and Mr. WEBB demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 282, nays 128, not voting 23, as follows:

YEAS—282.

So (two-thirds having voted in the affirmative) the resolution was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas and Mr. MILLER of Washington (for) with Mr. TAGUE (against).

Mr. NEELY and Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska (for) with Mr. GALLIVAN (against).

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado and Mr. GEORGE W. FAIRCHILD (for) with Mr. CURRY of California (against).

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. MORGAN rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Oklahoma rise?

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to make a statement relative to my colleague, Mr. CHANDLER. I understand that he left the city, believing that he had a pair, but that through some misunderstanding the pair has been declared off. If he were present, he would have voted for the resolution.

Mr. NORTON rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from North Dakota rise?

Mr. NORTON. I move that the vote by which the resolution was carried be reconsidered and that that motion be laid on the table.

Mr. WEBB rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from North Carolina rise?

Mr. WEBB. If under the rules it is necessary or permissible, I would like to make a motion to reconsider the vote and to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the motion will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. NORTON. I made the same motion.

Mr. EAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a statement in regard to my colleague, Mr. SCULLY. He was unavoidably detained. If present, he would have voted against the resolution.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. CAPSTICK, telegraphed me this morning to pair him against this resolution. We were unable to get a pair.

Mr. COOPER of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. NEELY, was unavoidably detained. If he had been present, he would have voted "yea."

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to announce that if my colleague, Mr. LAGUARDIA, had been present he would have voted "no" on the resolution.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I had a telephone message from the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. GALLIVAN, asking me to state to the House that if he were present he would have voted "nay" on the resolution.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE—EMPLOYEES IN THE STATE DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying documents, was ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

To the SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES:

I transmit herewith a detailed report by the Secretary of State showing the number of persons employed in the Department of State, the grades or character of positions, the original rates of compensation, and the increased rates of compensation provided in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act of March 3, 1917.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, 17 December, 1917.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message in writing, from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed, on December 15, 1917, bill of the following title:

An act (H. R. 7572) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolutions:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Tuesday, the 18th of December, 1917, they stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian of Thursday, the 3d day of January, 1918.

Also, joint resolution (H. J. Res. 193) authorizing the payment of salaries of officers and employees of Congress for December, 1917:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives are authorized and instructed to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives, including the Capitol police, their respective salaries for the month of December, 1917, on the day of adjournment of the present session for the holiday recess; and the Clerk of the House is authorized to pay on the same day to Members, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners their allowance for clerk hire for the said month of December.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. J. Res. 193. Joint resolution authorizing the payment of salaries of officers and employees of Congress for December, 1917.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled joint resolution of the following title:

S. J. Res. 114. Joint resolution extending the commission provided for in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1917, with the same authorities, powers, and provisions until on or before March 1, 1918.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following joint resolution:

H. J. Res. 193. Joint resolution authorizing the payment of salaries of officers and employees of Congress for December, 1917.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absense was granted as follows:

To Mr. NEELY, for one week, on account of important business;

To Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas, one week, on account of important business;

To Mr. BLANTON, for 10 days, on account of important business; and

To Mr. GEORGE W. FAIRCHILD, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this morning, when the first request for extension of remarks was made, I made an objection, stating that I wanted to have the RECORD show the actual proceedings of the day. I have no objection to general leave being granted to all Members of the House, if they wish, now that the record has been made on this vote.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects.

WAR EXCESS-PROFITS TAX—SALARIES OF MEMBERS, ETC.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass House joint resolution 195, which specifically subjects the compensation of officers and employees of the United States, including Members of Congress, to the excess-profits tax.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I do not think the House expected to transact any more business to-night, and I do not think it is in a frame of mind to do so. I suggest to the gentleman that he ask unanimous consent to take this up to-morrow.

Mr. KITCHIN. I appreciate what the gentleman says, and I ask unanimous consent then, for the present, that this joint resolution be in order for consideration immediately after the reading of the Journal to-morrow.

Mr. MEEKER. Reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER. Let the Chair state the proposition. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that House joint resolution 195 may be taken up to-morrow immediately after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table. Is there objection?

Mr. MEEKER. Reserving the right to object, there are a number of men who are leaving to-night, who had understood that the legislative program before the holidays was practically finished, but who would like to be informed of the consideration of this resolution. Why can we not dispose of it right now?

Mr. KITCHIN. For the reason stated by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT], that a great many Members thought that immediately after the vote on the constitutional amendment the House would adjourn. There will be no objection to this, and no fight against it.

Mr. MEEKER. I want to say that I am in favor of it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The House does not clearly understand this proposition. The resolution has not been printed and is not before the House. Even some members of the committee have not seen the resolution.

The SPEAKER. It is before the House.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It was impossible to hear the gentleman from North Carolina in the confusion. Was his request for unanimous consent to go on with it now?

SEVERAL MEMBERS. No.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Reserving thhe right to object, what was the request?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina called up this resolution and moved to suspend the rules and pass it, and that has never been withdrawn; but pending that, at the suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT], the gentleman from North Carolina asked unanimous consent that immediately after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table to-morrow this resolution be taken up.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have no objection to that request.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wishes to find out if any one objects to it.

Mr. RAKER. A parliamentary inquiry. If the request is granted, will that take precedence of a motion for change of reference?

The SPEAKER. It will not, if I live until that time comes. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to inquire of the gentleman from North Carolina what arrangement, if any, has been made by the chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee with reference to the bill that he wants to offer to-morrow?

Mr. KITCHIN. I understand that the Rules Committee will report a rule to-morrow for its consideration after this joint resolution.

Mr. WEBB. I will say to the gentleman that that is the intention of the Committee on Rules to-morrow.

Mr. WINGO. After we get through with this resolution on the revenue matter, what else is to come up to-morrow?

Mr. KITCHIN. I do not know of anything else to come up to-morrow, except this matter to which the gentleman refers. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] has a midshipman bill for which he will ask unanimous consent.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman think there would be any objection to taking up the bill from the Committee on Banking and Currency immediately after the disposition of the resolution which the gentleman refers to?

Mr. KITCHIN. The Committee on Rules will report a rule.

Mr. WINGO. But they might withhold the rule.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. The idea is to report the rule to the House to-morrow and take it up as soon as possible.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina that this resolution be taken up to-morrow after the reading of the Journal?

There was no objection.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the debate on the resolution to-morrow close in 1 hour—30 minutes on a side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that debate on the resolution be limited to one hour. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask further unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] control one half of the time and I control the other half.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the time be equally divided; that he control one half and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] the other half.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire if this is on the Union Calendar?

The SPEAKER. It would be on the Union Calendar.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Then there will be opportunity for debate under the five-minute rule.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. GILLETT. Reserving the right to object, has the gentleman any definite purpose as to the time that we will adjourn to-morrow?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; but I want to get through as early as possible.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will remind Members that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] has an hour to-morrow. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. GILLETT. I object.

INCREASING THE NUMBER OF MIDSHIPMEN.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill increasing the number of midshipmen at the Naval Academy. It is one that all Members are interested in, and I do not think it ought to take over 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The trouble is that it is not on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. During the extra session, when everything was out of order, the Chair did recognize a number of Members in violation of the Unanimous Consent Calendar rule to call up matters, but that is a good rule and the Chair is in favor of enforcing it.

Mr. PADGETT. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6967) to increase the number of midshipmen at the United States Naval Academy.

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter there shall be allowed at the United States Naval Academy 5 midshipmen for each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress, 1 for Porto Rico, 2 for the District of Columbia, 15 appointed each year at large, and 100 appointed annually from enlisted men of the Navy, as now authorized by law.

SEC. 2. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. LENROOT. I demand a second.

Mr. PADGETT. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask that a vote be taken on the bill.

Mr. CANNON. That increases the number by one for each Member of Congress.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the bill was passed.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce that if my colleague, Mr. HUSTED, had been here to-day, he would have voted in favor of submitting the prohibition amendment.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. GOODWIN, is necessarily absent. He was paired on the prohibition amendment; but if present, he would have voted "aye."

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. GILLETT. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I object.

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate joint resolution 110 to amend an act entitled "An act for the promotion of vocational education," approved February 23, 1917.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not do that.

Mr. SEARS. Then I move to suspend the rules and pass Senate joint resolution 110.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 7 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the promotion of vocational education," etc., approved February 23, 1917, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding at the end thereof the words "including the rental of quarters in the District of Columbia from the date of the organization of said board until June 30, 1918."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second. I do not think that a resolution of this character, which involves a question of considerable expense, ought to pass to-night. If it is insisted upon I shall insist upon a quorum of the House being present. I owe that in justice to the character of the resolution and what it involves.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the motion.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 18, 1917, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting tentative draft of a bill to regulate the pay of retired chief warrant officers on active duty (H. Doc. No. 625), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. KITCHIN, from the Committee on Ways and Means, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 195) amending an act entitled "An act to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1917, so as to subject to the war excess-profits tax the compensation of officers and employees under the United States, including Members of Congress, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 230), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee on the Whole House on the state of the Union.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3676) granting an increase of pension to Charles N. Bryant; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 6229) granting a pension to Ward Houchin; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 7794) providing for the refund of duties collected on flax-preparatory machines, parts, and accessories imported subsequently to August 5, 1909, and prior to January 1, 1911; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BAER: A bill (H. R. 7795) to appropriate $50,000,000 for the purchase of seed grain and feed for live stock, to be supplied to farmers and stockmen, and to create boards in the respective States to assist in carrying out the provisions of this act; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 7796) to increase the salary of the United States marshal for the western district of Michigan; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BRODBECK: A bill (H. R. 7797) providing for increase for soldiers and sailors of the late Civil War who served 90 days or more, attained the age of 75 years, or who are suffering from mental or physical disabilities, not the result of their own misconduct, which incapacitates them from performing manual labor; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ZIHLMAN: A bill (H. R. 7798) to provide for the enlargement of the public building at Cumberland, Md.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. MONDELL: A bill (H. R. 7799) to repeal sections of the war-revenue act, approved October 3, 1917, relating to and providing for a zone system for second-class mail matter; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. WATKINS: A bill (H. R. 7800) providing compensation for fourth-class postmasters and repealing conflicting laws; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By M. GANDY: A bill (H. R. 7801) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to extend deferred payments by settlers and homestead entrymen upon public and ceded Indian lands; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. WEBB: Resolution (H. Res. 198) for the consideration of House joint resolution 1; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. POU: Resolution (H. Res. 199) for consideration of House bill 7731; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. PARK: Resolution (H. Res. 200) authorizing the Postmaster of the House to employ an additional clerk; to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. RAKER: Resolution (H. Res. 201) transferring jurisdiction of House joint resolution 1; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. WOOD of Indiana: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 194) to prevent depreciation of and speculation in certain securities of the United States and providing penalty for violation thereof; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KITCHIN: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 195) amending the act entitled "An act to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1917, so as to subject to the war excess-profits tax the compensation of officers and employees under the United States, including Members of Congress; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ASHBROOK: A bill (H. R. 7802) granting a pension to Charles Gordon; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7803) granting a pension to Alma McLaughlin; to the Committee on Invalid pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7804) granting a pension to George W. Cordray; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7805) granting a pension to Thomas A. Jamison; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7806) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin F. Lantz; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BRODBECK: A bill (H. R. 7807) granting a pension to Charles C. Cooper; to the Committee on Pensions.

TUESDAY, December 18, 1917.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, in Thy providence Thou hast brought us to the season of the year when we look back once more to the Babe of Bethlehem, the Boy of Nazareth, the Man of Galilee, the great outstanding figure of all history, the touchstone of all truth. His word has the inherent power of absolute and final truth and His character is the inspiration of all good men. We pray that as we approach the season when Christian civilization will celebrate His coming into the world that our hearts may turn toward Him, that His Word may break the heart of the world, that His hand may be laid upon the feverish brow of the world, and that His example may even now lift the world to a higher and diviner plane of life. We pray Thee to sanctify the season which is just ahead of us to the establishment of the freedom of all men and the peace of the world. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. GALLINGER and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

ENLISTED MEN AND COMMISSIONED OFFICERS (S. DOC. NO. 154).

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War in response to a resolution of the Senate, which will be printed and also ordered printed in the RECORD.

The communication is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, December 18, 1917.

To the PRESIDENT UNITED STATES SENATE:

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of a resolution in the Senate of the United States, under date of December 11, 1917, directing me to inform the United States Senate "what, if any, rules or regulations there are of the War Department which prevent officers from having intercourse with privates and mingling with them in social intercourse, or which tend to caste distinction between enlisted men and commissioned officers when they are off duty." In response thereto I submit for the information of the Senate of the United States the following paragraph of Army Regulations in regard to the relationship between officers and enlisted men as the only rule or regulation now existing relative to this matter:

"Superiors are forbidden to injure those under their authority by tyrannical or capricious conduct or by abusive language. While maintaining discipline and the thorough and prompt performance of military duty, all officers, in dealing with enlisted men, will bear in mind the absolute necessity of so treating them as to preserve their self-respect. Officers will keep in as close touch as possible with the men under their command, will strive to build up such relations of confidence and sympathy as will insure the free approach of their men to them for counsel and assistance. This relationship may be gained and maintained without relaxation on the bonds of discipline and with great benefit to the service as a whole."

In this paragraph will be seen an endeavor to arrive at a true balance in the proper relationship between officers and enlisted men; on the one hand, to encourage an exchange of confidence and cooperation between the officer and the soldier, and, on the other, to avoid personal intimacies between an officer and any particular soldier or soldiers, which might have a tendency to lead to favoritism or the suspicion of favoritism in assignments for duties, or cause discontent on the part of those not selected for special intimacy by the officer in question. All officers are expected to so exercise their judgment under this regulation as at all times to enjoy the sympathy, confidence, and respect of the soldiers, and it has always been a part of the instructions given young officers by their superiors to exert themselves to promote this relationship.

Distinctions of rank in the Army are solely in the interest of military discipline. They imply no social distinction; indeed, in a country like ours the advantage of education and culture will very frequently be found in favor of the soldier; and yet it is necessary that the soldier should acquire by continuous and unvarying practice the habit of instant obedience to his superior. This is as true of officers as it is of men. In the emergency of battle, when every condition tends to distract men's attention and peril is on every side, safety for a command frequently lies only in its organized and coordinated activity, and this can proceed from one inspiration alone—the instant, unquestioning compliance by all with the voice of authority. There is no time to debate, no opportunity to consider; the men must have acquired their rule of action—attention and obedience to command. This habit can not be created in emergencies and forgotten under other circumstances, but must result from practice which tolerates no exceptions either of persons or occasions. The relationship between officers and men, therefore, must be so arranged as to lead to this indispensable result; but this is entirely consistent with respect, sympathy, and mutual consideration, and the best officers are those who have most completely won the affection of their men. Military annals are filled with splendid stories of men imperiling their lives outside of the necessities of military action in order to save the life of a beloved captain.

The War Department, therefore, has endeavored and is endeavoring by every means within its power to impress upon officers the military value of this cordial relationship—to have them understand that as is the officer so is the command; that their spirit and their actions constitute the example upon which the spirited actions of the men are molded. While here and there instances undoubtedly occur of thoughtless and inconsiderate conduct on the part of officers and of unreasoning complaint on the part of the men who have failed to understand the just obligations of this disciplinary relationship, I am still persuaded that in the great Army we now have in the field and in training there is a growing realization that it is both possible and useful to be faithful to military discipline and at the same time to the democratic ideals of our country.

Very respectfully, yours, NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 6967) to increase the number of midshipmen at the United States Naval Academy, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (S. J. Res. 114) extending the commission provided for in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1917, with the same authorities, powers, and provisions until on or before March 1, 1918, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

NATIONAL PROHIBITION.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 17) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which were, on page 1, line 9, to strike out "the" and insert "after one year from the ratification of this article the"; on page 1, to strike out lines 14 and 15 and lines 1, 2, and 3 on page 2, and insert:

SEC. 2. The Congress and the several States shall have concurrent power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

And, on page 2, to strike out lines 4 and 5 and insert:

SEC. 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress.

Mr. SHEPPARD rose.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Chamberlain	Dillingham	Gallinger
Beckham	Colt	Fernald	Gerry
Borah	Culberson	Fletcher	Gronna
Brandegee	Cummins	France	Hale
Calder	Curtis	Frelinghuysen	Harding
Hardwick	McCumber	Pomerene	Sterling
Hitchcock	McKellar	Robinson	Stone
Hollis	McLean	Saulsbury	Sutherland
James	McNary	Shafroth	Swanson
Johnson, Cal.	Martin	Sheppard	Thompson
Johnson, S. Dak.	Myers	Sherman	Townsend
Jones, Wash.	Nelson	Shields	Vardaman
Kellogg	New	Simmons	Wadsworth
Kendrick	Newlands	Smith, Ariz.	Weeks
King	Norris	Smith, Ga.	Williams
Knox	Overman	Smith, Md.
La Follette	Penrose	Smith, Mich.
Lewis	Pittman	Smoot

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. HUGHES] on account of illness.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. My colleague, the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] is absent owing to illness.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] on account of illness.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I wish to announce the absence of the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] on official business upon the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. MYERS. My colleague [Mr. WALSH] is detained from the Senate on account of illness.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. WOLCOTT] is absent on account of illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives to Senate joint resolution No. 17.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Do these amendments require a two-thirds vote?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the opinion of the Chair. It is the view of the Chair that an amendment to a resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States needs only a majority in order to be adopted; but the resolution having once been adopted by the Senate and gone to the House and returned here for the final action of the Senate, it is necessary to have a two-thirds vote on the amendments of the House, for this constitutes the final passage of the resolution.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I want to say a word before the matter is disposed of.

I regret exceedingly, Mr. President, that this amendment has taken the form which it has. There are two clauses in the amendment which, to my mind, are irreconcilable with any idea of constitutional action or action in harmony with the Constitution. In the first place, the amendment as it is proposed to the Constitution as an amendment has in it the words "after one year from the ratification of this article," so that it will read:

That the following amendment to the Constitution be, and hereby is, proposed to the States, to become valid as a part of the Constitution after one year from the ratification of this article—

And so forth.

It is just as plain as the path to the country schoolhouse that that is either wholly and absolutely surplusage and has no business here or else it will prevent any real submission of the question to the States. It can do no good and may do much harm.

The Constitution of the United States provides in unmistakable language when a provision of the Constitution shall go into effect, and it is not within the power of the Congress, by incorporating a different provision in a proposed amendment to change the law of the land. I can not understand, Mr. President, why such a clause should be inserted in an amendment so vital and important as this. It is manifestly out of harmony with the Constitution. I do not assume to say what its effect will be, but it might endanger the whole proceedings.

Secondly, it provides that "this article shall be inoperative"—and I want to call the attention of the Senate to the word "inoperative"—"unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within six years." That has been changed to seven years.

We have no power by this method to limit the time within which this amendment shall be ratified. That matter was discussed before. I shall not discuss it again. After a fuller investigation and a more thorough study of the matter I am more thoroughly convinced that we have no such power. The act which we shall here perform will either result in a submission to the States or it will be held to be no submission at all. If it ever goes to the States and they actually acquire jurisdiction of it, they can ratify it at any time they see fit, and when a sufficient number shall have ratified it, it becomes a part of the Constitution. If it is a submission at all, then a ratification will be constitutional, though the requisite number of States should not vote for it for 10 years, or later.

We can not limit the time. For instance, to give an illustration we will assume that this is submitted, that the States acquire jurisdiction of the subject and proceed to ratify, and at the end of seven years 35 States have ratified it. At the beginning of the eighth year the thirty-sixth State ratifies it. Will anyone contend for a moment that it is not a part of the Constitution of the United States if it is a submission at all? The Constitution itself, which is unchanged, says that an amendment may be ratified by the States and places no limit upon the time within which to ratify it.

The thing which I most fear, Mr President, however, is that it would be held not to have been a submission to the States at all. What I most fear is that it being a submission in a manner not provided for in the Constitution it is no submission at all.

The Committee on the Judiciary has reported upon this matter since we acted upon the pending joint resolution. The able Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] has proposed an amendment to the Constitution providing a limit of time within which constitutional amendments shall be ratified. If the Congress can by each amendment fix the limit of time, there is no occasion for the Senator from Connecticut to offer such an amendment to the Constitution of the United States. In other words, when the woman-suffrage amendment comes along we can put in a limit of 4 years or we can put in a limit of 10 years; when some other amendment comes along we can put in a limit of 1 year or 3 years, and it will be a matter wholly within the control of Congress by the act of submission, whereas the Constitution itself places no limit upon it at all, and that is a vital, substantial, elemental provision of the Constitution.

Mr. President, if I have an opportunity, I shall vote against these amendments, because I think they are dangerous in their import. While I am in favor of the amendment, I am opposed to these changes. I think they should by no means be here. I do not think the friends of the measure should thus endanger the whole proceedings.

Mr. LEWIS. Before the Senator sits down may I ask the Senator, to test his position, suppose Congress should reverse the matter and put in a provision that this adoption shall not take effect for 20 years instead of saying within the time it should do so, that it actually said it shall not take effect for 20 years, does the Senator assume that that would be legal?

Mr. BORAH. I do not.

Mr. LEWIS. Then if it could provide in what time it should go into effect, could it not also provide what time it should not go into effect?

Mr. BORAH. If I caught the question, I say yes.

Mr. LEWIS. I was very much interested in the Senator's position. If Congress has the right to put a time limit as to when this amendment shall go into effect it would equally have the right to put a limit when it should not go into effect.

Mr. BORAH. I think so.

Mr. LEWIS. Then if the Senator's argument is well taken, would not the final effect be that if Congress could put a limit as to when it should go into effect it could equally put one in when it should not go into effect?

Mr. BORAH. I think so.

Mr. LEWIS. Therefore, if we could say it should not go into effect for 20 years, could we not also say when it could not go into effect? Not for 20 years, and would not that practically work an absolute obviation of the effect of the amendment by putting a limit of time at such a distance as to make it impossible to reach the object we might have in view?

Mr. BORAH. If I understand the Senator, I am in harmony with the view he expresses.

Mr. LEWIS. Would that be the operation according to the Senator's contention?

Mr. BORAH. That is my opinion.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Will the Senator, before he takes his seat, let me ask him a question?

Referring to the amendment which the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has been discussing, I did not hear the first part of his remarks, and therefore he may have answered the question I am about to ask, but I will ask it again. The amendment reads as follows:

> This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress.

Does the Senator think that that amendment attached to the proposed constitutional amendment makes the entire submission void, or does he think that it would only be regarded as surplusage if Congress had no authority to put it on?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am not prepared to say I have not reached a conclusion as to what would be the effect of that amendment. Of course, one of two things must necessarily follow; either it will be held surplusage, and, therefore, not effective at all, or the court would hold that Congress, not having submitted it in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution, it would be no submission at all. If I felt perfectly clear that it would be held surplusage, I should not be uneasy about the situation; but when the Constitution of the United States provides the manner in which an amendment shall be submitted, prescribes how it shall go to the States, and under what terms and conditions, I do not see how it can be submitted at all except in accordance with those terms and conditions. That is what I have great fear of—that it will be held not to have been a submission at all.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Let me ask the Senator a further question. The amendatory section provides that the proposed amendment in its entirety shall, unless it is all accepted within seven years, become inoperative. If Congress has no authority to put that on, the further question might arise as to whether or not the whole submission process is still in operation. Then, even if three-fourths of the States did ratify it, we would still have a lawsuit carried to the Supreme Court to find whether it has been adopted or not. In other words, the minute it becomes inoperative, if this is a valid amendment at all, so as to work, then it is withdrawn from further submission to the States or from further action by the States.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, Mr. President, these changes were not inserted without a purpose and I fear the purpose was not one friendly to the cause.

To recapitulate the Constitution of the United States as it now stands provides that a proposed amendment to the Constitution shall become a part of the Constitution "when ratified by the legislature of three-fourths of the several States." "When;" that is, as soon after submission as three-fourths of the States ratify, it shall become a part of the Constitution. Now, this provision of ours which we are submitting says that it shall not become a part of the Constitution when ratified by three-fourths of the States, but not until one year thereafter. That is in direct conflict with the express language of article V of the Constitution. Then, again, the Constitution of the United States as it now stands provides "when ratified by the legislature of three-fourths of the several States," placing no limit upon the time. Is there any doubt but what if this proposed amendment were submitted to the States they would have a right to ratify it within 10 years or at any other time? Can it be contended for a moment that we can amend the Constitution by putting into a proposed amendment a different rule of ratification as to time than that which is now in the Constitution, and which will be in the Constitution and a part of the Constitution after this amendment is voted upon by three-fourths of the States? This is not a proposition to amend the Constitution providing a different time within which to ratify. This is simply a proposition to provide a different time in this particular submission than that which obtains in the general provision of the Constitution. We ignore the clear, unmistakable terms of the Constitution in this submission, both as to the time when the constitutional provision will begin to have effect and as to the time within which the States must ratify. Now, other friends of this amendment seem willing to take the chance. I am not. I shall therefore vote against these proposed changes. I want this amendment to go to the States in a way that when a sufficient number shall have ratified it there will be no doubt of its being a part of the Constitution.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, as the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] stated, this phase of the amendment was discussed and passed on when the amendment was before the Senate on a former occasion. It was the judgment of the Senate that there was no question as to the power of Congress to submit the amendment in this form, and I ask for a vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Those in favor of concurring in the amendments will rise. That is the only way the Chair can determine the question. [A pause.] Those opposed will rise. [A pause.] The vote is 47 ayes and 8 noes. The amendments are concurred in and the joint resolution is adopted.

Mr. ROBINSON. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] is absent on account of illness in his family. If he had been present on the vote in relation to the adoption of the amendments proposed by the House of Representatives to the joint resolution relating to national prohibition, he would have voted "yea."

HOLIDAY RECESS.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, before I make the motion which I desire to submit I wish to ask the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], who is chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, if he can make a suggestion as to the situation in reference to railroad legislation, as to whether or not there will be any occasion for Congress to be in session the next few days in order to deal with that situation?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I will state that I have deferred calling the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the Senate together regarding the recommendation of the Interstate Commerce Commission that the railroads of the country should be unified in the expectation that the President would shortly send to Congress a message on the subject, and that thus our eyes would be focussed upon a specific proposition. I know that the President has this matter under serious consideration and that he is giving a great deal of time to it. I had expected that a recommendation would come in before the recess for the holidays. I have thus far delayed calling the committee together for the reasons which I have stated; but I feel that this is a matter of so much importance and that it is so important that the committee should inform itself regarding the situation, with a view to considering the President's recommendations when they come in, that it is my intention at an early day to call the committee together, even if the presidential message does not come in.

Mr. BORAH. Well, Mr. President, if we take a recess it will be impossible for the President's message to come in.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. We would, therefore, take the responsibility upon ourselves of delaying this matter for two weeks.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will state that the Senator from Iowa to-day consulted me with reference to a resolution which he proposed to introduce calling upon the Interstate Commerce Committee to investigate the matters called to the attention of Congress by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and I told him that I would have no objection to the immediate consideration of such a resolution. I do not know whether I can call the committee together during the holidays, but if the resolution is adopted, I shall make an effort to do so.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to move the recall of the concurrent resolution which was passed by the Senate on yesterday and sent to the other House providing for a recess beginning to-day. I understand the resolution having gone to the other House, a motion to recall it is necessary before we can reconsider it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. According to the rule a motion to reconsider must be accompanied by a request to the House of Representatives to return the resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. GALLINGER. I thought the Senator from Idaho had concluded.

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the chances are ten to one that there is not a quorum of the House of Representatives in the city at this moment, and it seems to me that it is absolutely useless for us to undertake to reconsider the concurrent resolution which was passed by both Houses on yesterday. I will ask the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] if he has any expectation or any reason to believe that if we should remain in session the President would send a message to Congress during the next two weeks? In other words, is it not almost certain that he will not do so; that he is going to take this matter under consideration and take that length of time to consider it?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I will state that when I last saw the President, some days ago, it was his expectation to send a message to Congress upon the subject at an early day; but I have reason to know that he is very laboriously at work on the investigation of this subject; he is not prepared to make his recommendations now, and I do not know when he will be ready. I assume, however, it will take some days for him to frame his recommendations.

Mr. GALLINGER. The papers all say that he is not intending to do so during the recess, and I will ask the Senator if it is not more than probable that if the President were adverse to Congress taking a recess, he would have conveyed that information to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I think so.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think so, too.

Mr. BORAH. That is very interesting.

Mr. ROBINSON. I want to suggest to the Senator from Idaho, with his permission——

Mr. NEWLANDS. I think the President would have communicated to me his views if he thought it was important that there should be an immediate consideration of this subject by Congress during the holidays.

Mr. BORAH. Then, as I understand, we are leaving by permission?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Idaho, in connection with his remark, that he desires to have the resolution returned from the House of Representatives, that in all probability a difficulty would arise in that respect, for my information is that there is probably not a quorum of that body in the city. I have just had some information to that effect.

Mr. BORAH. There was a full quorum here last evening at 5 o'clock, and I suspect it is still here. I move a reconsideration of the concurrent resolution providing for the holiday recess and its recall from the House; and upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho moves that the vote whereby the concurrent resolution providing for a recess for the Christmas holidays was agreed to shall be reconsidered; and he moves, in connection therewith, that the House be requested to return the resolution to the Senate. Upon the latter question the yeas and nays have been requested and seconded. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and vote "yea."

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] and vote "nay."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], and therefore withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. VARDAMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HARDING. I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] and vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. GOFF] on account of illness. He has a general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN].

Mr. MYERS. My colleague [Mr. WALSH] is necessarily absent on account of illness. He is paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN]. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. WATSON. I withhold my vote because of the absence of my general pair, the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT].

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 43, as follows:

YEAS—32.

Bankhead	Frelinghuysen	Jones, Wash.	Sherman
Borah	Gronna	Kellogg	Smith, Mich.
Brandegee	Hale	Kendrick	Sutherland

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion to request the House to return the concurrent resolution is lost. This is a final disposition of the motion to reconsider.

INVESTIGATION OF THE SHIPPING BOARD.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, I do not know whether it is in order or not; but I have a suggestion in my mind which I can not forbear making to the Senate, and I wish particularly to address the chairman of the Committee on Commerce [Mr. FLETCHER].

If I were not a member of the minority, and thereby subject to the possible suspicion that some partisan motive might be involved, I would put my suggestion in the form of a resolution. I do not believe that this Congress ought to take its holiday recess without making provision for an investigation of the affairs of the Federal Shipping Board. I am not yielding to the current tendency to enter into investigations of all sorts, but I am deeply impressed by the failure of the Shipping Board in this great emergency of the Nation.

We have liberally appropriated not only millions but billions for the furthering of the construction of merchant ships. Since early last year we have witnessed the passing from the service of the board of Gen. Goethals, that great constructor, who builded the Panama Canal. We have witnessed the passing of Mr. Denman, who for a long time was the dominant figure on the Shipping Board; and the press this morning records the retirement of Rear Admiral Harris, who was supposed to bring to the shipping corporation not only his talent for construction but his eminence as a leader in pressing things to a conclusion; and if the newspaper reports be well founded, our shipping program for the merchant marine is in a very discouraging way.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator will recall that Admiral Capps has likewise come and gone.

Mr. HARDING. There have been so many changes, Mr. President, that it is not within my ordinary memory to recall them all. But in all seriousness, Senators, the shipping situation is a most discouraging one, if the press correctly reports it. It is of but little use for the Nation to provide an Army that it can not transport and at the same time sustain. I talked very recently to a great captain of industry, who has under way a line of construction for the Navy, and he made the startling statement that his plant was constructing for the United States Navy more destroyers than there are in the world to-day. If that be true, under the leadership of a department and an individual constructing concern which has capacity to build more destroyers than there are in the world to-day, certainly a capable and efficient shipping board could bring to the service of the Nation in this crisis a merchant marine somewhere comparable to our present needs.

I do not care to introduce this resolution of investigation and be subjected to the intimation that it is a partisan interference or suggestion; but I tell you, Senators, the winning of the war depends upon our strength on the seas. We must have this merchant marine if we are to hope to succeed; and I think it is a crime that the money placed in the hands of the Shipping Board should have been so illy handled that there should have been an entanglement of red tape and inefficiency of a character to delay the great American shipbuilding program.

I can believe it will add materially to the confidence and the morale and the hopes of the American people to have some assurance that efficiency and determination are back of this organization. I do not pretend to know what the difficulty is. Judging from the press, it is a conflict of authority and an interminable tangle of red tape. I have a notion that perhaps it is something more than that. I believe, Mr. President, and particularly Mr. Chairman of the Commerce Committee, that the Senate can render the country no greater service just now than to make a determined investigation into the failure of this great branch of the Government in this time of war emergency.

I should like such an investigation to be ordered before the Senate takes its holiday recess.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I realize fully the importance of the matter to which the Senator from Ohio has referred. I feel most keenly the need of an American merchant marine. The Senator undoubtedly will recall that this is no new attitude, so far as I am concerned; that away back in 1913 I exhausted every possible effort to take steps that would lead to the upbuilding of our merchant shipping. At one time the Senate was in session continuously for 56 hours considering a bill along the lines of the present shipping bill. It was defeated in 1915, and then subsequently we passed the present law; and I can not understand that there is any need of conflict of authority under that law. It seems to me that, under the law, the Shipping Board is supreme and has the power to go on with this work. I do not understand that the Emergency Fleet Corporation is independent of the Shipping Board or that there need be the slightest conflict there, because the supreme power is the Shipping Board, and it ought to control the Emergency Fleet Corporation and its officers, its executives, and its operating forces. I can not think there is any need of any urgent new legislation upon the subject. It seems to me that under the present law all the necessary power is granted; and we certainly have been generous in appropriating all the money that was asked, as the Senator has suggested.

Whether or not there are difficulties with which we are not acquainted, I can not say. I presume undoubtedly there are difficulties; but we can not overcome difficulties without putting in some extraordinary efforts.

We can not do the difficult thing without overcoming difficulties, and it seems to me there is no reason why better progress should not have been made in the administration of that act. At the same time I am not prepared to say that everything has not been done that could have been done because of the complications and because we did not pass this legislation before we did pass it. We ought to have passed it before. When we did pass it and before the board was organized these war conditions arose, and since then there have been various complications. There are national and international questions involved. There are, for instance, something over 100 Dutch ships lying idle in the harbors of the United States. I do not know why we can not make some arrangement to utilize those ships, but it is not being done. I take it that there are, as I say, international questions which we can not very well go into here and with which we are not fully acquainted.

I do not believe, however, if the Senator will allow me further, that the fact that this official drops out and is succeeded by another, and another drops out and is succeeded by still another will prevent the completion of the ships under contract. My information is that over 6,000,000 tons are under contract, and I do not see why that work can not go on irrespective of who is president of the Emergency Fleet Corporation, or superintendent of this, or superintendent of that. That work, I undertake to say, is going on. I think ships are being launched on the Pacific coast that have been contracted for by this board; ships are being launched on the Atlantic coast, and the work is proceeding. Whether it could be done faster or not will depend upon the detail of circumstances, which, of course, I am not qualified to pass upon.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. FLETCHER. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator from Florida speaks about the shipyards on the Pacific coast. Our people have been begging to build wooden ships out there. Men are idle; labor can be procured to construct wooden ships; but for some reason they are not permitting contracts to be made, and where they are made there are usually handicaps placed upon the contracts that forbid men from going into it.

For instance, I will state what I mean by that. Here is a wooden-ship yard that wants to build for private account for some individual who is going to risk his money and to ply the ship between the Atlantic seaboard and the allies. They do not ask the Government to build the ship; the individual is willing to do it himself; but they say, "If we give you a permit to build for private account, we will put in it a clause that reserves to the Government the right to commandeer the machinery." In other words, when the ship is floated and is ready to be paid for and to go on the water, the right is reserved to commandeer the machinery, so that the ship is absolutely useless. Now, private capital does not want to build under those circumstances.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Without promising to commandeer the whole ship.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Without promising to commandeer the whole ship. So that, Mr. President, I have had this matter up with the Shipping Board. I sent them a long telegram from Oregon when I was out there—and the Senators from Washington know that the same conditions exist up there—begging those men, if it was a question of tonnage that they wanted to settle to build the ships, to let private individuals utilize the tonnage and carry the freight. Every ship that is put afloat for private account that is carrying supplies to the allies, releases just that much more space for the transport of troops.

Mr. President, I do not mean to charge any irregularity in the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation, but it seems to me it has resolved itself into a sort of debating society, without being able ever to consummate construction. I am glad to have the Senate take it up, because something ought to be done, and they never can do anything as long as these changes are being made in the personnel of the Emergency Fleet Corporation and the Shipping Board.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I believe that the regulations with regard to interfering with private contracts and commercial business limit the right to build to 3,000 tons. Anything less than 3,000 tons, private yards may construct ad libitum, as I understand, without any danger of interference, but when it goes beyond that the Shipping Board feel that the labor question, the material question, and all those questions ought to be considered before they will permit construction for private use.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. This limitation was made in order to protect the Government, as I understand, in its effort to get steel for steel ships. Now, why should there be any limitation upon the amount of tonnage for wooden ships built upon private account, except this—that of course the Shipping Board will take due account of the fact that a ship that makes less than 13 knots is not fit to go into the war zone?

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, I should like to hear the debate on this subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Nobody knows what is going on.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I was saying that I understand this 3,000-ton limitation for building upon private account was fixed because of the desire to conserve the steel necessary for the construction of the Government ships, but that that did not apply to the wooden-ship situation either upon the Pacific coast or upon the Gulf coast, because the same condition of things exists upon the Gulf coast as was described to exist upon the Pacific coast with reference to wooden ships by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN]. Now, a wooden ship which can go 13 knots an hour or more is just as well fitted to pass through the war zone as a steel ship going 13 knots an hour; and the Government is not obliged, as it is in the case of a steel ship, to fix a limitation upon the amount of material to be put into a wooden ship, because the Government is not building for Government account any wooden ships at all; and even if it were building for Government account any wooden ships at all, there is plenty of wood. Nobody is disputing about that. Now, I wanted to ask the Senator whether the limitation to which he refers applies to wooden ships, and to suggest that if it does it is an awfully stupid limitation in that far.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am not certain as to whether it applies to wooden ships exclusively or not. The question of tonnage seemed to be the question upon which the permit hinged. If the boat was too small to go into use so as to be of any advantage, then the Shipping Board, of course, would not likely interfere with its construction. In other words, a ship below 3,000 tons would not be considered a ship large enough for the use that we immediately need them for, and therefore they were willing to have contracts made without any restriction below 3,000 tons.

Mr. WILLIAMS. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. FLETCHER. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the Senator know any reason why a wooden ship can not be used just as well as a steel ship for carrying merchandise or anything else through the war zone, provided the wooden ship has sufficient machinery to propel it just as fast as the steel ship can be propelled?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not. I know of no reason.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then if that is the case, and if the Gulf coast and the Pacific coast want to furnish all the wood that they can and build all the wooden ships possible upon private account without costing the Government a cent, why should the Government obstruct the whole thing and handicap it by a provision that it is to have the right to commandeer the machinery without commandeering the ship whenever it gets ready? Why do they not do one of two things—either withdraw the threat of commandeering the machinery just as soon as the man has his ship ready for profitable enterprise, or else agree to commandeer the ship as a whole and pay him what it is worth?

Mr. FLETCHER. I quite agree with the Senator in his position. We ought to do one thing or the other, it seems to me. We ought to go on with the building of these ships, and we ought to do away with the restrictions that interfere with the building of ships, and if necessary, it has been suggested here, with the persons who interfere with it.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, in the early part of his reply the Senator from Florida scarcely did me justice. I was trying to put this question above the plane of partisan advantage, and that was my object in suggesting that the resolution come from the committee. I have no desire to go into the failure of Congress in the past in building a merchant marine. I am concerned about the immediate emergencies in the United States. I know how perfectly futile it is to attempt an investigation here in the Senate. While it is interesting to learn what this or that Senator knows about the situation, it is not practically helpful, because perhaps none knows any more than I do. But this we can put down as an established fact: We have provided for ships and we are not getting them, and it is the business of Congress to find out why we are not getting them.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I hope the Senator will introduce a resolution and let the investigation proceed.

Mr. HARDING. Let the Senator just be patient. Now, Mr. President, in order to make myself a little better understood, I may say that I have talked to three men who have been conspicuous in the service of the Government relating to shipping, and in each case I have learned after their retirement that they somehow found their hands tied and could not proceed with the work that they were seeking to do.

If I may trespass upon the time of the Senate for a moment, I venture to read one paragraph from the signed article by Mr. George Rothwell Brown in this morning's Post. Speaking of the retirement of Admiral Harris, he says:

> Used to doing things by Navy methods when told to go ahead, it has been evident for some time past that Admiral Harris was baffled not by the size of the job but by lack of vision and decision on the part of those surrounding him.
> Taking up one of the biggest jobs in the United States with assurances that he had the authority needed to make that job a success, that his hands were free, Admiral Harris undertook to go ahead under full steam, only to discover that he was held down by the anchor of officialdom and hawsers of red tape. A statement to the effect that Admiral Harris was in full charge of the construction of ships was made.
> He was not long in finding that the authority he was supposed to have was not real.

I will not follow the article any further. The statements made by Senators on this floor make manifest the need of the Senate Committee on Commerce finding out what is the matter, and then it shall be the duty of Congress to correct that situation. Since the resolution is not forthcoming from the other side, I venture to offer the following.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the presentation of the resolution?

Mr. FLETCHER. Let it be read.

Mr. HARDING. I ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 170), as follows:

> Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to proceed at once with an investigation of the program, progress, and all matters connected with the building of merchant vessels under the direction of the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation and to report its findings to the Senate at the earliest practicable day, together with such recommendations as it may see fit to make as to remedies for exising difficulties, if any.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, there is at the head of the Shipping Board now—I suppose he is yet at the head of it if it has any head—a man of magnificent business ability, a man of constructive genius, a man in whom I have the utmost confidence in every way, Mr. Hurley, of Chicago.

I have noticed all my life that whenever military or naval men get mixed up with business men in cooperating with one another they generally do not cooperate. One has one system and method and the other has another system and method.

Nobody can close his eyes to the fact that we, as a Nation, have not thus far done our full duty in this war; and, upon the other hand, nobody can close his eyes to the fact that the amount of work we have done, considering the point at which we started, has been almost miraculous in quantity and very respectable in quality.

Mr. President, of course nobody, I take it, has any objection to the resolution, nor would I for one regard it in the slightest degree as partisan because it happened to come from a Republican Senator, especially coming from a Republican Senator who has held up the hands of this Government in this war and has shown no suspicion of lukewarmness, of disloyalty, as is the case with the Senator from Ohio. I think that almost everything that sheds light upon transactions in a free country is a very good thing. You may think that you are going to give some hint to the enemy, but you may rely upon it that the enemy knows all about it already. The best thing you can do, as a rule, is to let your own people know all about it.

I imagine one of the best things that can be done now is to let these men—able men, honest men, loyal men—upon the Shipping Board explain to the country why and how they have been baffled in their efforts to accomplish a national purpose.

Mr. President, David Lloyd-George said the other day that this was a question of "ships, and more ships, and still more ships," paraphrasing what Danton said long ago about "audacity, and more audacity, and still more audacity." But back of all that is a still more important thing, and that is to destroy the agencies which are destroying the shipping. The shipping right now is sufficient if you can insure it against future destruction. It seems to me that what we have mainly fallen down on is in not destroying the submarines and in not decreasing the weekly destruction which the German submarines are making upon not only American but neutral shipping as well as the shipping of our allies.

I have no fear of the full glare of publicity being thrown upon any of the operations of this Government, because I know that publicity can do no harm and can possibly do a great deal of good. Nor has any man connected with this administration directly or indirectly the slightest objection to it or antagonism to it.

Of course the Senate in carrying on any investigation will not go into matters that men of common sense know ought to be "taboo" in connection with an investigation, and those matters will suggest themselves to any man of ordinary intelligence or ordinary loyalty. If there be those in the Senate who would exploit their lukewarmness in connection with the war or their objection to it through "investigatory" methods the balance of the Senate I imagine can hold them down.

It seems to me that this resolution ought to pass and that this committee ought to go to work, not because I think there is anything wrong. The very worst that can be imagined is that there has been a lack of cooperation because of bringing together men of military training on one hand and men of business training on the other. Whatever the fault is we can find it out, and I am satisfied that nobody will be more glad to find out what it is than the men who are in charge of this particular business, or will be more glad rather to find out how to remedy it than the men in charge of this particular business, and especially the man who is at the head of it.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, let the Senate indulge me but for a minute.

I stood on this floor presenting the qualifications of the present chairman of the Shipping Board as being worthy of acceptance when the matter of confirmation was considered by this body. I should like to give my indorsement to the flattering but just encomium of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] touching Chairman Hurley. There is no better business man, there is no more patriotic man, and none, in my judgment, who brings to bear more devoted service. I am satisfied that anything that may be disclosed by an investigation or by act of Congress that could indicate how we could improve the service would be promptly accepted by him.

But, Mr. President, I wish to be a little more explicit than the Senator from Mississippi. I take upon myself a little further responsibility.

Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi indicated, and he could have gone further and very freely stated, what is the real trouble. When there was an effort made through the proceedings of some executive branch of the Government to try to coalesce and merge the services of the Navy together with that of the merchant marine there arose what has been heretofore termed upon a more memorable occasion an irrepressible conflict. The pride of officials of the Navy and the opinion of men in the civil administration ran at once counter, and, to use the words I used upon the same subject matter once before upon this floor, there arose a contest of epaulets. This seems ever to arise, as the Senator from Mississippi aptly intimates, whenever there is an effort to bring these two branches of the service together.

Mr. President, without saying which of them may be right, which opinion should prevail, may I add this, that I happen to know that the officials of the present Shipping Board will welcome the resolution of the eminent Senator from Ohio and the undertaking by this committee in order, sir, that there may be ascertained at the earliest moment two things: First, where is the responsibility for the constant divergencies and the constant conflicts which are being aired in the public press, as they should be, which is giving a very bad view of the United States to the outside. Second, to definitely establish who shall have the authority to proceed in certain directions, that there may be no longer a further conflict.

I join, sir, in the suggestion of the Senator from Mississippi in the support of the resolution of the Senator from Ohio, and hope that the resolution will receive at once a unanimous vote.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I desire to make only a few remarks in connection with the action of the Navy and the Shipping Board. The Navy has always been invited when they want to determine what kind of ships to build as to the method of construction. If these ships had been turned over to the Navy I believe they would have been under contract and in process of construction. We are building ships, largely cruisers and destroyers, and every type of ship for transports and supplies is under construction and in rapid process of construction.

The trouble has been the naval officers have not been given the authority to construct these ships when they have been selected as managers. Consequently, naval men can not spend their entire time when needed for the construction of ships by the Navy in making suggestions to boards.

It seems to me that the matter should be investigated, and it should be determined why the board can not construct ships as rapidly as the Navy can construct them. I am glad everybody thinks the time has come to ascertain whether the method is good and to put the responsibility where it ought to be, to see why ships are not being constructed which are absolutely necessary for us to conduct the war to a successful conclusion.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, to the resolution offered by the Senator from Ohio I have no objection at all, and I presume it is broad enough to cover the object in view. I would suggest as an amendment to it, in order to make it more effective, these words:

And that the committee be, and is, authorized during the Sixty-fifth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths and employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with the subject which may be pending before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee or any subcommittee thereof may sit during the sessions or recess of the Senate.

That is the usual form.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I suggest to the Senator from Florida that if he adds that language the resolution will be compelled to be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and it can not be adopted now because there is a law which requires that reference.

Mr. FLETCHER. Could not the committee report immediately within an hour or so?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know; I am not a member of the committee now, but there is a law which requires that every payment out of the contingent fund must go to the Committee on Contingent Expenses, and you can not even by unanimous consent, in either House, vary from that law. So I suggest to the Senator from Florida to leave out that part of it and merely put in the general language that the committee shall have authority to sit in the recess of Congress and conduct this investigation. Then when we come back after the Christmas holidays the resolution may be introduced to pay the expenses, and it may then be sent to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator I do not think there is any need of that, because there are now in the Chamber most of the members of the committee. They can meet within 15 minutes on the resolution and report it back. I believe that that ought to be put in the resolution because of the fact that no expenditures could be made without it. I think if we are going into the examination, the committee ought to have that authority and make a thorough examination.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know that any expense will be incurred necessarily, but if the Senator is sure that a quorum of the committee are upon the floor and the resolution can be reported back right away, then I shall have no objection, of course.

Mr. SMOOT. I can assure the Senator that a majority of the committee are on the floor of the Senate at this moment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio accept the amendment of the Senator from Florida?

Mr. HARDING. I would be very glad to accept the amendment with the understanding that the resolution is to be referred to the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

MIDSHIPMEN AT THE NAVAL ACADEMY.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate House bill 6967, to increase the number of midshipmen at the United States Naval Academy, which will be considered as having been read twice by its title.

Mr. SWANSON. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. SWANSON. I should like to say, before the Senator from New Hampshire proceeds, that I have polled the members of the Naval Committee who are in the city, and it is their desire that this bill shall pass before the recess for the holidays is taken.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then, let the bill be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and be immediately reported back. Let us have the usual procedure.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs I am authorized to report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 6967) to increase the number of midshipmen at the United States Naval Academy, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter there shall be allowed at the United States Naval Academy 5 midshipmen for each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress, 1 for Porto Rico, 2 for the District of Columbia, 15 appointed each year at large, and 100 appointed annually from enlisted men of the Navy, as now authorized by law.

SEC. 2. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. OVERMAN. As the bill has not been read, I should like to know what increase is proposed to be made in the number of midshipmen?

Mr. SWANSON. I will say that at present there are three permanent midshipmen allowed each Senator and Representative. One additional temporary midshipman was allowed until the 1st of September, 1918, making four in all. Authorization for the additional midshipman will expire on the 1st of September, 1918. The only increase of midshipmen at the Naval Academy proposed in the bill is from four to five for each Senator and each Member of the House of Representatives.

Mr. MYERS. I will ask is this a House bill or a Senate bill?

Mr. SWANSON. It is a House bill and has been passed by the House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill was passed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CALDER. I present a petition of the Legislative League of New York, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the petition was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW YORK, December 6, 1917.

To the SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

GENTLEMEN: The officers and members of the National Legislative League do respectfully request you to enact such legislation as shall relieve all native-born American women from loss of citizenship in this Republic, even when married to a citizen or a subject of another nation.

We ask this because such loss of citizenship entails on women such injury by the forfeiture of property which can not in some States be held by an alien, and deprives them, even in case of widowhood, of that protection which the United States should always extend to her daughters as well as to her sons.

We ask it because the women of this country have done their best in all times of war or public distress to serve the Nation by many noble acts of philanthrophy and devotion, and, finally, because it is a cruel and unjustifiable wrong to deprive any loyal and honorable daughter of the land of her birthright of citizenship in this Republic.

IDA L. SLACK,
President of Legislative League.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented petitions of sundry citizens of Muskegon and Saginaw Counties, in the State of Michigan, praying for the submission of a Federal suffrage amendment to the legislatures of the several States, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PHELAN presented a petition of the Humboldt Chamber of Commerce, of Eureka, Cal., praying that an appropriation be made for a survey of the Pacific coast military highway, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the city council of Alameda, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation providing punishment for any spy found in this country, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. THOMPSON presented a petition of Local Branch No. 110, Ladies' Auxiliary, National Association of Letter Carriers, of Pittsburg, Kans., praying for an increase in the salaries of letter carriers, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a petition of Haskell Institute, Federal Employees Union, of Lawrence, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation to increase the salaries of Government employees, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. McLEAN presented petitions signed by 3,000 citizens of Hartford, Conn., praying for an increase in the salaries of postal employees, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. KENYON presented petitions of the Monday Club of Decorah, of the Current Events Club of Decorah, of A. E. Anderson and sundry other citizens of Arlington, and of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Des Moines, all in the State of Iowa, praying for national prohibition and for the submission of a Federal suffrage amendment to the legislatures of the several States, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HALE presented a petition of sundry citizens of Maine, praying for the enactment of legislation to curb the activity of pro-German sympathizers, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SUTHERLAND presented petitions of the congregation of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of Lewisburg, W. Va., praying for national prohibition, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the congregations of the Presbyterian Church and the Methodist Church of Lewisburg, W. Va., praying for censorship of motion-picture films, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS COMMISSION.

Mr. MARTIN. In the last sundry civil appropriation act a provision was incorporated creating a joint commission known as the public buildings commission to investigate and report relative to providing permanent quarters for all the Government activities in the District of Columbia. The commission was required to report by the first day of January, 1918. I am authorized by that commission to make the report, which I now submit.

I will say that the report gives a large fund of exceedingly valuable information. We do not finally dispose of the matter, but the information will be useful in the further investigation and disposition of the subject. I ask that the report be printed and that 100 additional copies be printed for the use of the Senate, 25 copies to go to the Committees on Appropriations and the Committees on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate and the House of Representatives, and the remainder to be distributed to Senators and Representatives according to the usual rule under which Senate documents are distributed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Virginia has asked that additional copies be printed?

Mr. MARTIN. I have put it in that form.

Mr. SMOOT. That is necessary because of the fact that the law requires that the regular print shall be distributed in a certain way.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask that 100 additional copies be printed so as to provide the distribution which I have suggested.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Virginia? The Chair hears none and it is so ordered.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. WEEKS:

A bill (S. 3291) to amend section 9 (a) of Title I of an act entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," approved September 8, 1916; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 3292) granting a pension to Jennie Magee; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. STERLING:

A bill (S. 3293) for the relief of Vinson Slasor (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 3294) granting a pension to Rebecca Fullerton (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHERMAN:

A bill (S. 3295) for the relief of Charles Taffee; to the Committee on Military Affairs;

A bill (S. 3296) granting a pension to Jennie B. Spiker; and

A bill (S. 3297) granting a pension to Selma M. E. Kattner; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PENROSE:

A bill (S. 3298) incorporating the Supreme Lodge of the World, Loyal Order of Moose; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. OVERMAN:

By Mr. THOMPSON:

A bill (S. 3300) for the relief of Sylvester P. Hill; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 3301) granting an increase of pension to Oxley Johnson (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 3302) granting a pension to Orval W. Hiatt (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SUTHERLAND:

A bill (S. 3303) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of John H. Galloway; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 3304) granting a pension to Arzanna Nesbitt; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HALE:

A bill (S. 3305) granting an increase of pension to Leonard H. Bunker;

A bill (S. 3306) granting a pension to Clara E. Stuart (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 3307) granting an increase of pension to Horace G. Maloon (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

RAILROAD TRAFFIC DIRECTOR.

Mr. STERLING. I introduce a joint resolution providing for the appointment of a general railroad traffic director, which I ask may be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. In view of the fact that Congress is about to adjourn for the holidays, I should like unanimous consent to have the joint resolution printed in the RECORD.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 118) providing for the appointment of a general railroad traffic director was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That for a period during the present war and in order to meet the present emergency in regard to the transportation of food, fuel, and other products or commodities essential to the public welfare the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a general railroad traffic director who shall have the power, and whose duty it shall be, to have and exercise general supervision and direction over the handling and movement of all railroad freight trains engaged in the transportation of any such products or commodities in order that the railroad facilities of the United States may be fully coordinated and utilized in the transportation and delivery without waste or unnecessary delay of such products or commodities. That in order to meet the public exigencies or the needs of any particular section or community for any of said products or commodities, as well as to serve the military or other governmental needs, the said traffic director shall have the power and it shall be his duty to determine when necessary all questions of priority between different shipments of such products or commodities, including shipments made on Government account, and in all cases of conflict between railroads relative to priority in making any shipment or shipments, or in all cases of conflict between any of the various departments of Government and said railroads or between governmental agencies themselves as to precedence or priority in any given shipment or shipments, it shall be the duty of said director to determine such priority according to the national needs and the public or community exigencies of the case. And the said director is hereby authorized to make and give notice of any proper order directing or staying such shipment or shipments as said several needs and exigencies may require.

Any officer, director, or manager of any railroad company failing, neglecting, or refusing to obey the order of said general traffic director so made shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $5,000 or imprisoned not exceeding five years, or by both such fine and imprisonment: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to in any manner deprive such railroads of the right to just compensation for shipments made either under contracts for such shipments or under the supervision and direction of said traffic director.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—HENRY M. BRYANT.

On motion of Mr. JONES of Washington, it was ordered that the papers accompanying the bill (S. 4393, 64th Cong., 2d sess.) granting an increase of pension to Henry M. Bryant be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

INTERSTATE TRANSPORTATION.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I submit the resolution which I send to the desk, and ask that it be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. But I make this suggestion: If I can secure a favorable report immediately, I intend to ask for the consideration of the resolution at this time, as I regard its passage as very important. I may say, Mr. President, in order that those who are here may know what is the object of the resolution——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I suggest to the Senator that the resolution should first be read.

Mr. CUMMINS. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 171), as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the Senate is hereby authorized and directed, by subcommittee or otherwise, to inquire into and report to the Senate at the earliest practical date upon the recommendations made by the Interstate Commerce Commission regarding conditions affecting interstate transportation; that said committee may conduct such inquiry by subcommittee or otherwise, and shall be empowered to hold sessions during the recess of the Senate, and for this purpose the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is empowered to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to summon and compel the attendance of witnesses, to conduct hearings and have reports of same printed for use, and any expense in connection with such inquiry shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa consulted me with reference to the presentation of this resolution, and I told him that I would make no objection to it. It will be necessary, however, to have the approval of the Committee on Contingent Expenses, I think, before the resolution can be adopted.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want to ask the Senator from Iowa a question. As I understood the reading of the resolution, it is limited to an investigation of the recommendations which have been made by the Interstate Commerce Commission. Would that prohibit the Committee on Interstate Commerce from making an independent investigation on any line which it may deem wise?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I suppose it would not; but in any event the recommendations of the Interstate Commerce Commission are so broad and comprehensive, at least the report is so comprehensive, that it would permit an inquiry into any subject that is now pertinent to the immediate question before us.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Very well.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the purpose of the resolution, I think, is apparent. That our facilities for transportation are now inadequate I think must be taken for granted. The Interstate Commerce Commission has considered that subject and has made a report on the general conditions which now prevail. I must not be understood as imputing any blame to the railroad companies; I think they are doing all they can; I do not impute any blame to the Government, for I think its direction has been as wise as under the circumstances could have been expected; but the truth is that our railroads were neither located nor built to meet the extraordinary conditions which now confront us. If we intend to make these lines of transportation sufficient to meet the extraordinary emergency, we must do something to unite their energies so that the various railroad managers would not feel under obligations to the stockholders and bondholders, so far as the management and operation of particular railways are concerned.

I think it is understood, Mr. President, that this is intended to be helpful and not critical. I think it is understood that presently there will be a recommendation from the President upon this very grave subject. We ought to be prepared as well as we can be when the recommendation reaches Congress to act speedily upon it, because the people of the country are suffering now—seriously suffering—and the conduct of the war is suffering because the transportation facilities are not able to bear the burden that has been put upon them.

I ask the Senator from Kansas whether he can now make a report on the resolution from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate?

Mr. THOMPSON. The resolution has not yet been referred to the committee.

Mr. CUMMINS. Under the rule the resolution must be so referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair was waiting for the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] to conclude before referring the resolution to a committee. If the Senator from Iowa has concluded, the Chair will now refer the resolution to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just one word on the resolution. I fully indorse the resolution; I think it should pass; but I really believe that the committee already has power to make the investigation proposed. In order, however, to make it absolutely sure, I will say to the chairman of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate that, so far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing that the resolution should be reported from the committee at once.

Mr. THOMPSON. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report back favorably without amendment Senate resolution 171.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution just reported from the committee by the Senator from Kansas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the resolution be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 171), as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the Senate is hereby authorized and directed, by subcommittee or otherwise, to inquire into and report to the Senate at the earliest practical date upon the recommendations made by the Interstate Commerce Commission regarding conditions affecting interstate transportation; that said committee may conduct such inquiry by subcommittee or otherwise and shall be empowered to hold sessions during the recess of the Senate, and for this purpose the committee, or any subcommitee thereof, is empowered to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to summon and compel the attendance of witnesses, to conduct hearings and have reports of same printed for use, and any expense in connection with such inquiry shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I join in the request of the Senator from Iowa that immediate consideration be given to the resolution which he has offered.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

INVESTIGATION OF THE SHIPPING BOARD.

Mr. THOMPSON. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report back favorably without amendment Senate resolution 170, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 170), as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to proceed at once with an investigation of the program and progress of the building of merchant vessels under the direction of the United States Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation, and that the committee be, and hereby is, authorized, during the Sixty-fifth Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths, to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recess of the Senate.

Mr. HARDING. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I simply desire to make one observation. I trust that the committee in its investigation will take into consideration the propriety of getting rid of this dual organization and put some business man at the head of one organization that can build these ships. If that could be accomplished I think we would have some ships.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think so, too.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, inasmuch as the ship matter is again up, I want to say one word in regard to the Navy, which has been reflected upon. The Navy has not sought, as I understand, to build the merchant ships, but if the building of those ships is given to the Navy they will be built. The ships of the Navy are being built and they are being turned out with the greatest possible rapidity in the classes which are most needed. I do not in the least desire to thrust upon the Navy the building of our merchant ships, but it is entirely unfair to say that the Navy has anything to do with the delay.

I regard Mr. Hurley as a most excellent man. I spoke of him in the Senate at the time of his appointment, but all that we can say after these months is that we have had the Shipping Board now for nearly a year——

Mr. SMOOT. A year and three months.

Mr. LODGE. And we have not any ships, and apparently there is not much prospect of getting ships. My own belief is that if we would abolish the Shipping Board and put in one thoroughly competent man with responsibility as the head of the shipping corporation, or whatever you choose to call it, and tell him to go ahead and build ships, we would get the work done; but we shall not do so under the present system. I blame no individual, either civilian or naval officer; the system is all wrong.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, in examining the resolution hastily I notice that the work of the committee is confined to the investigation "of the program and progress." I should think it would be desirable, if we wish to know exactly what the trouble is, if there is trouble, to include all matters connected with the building of the ships.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does not the word "progress" cover that?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Technically "progress" means to find out to what extent they have progressed, whether the ships are 20 per cent completed or 40 per cent completed. I assume that the Senate would perhaps like to know concerning the contracts in relation to the ships, the prices to be charged, and things of that kind. If we say "all matters in connection therewith," the committee can go as far as they like.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think "progress" covers it. That includes the activities of the board as well as the rapidity of progress.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I have no objection to the amendment suggested by the Senator from Connecticut; I think he has made a very good suggestion.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, the author of the resolution has no objection to broadening its scope in any way.

Mr. FLETCHER. Will the Senator from Connecticut suggest where the amendment should come in?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I suggest that it come in so as to read something like this: "Inquire into the program, progress, and all matters concerning or connected with the building of merchant ships." What I mean is, if in the course of the inquiry a certain state of facts develops which the inquirers do not now know about, they may do what their judgment dictates and not be estopped by the wording of the resolution.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the Senator's suggestion is a very good one, although I thought perhaps the words "program and progress" would probably be sufficient.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have offered the amendment and the Secretary is now trying to insert it in the proper place, as I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the resolution so as to read:

Proceed at once with an investigation of the program, progress, and all matters connected with the building of merchant vessels under the direction of the Federal Shipping Board.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] suggests that I should include also the words "and the recommendations."

Mr. WILLIAMS. "Recommendations to remedy the existing difficulty."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be so modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to proceed at once with an investigation of the program, progress, and all matters connected with the building of merchant vessels under the direction of the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, and to report its findings to the Senate at the earliest practical day, together with such recommendations as it may see fit to make as to remedies for existing difficulties, if any; and for this purpose the committee is authorized, during the Sixty-fifth Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths; to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee or any subcommittee thereof may sit during the sessions or recess of the Senate.

CIVIL-SERVICE EXAMINATIONS.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I send to the desk a joint resolution and ask that it be read for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the joint resolution introduced by the Senator from Ohio.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 117) amending the act of July 2, 1909, governing the holding of civil-service examinations, was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the act of July 2, 1909 (36th Stats. L., 1), is hereby amended so as to permit the United States Civil Service Commission, during the period of the war, to hold examinations of applicants for positions in the Government service in the District of Columbia and to permit applicants from the several States and Territories of the United States to take said examinations in the said District of Columbia. Said examinations shall be permitted in addition to those required to be held by said act of July 2, 1909. (36 Stats. L., 1.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, before that is done allow me to say a word concerning the purpose of the joint resolution. The Civil Service Commission are required to hold examinations for those who seek to get on the eligible list throughout the several States and Territories of the country and under the statutes referred to in the resolution all applicants shall apply for examination in the State or Territory where they reside. Very recently there has been an effort made on the part of the Civil Service Commission and other departments of the Government to get young men and women to enter the service in a clerical capacity, and a good many young men and young women have come to Washington, assuming that they could get positions, not knowing of the statute which required them to stand examination in the States and Territories in which they reside.

The result is that under the law as it now is they would be required to go to the expense of returning to their homes to pass these examinations; and the commission seek to have this statute modified during the period of the war so that it will be permissible for them to hold these examinations and for applicants to enter these examinations here in the District in addition to the examinations which are required to be held in the States and Territories.

Mr. SMOOT subsequently said: From the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment I report back favorably, without amendment, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 117) amending the act of July 2, 1909, governing the holding of civil-service examinations, and I ask its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the act of July 2, 1909 (36 Stats. L., No. 1), is hereby amended so as to permit the United States Civil Service Commission, during the period of the war, to hold examinations of applicants for positions in the Government service in the District of Columbia, and to permit applicants from the several States and Territories of the United States to take said examinations in the said District of Columbia. Said examinations shall be permitted in addition to those required to be held by said act of July 2, 1909 (36 Stat. L., No. 1).

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, from what I have learned about the Civil Service Commission, I think it might as well go out of business now as at any other time. They are taking on to my knowledge hundreds and thousands of people without civil-service examination. I ask that the matter go over, Mr. President. I want to look into it.

Mr. POMERENE. May I make a suggestion to the Senator before that order is made? This matter just came to my attention this morning. I understand that it is true, as a matter of necessity, that these rules have been suspended temporarily, and, as I have been told, these young people have been advised that they must take their examinations within 90 days, if I am correctly informed. If this joint resolution becomes a law, it will avoid the necessity of suspending this rule in the way that I have indicated, so that these examinations may be held.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, while I am not enamored with the civil-service law, I have never made any particular attack upon it. The civil-service law provides that the employees of the Government shall be apportioned to the States and Territories. These young people have come here without any reference to that, I take it. They will be examined, and that salutary provision of the law, as I think, will be ignored. I do not think they ought to have been invited here as they were. They ought to have been told before they came here that there was a civil-service law on the statute books. They ought to have come here with that knowledge in their minds. But they came here pell-mell. They have been put into positions that they are not qualified to fill, and they are doing the best they can; and they will be coached now and will probably pass some sort of a civil-service examination.

I have a feeling of a good deal of disgust with the way things are going. The President has the power, and he exercises it, under some old statute that somebody revived, to exempt almost anybody from civil-service examination. He is doing it, and these people are put in places without any regard to the civil-service law.

I think this is a matter of sufficient importance to be looked into, and I object to its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In view of the objection, the joint resolution will have to go over.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I say in answer to the Senator that this joint resolution does not suspend that part of the statute which regulates the distribution of these clerks among the several States. If that statute has been suspended, or if it has been ignored, this amendment does not recognize or authorize such a change as would seem to be indicated by the statement made by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, Mr. President, I think they have been given 90 days at least, have they not?

Mr. POMERENE. I have heard that statement made. I can not state that authoritatively, but that is my general information.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think so; so that time will not expire before we meet again. I should like to look into the matter; that is all.

Mr. POMERENE. But, Mr. President, if I may make the suggestion, this prevents the young people who are here now from taking these examinations. It seems to me it would aid the purpose the Senator has in mind if this joint resolution were to be passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. No; I prefer that it go over. The other body would not act on it to-day, anyway, if we were to pass it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will go over.

Mr. GALLINGER subsequently said: Mr. President, in reference to the joint resolution introduced by the Senator from Ohio, I was laboring under a misapprehension, if the matter has been properly presented to me. I supposed that all these young people were given employment for 90 days. Senators tell me that there are a good many of them here who have not any employment, but who want to take an examination. That being the case, I want to withdraw my objection and allow the joint resolution to be considered.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The morning business is closed.

MINING OF COAL, ETC., ON THE PUBLIC DOMAIN.

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business, being Senate bill 2812.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2812) to encourage and promote mining of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, potassium, and sodium on the public domain.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment, on page 12, line 15, to strike out "or within naval petroleum reserve numbered two."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 12, line 15, it is proposed to strike out the words "or within naval petroleum reserve numbered 2."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SWANSON. On page 13, lines 15 to 19, I move to strike out the proviso.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 13, lines 15 to 19, it is proposed to strike out the proviso, as follows:

Provided further, That all royalties received under the provisions of this section from said naval petroleum reserve numbered 2, whether in oil or money, shall be delivered or credited to the United States Navy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SWANSON. On page 13, lines 22 to 24, I move to strike out "numbered 1, in the State of California, or naval petroleum reserve numbered 3, in the State of Wyoming."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 13, lines 22, 23, and 24, it is proposed to strike out the words "numbered 1, in the State of California, or naval petroleum reserve numbered 3, in the State of Wyoming."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the amendment just offered by the Senator from Virginia would leave the three lines above it meaning nothing at all. His amendment, if it is going to be adopted, ought to begin with the word "That," on line 19, page 13. The whole proviso ought to go out, and not simply the lines the Senator has just mentioned. In other words, what the Senator desires is, after the word "Navy," to strike out the words:

And provided further, That none of the provisions of this section or of this act shall be applicable to or affect lands or minerals included within the limits of naval petroleum reserves numbered 1, in the State of California, or naval petroleum reserve numbered 3, in the State of Wyoming.

Mr. SWANSON. No; I desire to have that language changed a little. I want that part stricken out and on page 13, line 21, insert "any" between "of" and "naval," so that the proviso will read:

And provided further, That none of the provisions of this section or of this act shall be applicable to or affect lands or minerals included within the limits of any naval petroleum reserve.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It seems to me there can be no objection to that.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have no objection to that amendment, but I want to ask the Senator from Wyoming if he is satisfied with having naval reserve No. 3, located in Wyoming, eliminated from the bill.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, so far as I am informed, there has been no controversy about that naval reserve, so that I assume the elimination of it at this time will be satisfactory to the people of my State. Personally, I do not believe that it will ever be used for naval purposes, but I am perfectly willing to trust to future legislation for its proper disposition and the correction of any error to which our attention may not have been called.

Mr. SMOOT. If it is satisfactory to the people of Wyoming, I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Virginia, so that I may know, not having had time to examine all these matters, the effect of his amendment. As I understand, it is simply to eliminate. It does not put anything else in the bill.

Mr. SWANSON. These amendments simply eliminate from the bill every allusion to the naval petroleum reserves. They do not put anything at all in the bill. They simply eliminate those entirely, so that they are not affected by this legislation.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I desire to offer another amendment. After the word "Alaska," in line 16, page 4, I move to insert "not previously entered under the preceding section 2 hereof."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will suggest to the Senator that if he follows the same language used in the other parts of the bill, it would read as follows:

Unless previously entered under section 2 of this act.

Mr. SHAFROTH. All right; that is satisfactory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the words "Territory of Alaska," on page 4, line 16, it is proposed to insert the words "unless previously entered under section 2 of this act."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I desire to offer a few formal amendments to the bill. I send them to the desk and ask that they be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 3, it is proposed to strike out the word "potassium" and the comma following it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 7, commencing with the word "or," the first word in the line, it is proposed to strike out to and including the word "such," on line 8, or the following words: "or to those who have declared their intention to become such."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator why he desires to strike out those words. They are the words which are used in nearly all of the land laws in which there is a right given to entry.

Mr. PITTMAN. We are treating as alien enemies the subjects of foreign countries who are in that category; and I thought that during this war it would not be advisable to pass an act giving any civil rights to those to whom we are denying rights under our war conditions. That is the reason.

Mr. SMOOT. I asked the question not because I objected to these words going out but simply because I wanted to have a record made of the reason why the change in our general land laws was made at this particular time.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is the reason at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. Also, on page 2, line 4, after the word "any," the second word in the line, before the word "association," it is proposed to insert the words "citizen or any," so that, if amended, it will read:

SEC. 2. That any citizen or any association composed of persons—

And so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 1, after the word "such" it is proposed to insert the word "person," so as to read: "no such person, association, or corporation."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to have the Secretary read the provision as it is now amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. As amended, beginning at the top of page 3, it reads:

No such person, association, or corporation shall own coal lands entered after the passage of this act in excess of said area.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next amendment.

The SECRETARY. Also on page 3, line 15, after the word "any," it is proposed to insert the word "person," so that it will read:

That any person, association, or corporation, member of such association—

And so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, line 16——

Mr. PITTMAN. That has already been taken care of by the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

The SECRETARY. On page 15, it is proposed to strike out line 24 and all down to and including line 21 on page 21.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is potassium.

Mr. SMOOT. That is for the reason that it has already been acted upon by the Senate.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is true. It has become a law in a separate act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 30, line 5, strike out the word "no" and insert in lieu the word "all."

Mr. PITTMAN. That will be understood as taken in connection with the next amendment that I am offering.

Mr. SMOOT. There will have to be another amendment, for it would never do that way.

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask to have the amendment passed over until the next amendment is stated and that the two be regarded as one amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 30, line 6, insert, after the word "lands" the words "heretofore withdrawn from entry, except those reserved for the Navy, shall be subject to this act, and none of such lands shall hereafter be withdrawn from the operation of this act for a longer period than one year without the consent of Congress," so that it will read:

Provided, That all coal, oil, gas, potassium, or sodium lands heretofore withdrawn from entry, except those reserved for the Navy, shall be subject to this act, and none of such lands shall hereafter be withdrawn from the operation of this act for a longer period than one year without the consent of Congress.

Mr. PITTMAN. That makes definite the question that was up between the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Has the Senator from Nevada any further amendment to offer?

Mr. PITTMAN. I have no further amendment to offer.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 2, line 11, I move to strike out the words "or reserved," so that the section down to those words following after the word "municipalities" will read as follows:

That any association composed of persons severally qualified by law to enter coal lands, or any corporation incorporated under and by virtue of the laws of any State, or any municipality of any State, shall upon application to the register of the proper land office, have the right to enter by legal subdivisions any quantity of vacant coal lands of the United States within any State of the Union not otherwise appropriated by competent authority.

Mr. PITTMAN. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 15, line 2, I move to strike out the word "such" and insert "a" so that it will read:

And any person who at the time of any withdrawal order heretofore made was a bona fide occupant or claimant of oil or gas bearing lands within such withdrawn area.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 15, line 6, after the word "discovery," I move to strike out the balance of that line and all down to and including the word "claim" in line 11. In other words, I ask that these words be stricken out:

If the claim was initiated within less than three years prior to the withdrawal, and such claimant had performed a reasonable amount of work preparatory and essential to the sinking of a well or wells, and who because of and in obedience to such order desisted from the prosecution of work for the development of such claim.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, that matter was a subject of long consideration by the committee and on that account, it seems to me, the text of the bill ought not to be changed. If that is done there ought to be a change in the second line and the words "or claimant" ought to be eliminated. It is contended by some that some of these claimants have never done any work and that they go back not only for 3 years but for 30 years and claim as if they are bona fide occupants all right. To say "or if they were bona fide claimants" would open up a field for any number of persons to claim by saying "Oh, I always claimed that as mine." So if the amendment which is offered by the Senator from Utah prevails, the words "or claimant" ought to be stricken out.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say that in some instances the claims were initiated more than three years prior to the withdrawal by prospectors in good faith and acting in good faith, and with the bill as it now stands such locators would be deprived of their equities, the same passing into the hands of those who are unable to secure possession through the courts of law. In the oil fields of Wyoming, if that provision is allowed to remain in the bill and becomes the law, some of the locators who located three years prior to the time mentioned here will be deprived of all the rights that they may have to those locations. In other words, Mr. President, a man who jumped his land and has undertaken through the courts to deprive the locator of it will secure title to the land rather than the original locator. I do not believe we ought to give any such class of citizens any advantages at all in securing the oil lands of Wyoming.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The department seems to desire that that limitation shall be placed in the bill for the purpose of preventing people from going back for half a century and claiming something that they had done no work upon. There ought to be some limitation and inasmuch as that limitation was placed there and these lands were withdrawn in 1909, and that would make it in 1906, if a person did not comply with the act and find oil within that time it seems to me there should be that limitation.

Mr. SMOOT. They may have been upon the land, they may have been prosecuting the claim as best they could, complying with all the requirements of the law as to the expenditure of money and as to the drilling of a well, and yet it would have been impossible to find oil within the three years' limit. There are many men, I am informed, who find themselves exactly in that condition, and if this provision becomes a law they would have no recourse whatever.

Mr. BORAH. Is this the limitation clause of section 17?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. If the bill is not to be disposed of until after the holidays, as I hope it will not, I should like to have an opportunity to examine this section. I have not had time to look into it, but I have had messages in regard to it which lead me to believe that we ought to investigate it. I ask the Senator from Nevada if it is the intention to have the bill come to a vote to-day. Due to the fact that we have only seven or eight Members in the Senate Chamber, I ask the Senator if he would not be willing to fix a certain time to vote after the holidays.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will state it was my intention to ask for a unanimous-consent agreement in a few minutes so that this matter may go over until after the holidays.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, if this matter is going over and the bill itself is going over until after the holidays, I ask the Senator now to allow me to withdraw the amendment I have offered, and I will get more definite information than I have at the present time. My only object in offering it is to secure the right of certain citizens to what seems to me to be a just claim on their part. Of course, if it is not, I would not ask to have the amendment made, nor would I press it in any way. I will promise the Senator from Nevada that between now and the 4th day of January I will have more information in detail than I have at the present time.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I happen to know something about this question, on account of the large number of Pennsylvanians who are engaged in Wyoming in developing these lands. It is my understanding that if the period of three years could be made five years it would cover the situation.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it go over.

Mr. PENROSE. Why not make the amendment providing for five years now, and it can be further amended, if necessary, after the recess.

Mr. KENDRICK. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. PENROSE. I shall make that motion or have the Senator make it, if agreeable to him. I move to strike out "three" and insert "five," and then the paragraph can be still further amended when the bill comes up for final passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah has a pending amendment, which will preclude this amendment.

Mr. PENROSE. I modify his amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. As I stated, I will withdraw my amendment, and I will say now if an amendment is offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania, and if it is adopted, I reserve the right to offer my amendment when the bill reaches the Senate. I reserve that right now.

Mr. PENROSE. It was shown to me that there were a number of claims beyond dispute that would be kept out by this three years' limitation, but that all legitimate claims would be covered by a limitation of five years.

Mr. BORAH. In view of the fact that we can not in all probability dispose of the bill to-day, why not permit us to have all the details? I do not know whether a provision for five years is necessary or whether it will cover the situation. It is manifest that some people are very much dissatisfied with the limitation in the bill and claim that it is practically an adjudication on the part of Congress of their claims. I wish the Senator from Nevada would permit this matter to go over until after the holidays.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will say to the Senator from Idaho this is a matter which seems to be of peculiar interest to the people of Wyoming. In fact, I know of no other section of the country that would be interfered with by this particular section. When the committee were considering the matter they were given to understand that three years would protect any bona fide claimants of land, and the committee were desirous of protecting against any fraudulent claims.

The Senator from Idaho must realize that it was shown in the committee that if there was not any limit placed to the time these claims may have been initiated a man may say that 20 years ago I posted a location notice on a claim.

Mr. PENROSE. No one contends, I understand, for more than five years.

Mr. PITTMAN. It is a matter largely with the citizens of those States, and the committee thought that a limitation of three years would take care of all bona fide claims. They may be mistaken about that, and if mistaken about it the limitation can be changed to five years.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. It may be that the Senator from Nevada is entirely correct, because I confess I am dealing with this matter somewhat in the dark. I should not have called attention to this particular clause at all had it not been for some telegrams which I have had the privilege of reading; but I am unable to protect the parties who sent the telegrams, because I do not know just exactly what they want. However, if the bill is going over anyway, I do not see why it should not carry with it this amendment. I should like even before I urge any change in the bill at all to know more about the facts in regard to it. I may not be in favor of any change. I do not want to protect any fraudulent claim. Nobody in the Chamber does, of course.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator in charge of the bill suggests that we pass it over, so that we can look into the matter further.

Mr. KENDRICK. I should like to see the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania prevail and the change made to five years instead of three. It is a step in the right direction anyway. I am sure that it would bring the necessary relief to the majority of my people, and if we got nothing better later on we would have that much gained anyway.

Mr. BORAH. In view of what the Senator from Wyoming says, I am perfectly willing to take his judgment, with the understanding that if a state of facts is developed to warrant it we shall have the privilege of going into this section again with a view of amending it if we want to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Senator from Utah withdraws his amendment?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania to strike out "three" and insert "five" before the word "years," in line 7, on page 15.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PITTMAN. I send the following request for unanimous-consent agreement to the desk and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the proposed agreement.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that at not later than from 5 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of January 4, 1918, the Senate will proceed to vote, without further debate, upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the bill S. 2812, a bill to encourage and promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, potassium, and sodium on the public domain through the regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition, and that after the hour of 2 o'clock p. m. on said calendar day no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 10 minutes upon the bill, or more than once nor longer than 10 minutes upon any amendment offered thereto.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will venture to suggest to my friend the Senator from Nevada, that he put the date a little further along. Our recess will not expire until the 3d, and during the meantime some of us want to look into this measure a little more carefully than we have done. Would not the Senator be willing to make it a couple of days later than the 4th?

Mr. PITTMAN. I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that I took that matter up with a number of Senators beforehand, and the Senators having charge of legislation on this side are very urgent to get this bill out of the way. Out of respect to their wishes and to those who are conducting legislation on this side I have fixed the date on the 4th. I think that will give us ample time to look into the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will not delay this action.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not propose to delay it unduly.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I know the Senator would not delay it intentionally longer than it is necessary for a proper consideration.

Mr. GALLINGER. We come here on the 3d and, of course, will do nothing on that day; and the day fixed in the agreement is the very first day that we will be in session, of course.

Mr. PITTMAN. As far as I know, everyone favoring this bill has spoken. I know of no one else who cares to speak.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest to the Senator to make it the 5th. There can be no objection to that, surely, on the part of the friends of the bill.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] is very anxious to get important legislation passed, and several other Senators have been urging that this measure be gotten out of the way speedily.

Mr. GALLINGER. But we are going to be here six more or eight months, anyway, in all human probability.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. But the Senator will appreciate that as soon as we get into the regular business of the session after the recess everybody will oppose any legislation that does not affect the war, and we have to pass these bills before the committees bring in legislation pertaining to the war. There are quite a number of very important bills that the Senate ought to attend to before that time.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I do not like the habit we are getting into of what is sometimes denominated railroading bills through the Senate. Yesterday we were lectured by a distinguished Senator on the other side upon the ground that we were delaying the consideration of a certain measure that had been before the Senate only a day and a half. I never knew anything of the kind to occur before in the Senate. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] was taken to task because he wanted to express his views on the pending bill. He had only talked a short time, but he was told he ought to stop.

Now, I do not like that method of doing business. I am good-natured always, and I have no disposition to postpone unduly any measure. While I shall vote against this bill, I do hope the Senator from Nevada will agree to give us one day at least after we reassemble, to get our second breath on it and give it some consideration.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] has relieved me from the pressure I was under. Therefore it affords me pleasure to agree to the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire and I will ask that the 5th be substituted for the 4th.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is better. Let the roll be called.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to suggest to the Senator that the hour be changed from 4 o'clock to 5, and that we begin at 2 o'clock under the 10-minute rule. The chances are that most amendments will be left until that time and there may be quite a number of amendments offered after 2 o'clock. I do not like to see any time set after 2 o'clock for a final vote. I should like to see the limitation placed upon speeches to 5 or 10 minutes after 2 o'clock. Then let every amendment that is proposed be discussed. If we put it at 5 o'clock I am quite sure every amendment that is offered will have such discussion as it requires after 2 o'clock. So I suggest to the Senator to make it 5 o'clock instead of 4.

Mr. PITTMAN. That will be agreeable to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will make the modification as requested.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the roll be called under the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hale	Lewis	Ransdell
Bankhead	Harding	McCumber	Shafroth
Beckham	Hardwick	McKellar	Sheppard
Borah	Hitchcock	McNary	Shields
Brandegee	Hollis	Martin	Smith, Ariz.
Calder	James	Myers	Smith, Md.
Chamberlain	Johnson, Cal.	Nelson	Smith, Mich.
Cummins	Johnson, S. Dak.	New	Smoot
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Newlands	Sterling
Dillingham	Kellogg	Norris	Stone
Fernald	Kendrick	Penrose	Sutherland
Fletcher	Kenyon	Phelan	Townsend
France	King	Pittman	Vardaman
Frelinghuysen	Knox	Poindexter	Wadsworth
Gallinger	La Follette	Pomerene	Weeks

Mr. LEWIS. I wish to announce the absence of the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] because of illness. I ask that this announcement may remain.

I wish also to announce the absence of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY], called from the Chamber on official business.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] on business of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the request be stated once more.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the proposed agreement as modified.

The Secretary read as follows:

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT.

It is agreed by unanimous consent that at not later than 5 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of January 5, 1918, the Senate will proceed to vote, without further debate, upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the bill S. 2812, a bill to encourage and promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, potassium, and sodium on the public domain through the regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition; and that after the hour of 2 o'clock p. m. on said calendar day no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 10 minutes upon the bill, or more than once nor longer than 10 minutes upon any amendment offered thereto.

Mr. PENROSE. I suggest that it is very doubtful in my mind whether we will have a quorum on Friday and whether it would not be better to make the agreement for Monday. If there is a quorum here the Senate can take up other business if the bill is not under debate. I am not going to urge the point, but I am only submitting it.

Mr. BORAH. We will certainly have a quorum here after two weeks of adjournment.

Mr. PENROSE. The fact remains, however, that we meet the latter part of the week, and the disposition of a great many Members will be to stay away the rest of the week.

Mr. BORAH. I do not care to debate the matter if the Senator wants to urge it. I know the Senator from Nevada was very anxious to fix it on the 4th, and although I am opposed to the bill I did not myself care to urge any later date. I ask the Senator from Nevada if the agreement is adopted whether he proposes to go ahead with the debate any further to-day?

Mr. PITTMAN. It is the intention of the Senator having charge of the bill to ask that it be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I suggest to the Senator that Friday is the 4th of January, and undoubtedly it would be better to take the vote at that time than on Saturday, because so many leave at the end of the week.

Mr. PENROSE. I am almost certain there will not be a quorum of the Senate on Friday and Saturday. There is no use in disguising the fact that Senators will not come down here for a session of one day.

Mr. PITTMAN. I would not want to have this matter come up if there was not a quorum. I think it would be very unfortunate for the matter to come up without a quorum.

Mr. PENROSE. That is what I feel. I am interested in the passage of this bill on account of a large number of Pennsylvania constituents, and I do not see any use in fixing a day when every Senator must realize, I believe, that a quorum will not be here.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not know how the Senator figures it out that there will not be a quorum here. We will have a recess of 12 days, and the Senate convenes on Thursday. It is inconceivable to me that Senators will not return at that time to attend to their duties. There may be a few who will not, but most of us will be here.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator from New Hampshire, who is my leader in nearly every step I take in this body, is going to stay here, but I am not basing my statement on any theory. I have talked with a large number of Senators, and those who are going away and going to a distance, as nearly all Senators who leave Washington will be going to a distance, I feel very confident are not coming down here to attend a session on Thursday or Friday, with a probable adjournment over until the following Monday. If, however, the Senator in charge of the bill chooses to take the chance, I do not intend to pursue the matter any further. If I had charge of the bill, I should make the date for a vote Monday, the 7th of January.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. I think the date fixed for a vote should be Monday, and unless a later date than the 5th is named I shall object.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I have already receded in this matter two or three times for the convenience of Senators; I know that it will inconvenience the Senator from Pennsylvania and the Senator from Michigan, from what they say, and possibly other Senators, to fix the time for a vote on the date named, and, as we are putting the vote off now for two weeks or more, I would not urge against the wish of any Senator having the vote taken two days earlier. I therefore ask that the date for the vote be changed to Monday, the 7th of January.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will make the proper correction, providing that the vote be taken on Monday, the 7th of January. Is there objection?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, if that be agreed to, I should like to make a parliamentary inquiry. I ask whether this bill will remain, up to the date fixed for a vote, as the unfinished business of the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised by the parliamentarian at the desk that it would remain the unfinished business.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Then a motion in the meantime to take up another bill would simply mean the displacing of the regular order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business could be suspended by unanimous consent at any time.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, having charge of the bill, I will state to the Senator from Arizona that at any time no Senator is desirous of speaking on this bill I shall ask unanimous consent that it be temporarily laid aside, so that the Senator from Arizona or any other Senator may proceed with any matters of emergency.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I am interested in the measure the Senator has in charge, particularly as it affects Arizona, but I should like to repeat the notice I heretofore gave—as I stated then, for what it was worth, and it is worth no more now—that I desire to move at every possible opportunity to take up a measure on the calendar relating to the question of print paper.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I suggest to the Senator from Arizona to make the motion now.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, pressure was brought yesterday to yield consideration of section 16 of the pending bill in order that the measure might pass before the holidays. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Virginia to the fact, now that consideraion of the whole measure has been deferred until after the holidays, that I trust he will be ready to present his substitute measure for section 16 at that time. It seems to me that by reason of this postponement some of us have been mildly imposed upon.

Mr. SWANSON. I will state to the Senator from California that I am framing a bill which I shall introduce as a separate measure for this——

Mr. PHELAN. For section 16?

Mr. SWANSON. A separate measure for section 16. I did not consent that the bill be taken up for consideration except with the understanding with certain Senators that that provision would be eliminated. I am not obstructing the passage of the bill; I am ready to vote now. Senators from the West are objecting to the consideration and passage of the bill and not other Senators. My purpose is to introduce a separate bill to condemn these lands.

Mr. PHELAN. The Senator will be ready, then, to have the bill taken up on January 7?

Mr. SWANSON. Not as an amendment to this bill.

Mr. PHELAN. But as a substitute for section 16?

Mr. SWANSON. I will introduce the bill and have it referred to the Naval Committee. It will be then within the power of the Naval Committee to report the bill, and, if it is the disposition of this body to consider it, that will be done. I will say, however, that the Senator from California is not precluded from introducing any bill or any other measure at any time which he thinks will make a proper disposition of this matter.

Mr. PHELAN. I therefore give notice that at that time I shall seek to take up the question of the reconsideration of the action by which section 16 was eliminated from the bill.

Mr. SMOOT and Mr. SHAFROTH addressed the Chair.

Mr. GALLINGER. Regular order, Mr. President!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah is recognized.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, before I give unanimous consent to an agreement to vote upon the pending bill, I want an understanding with the Senator from Virginia that he is not going to offer the bill referred to by him as a part of the pending bill.

Mr. SWANSON. I have agreed with Senators that I would not do so.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I have understood.

Mr. SWANSON. I have an agreement with certain Senators that this matter would not be considered on the pending bill.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, this matter has been placed in my charge by the Committee on Public Lands. It is a bill involving a great many subjects; in fact, it involves three or four subjects outside of section 16 of the bill. It involves something besides 7,000 acres of land in California; it involves 44,000,000 acres outside of 7,000 acres in California; it involves a million acres of oil lands outside of the 7,000 acres in California. I have felt, as does the Senator from California, with regard to the method by which that land in California should be treated; but we came to the conclusion that this bill could not become a law, that it never would become a law, if we attempted to keep the provision in relation to naval reserves in the bill. The Senator from California agrees with that and has agreed with it on this floor.

I do not care what he thinks about it; he may be willing to defeat all this legislation, as he knows it will do if he should succeed in putting that provision back in the bill; but I shall never consent to have it put back in the bill, and I tell him that it never will be put back in the bill, no matter how many times we reconsider it.

So far as the delay in this matter is concerned, it is no more unusual than the delay we have had on many bills. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] insisted that he should have more time on this measure. He had it within his power to delay this bill until after the holiday recess if he saw fit to do so. Under the position he took, he would have been justified in doing so if I had declined to grant a reasonable postponement. I therefore have agreed to a reasonable postponement. I not only think that it is a courtesy due to the Senator from Idaho and to the other Senators, but I think also that it is probably the best way to facilitate action on the bill; and so long as I have charge of the bill I am going to pursue this course. Whenever that is not approved by the Public Lands Committee of the Senate, they can give charge of the bill to some other Senator. I now ask that the question on the unanimous-consent agreement be submitted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to entering into the unanimous-consent agreement? There being none, it is entered into.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Nevada if he is willing to ask that the pending bill be temporarily laid aside in order that another matter may be brought up?

Mr. PITTMAN. At the request of the Senator from New Hampshire, and if there are no other Senators who desire to speak on the bill at this time—and I assume that there are none—I ask unanimous consent that the bill be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection? There being none, it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by G. F. Turner, one of its clerks, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (S. J. Res. 17) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

PURCHASE OF FARM-LOAN BONDS.

Mr. HOLLIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3235, being a bill providing for an amendment to the farm loan act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3235.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, let the title of the bill be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the bill by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3235) amending section 32, Federal farm loan act, approved July 17, 1916.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before the motion is put for the consideration of the bill, I ask that the bill be read for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

A bill (S. 3235) amending section 32, Federal farm loan act, approved July 17, 1916.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Federal farm loan act, approved July 17, 1916, is hereby amended by adding at the end of section 32 the following:

"The Secretary of the Treasury is further authorized, in his discretion, upon the request of the Federal Farm Loan Board, from time to time during the fiscal years ending June 30, 1918, and June 30, 1919, respectively, to purchase, at par and accrued interest, with any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, from any Federal land bank, farm loan bonds issued by such bank.

"Such purchases shall not exceed the sum of $100,000,000 in either of such fiscal years. Any Federal land bank may at any time repurchase, at par and accrued interest, for the purpose of redemption or resale, any bonds so purchased from it and held in the Treasury.

"The bonds of any Federal land bank so purchased by the Secretary of the Treasury and held in the Treasury under the provisions of this amendment one year after the expiration of the pending war, shall, upon 30 days' notice from the Secretary of the Treasury, be redeemed or repurchased by such bank at par and accrued interest.

"The temporary organization of any Federal land bank as provided in section 4 of said Federal farm loan act shall be continued so long as any farm loan bonds purchased from it under the provisions of this amendment shall be held by the Treasury, and until the subscriptions to stock in such bank by national farm loan associations shall equal the amount of stock held in such bank by the Government of the United States."

SEC. 2. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed, and this act shall take effect upon its passage. The right to amend, alter, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I want to occupy the attention of the Senate to make some observations on a matter that is not pending here to-day.

Mr. HOLLIS. Will not the Senator from New York wait long enough to have the bill taken up? Then he can, of course, speak upon anything he pleases. The motion for the present consideration of the bill is pending, and I ask that it may now be put.

Mr. CALDER. I agree to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire to proceed to the consideration of the bill which has just been read.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I wish to discuss for a moment the operation of the selective-draft act. I find that on December 15 the different draft boards throughout the country forwarded to men registered a questionnaire. Upon the answers to this will determine in just what class the different men eligible for draft are placed. It seems to me, Mr. President, that before we get too far into the next draft the law should be amended, for in its operation great hardship is visited on certain sections of the country.

Yesterday I received from the adjutant general of my State a list of the draft boards, the quota taken from each draft district, and the number of men examined to make up that quota. I find that in some districts about 20 per cent of the registrants have been called to make up the complement required, while in other districts practically every unmarried man physically competent has been taken. The operation of the law in the next draft will work a great hardship in some communities. Not only will every unmarried man be taken who is eligible for service but practically all married men who are citizens and of draft age. This is caused by the fact that in many sections there is a large alien population. I have made a very careful study of the conditions in New York City, where I reside, which indicate that in some draft districts substantially 5 per cent of the registrants are aliens, while in others as high as 80 per cent are aliens. The law rests upon the theory that the number taken shall be based on the total population, but in its operation none but the citizen is selected.

Early in June of last year I introduced a bill which would have made the draft apply only to those eligible for service. That bill was not reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, but a resolution introduced by the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] and a resolution introduced by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] were reported and acted upon. These two resolutions now lie in some committee of the House of Representatives, and I am told are not to be favorably considered there. My bill is a clear exposition of just what the draft act, in my judgment, should be.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. CALDER. I do.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the Senator is in error with reference to the resolution introduced by myself. If I remember rightly, I think that was converted into a Senate resolution, because it related only to the matter of the President entering into agreements with other nations for the purpose of securing treaties that would allow us to put citizens of countries that were in arms with us against the common enemy and who were residing in the United States into our armies. I understand—and I want to ask the Senator to give me information if I am in error—that the President has acted upon that resolution, that he has taken the matter up with foreign countries, and will soon be able to report to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, the Senator is correct. I was mistaken in my statement that his resolution went to the other House. It was a Senate resolution; it was acted upon unanimously, was referred, as I understand, to the State Department, and that department undoubtedly has taken the matter up. However, our Government has not yet effected treaties with other governments permitting us to draft their citizens residing within our country into our military service. The new draft is coming on very fast; in another six weeks it will be here; and then we will have a condition of things applying to certain sections of the country where every single man who is a citizen will be taken, every man who is physically fit to go, every married man, while in adjoining districts the married men, who ought to be excused, will not be taken.

So, Mr. President, I want to say to the Senate that this hardship upon these certain so-called alien communities of our country is causing a great deal of dissatisfaction on the part of the people. Practically all of the men who live in the sections which I have in mind are either of alien birth or parentage, and they see married men with families and dependent children taken, while in other places they are excused. There can be no excuse, Mr. President, for the Congress to permit a condition of this kind to exist, and I rise now simply for the purpose of calling the attention of the Senate to it and to say that on the first day of the convening of the Congress after the recess I shall move to have the Committee on Military Affairs discharged from the further consideration of my bill, which simply fixes the quota of the draft to be obtained on the basis of citizen registration rather than on the basis of population.

If we do not make this change, Mr. President, I believe we are going to have serious difficulty among those of our citizens who are of foreign birth. Senators have observed, undoubtedly, the very great Socialist vote cast in the city of New York in the recent election. That vote came largely from the so-called foreign sections of the city in which the injustice of the feature of the draft has worked the greatest hardship. I sincerely trust that Senators will realize how very serious this matter is and that unless it is remedied a feeling will be created throughout the land that we are compelling certain sections of our country to give up all of their men who are citizens, relieving others of that very condition. I hope that this matter will not be overlooked. I shall ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs before I depart for my home for the recess to consider this question; but if he does not I shall ask the Senate to act upon it.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, the Federal farm-loan bill was passed in July, 1916. Under its terms 12 Federal land banks were established covering the entire United States. They were given under that bill a capital of $750,000 each. The Farm Loan Board proceeded to establish the banks and was ready to make loans and to sell farm-loan bonds a year later; that is, last July.

Under the plan of the farm-loan system the loan is made to the farmer at a certain per cent. The banks are allowed to add to that per cent not to exceed 1 per cent of the loan for what is called in the mortgage business the "spread"; that is, the expense of the system. The Farm Loan Board believed that they could sell the farm-loan bonds at 4½ per cent. Therefore they made the rate to the farmers 5 per cent. At the time the Farm Loan Board was ready to authorize the first issue of farm-loan bonds the first liberty loan was in progress, and the board did not wish to interfere in any way with the sale of the liberty bonds, which were at a lower per cent than the farm-loan bonds. It therefore made no campaign, did nothing to cry up its bonds or cry down the liberty bonds or come in competition with them. In spite of the extreme modesty with which the Farm Loan Board proceeded its bonds met with a very great demand; they could not be prepared fast enough for the investors beginning in July last up to November. When the second liberty-loan campaign was started the demand for the farm-loan bonds was chilled and the Farm Loan Board finds itself now with some $70,000,000 of farm loans contracted for; that is, approved, passed upon, and accepted, and is not able to sell its bonds on the 4½ per cent basis. I feel myself that the Farm Loan Board should not be in competition with the Government in the sale of its bonds; I feel that the Government should pool the investment money that is available in one reservoir and the Secretary of the Treasury should say where that money should be applied.

Under the law the Farm Loan Board can raise the rates of the farm-loan bonds above 4½ per cent and make them attractive to investors, but when they do that the tendency will be to raise the rate at which we will have to sell liberty bonds, and that ought not to be done. The Secretary of the Treasury is reluctant to take on any burden of this sort, but he considers it advisable, and he has asked to have this bill passed.

I will explain briefly what the bill is. The bill provides that the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, purchase farm-loan bonds at par and interest, not to exceed $100,000,000 in the present fiscal year and in the next fiscal year; that any land bank may repurchase these bonds at par and interest at any time, and that one year after the termination of the pending war the Secretary of the Treasury shall demand payment from the land banks.

There is a further provision that was added by the committee in regard to the temporary organization of the land banks. Under the temporary organization it was provided that the five directors of each land bank should be appointed by the Farm Loan Board. Under the law whenever the contributions from farm-loan associations equal $100,000, the land banks are to be permanently organized with six directors elected by the farm-loan associations and three appointed by the Farm Loan Board. It is felt that as long as the Treasury has in its vaults any of the farm-loan bonds the temporary organization should be continued so that the Government will have control of the conduct of the banks; and the fourth paragraph of the bill provides for that emergency. I myself am very sorry that the necessity to borrow enormous sums by the General Government has made it necessary to call on the Treasury for this relief at this time.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I want to interrupt the Senator for just a moment, to state that I believe this a subject in which most of the Senators are very greatly interested, and I was wondering if the Senators who were not here knew that this question was to come up to-day. I speak of this because I am sure that they, like myself, would desire to hear this question discussed, and if they did not know it was coming up and the Senator has no objection I should like to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. HOLLIS. I have interviewed many Senators, in fact most of those on this side, and I think most of those on the other side have been spoken to. Those who are in favor of the bill and those who feel obliged to oppose it knew that it was to be pressed before the recess, because the emergency is rather acute. Of course, I do not object to having a quorum called for, if the Senator desires. I doubt, however, if any Senator would remain who is not already here. I have sent for those who I understand are particularly interested in it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Very well.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. On the subject of the temporary organization of the land banks, which it is provided in section 4 shall be continued, I will ask the Senator if that means that the existing organization must be continued—that is to say, a man who is president of a bank to-day must be continued as president—or whether that means that the organization rests with the Farm Loan Board? Does it necessarily retain in office the president, vice president, and secretary of the banks as they exist to-day, the individuals who are now holding those offices, or can they be changed by the Farm Loan Board?

Mr. HOLLIS. The bill stipulates that the temporary organization as provided in section 4 shall be continued. That does not mean the temporary organization of any bank, but the temporary method or plan of organization shall be continued. I think there can not be any doubt of that. I was about to state that I regret very much that the condition of the money market incident to the war and the very heavy demand made upon the investing funds of the country have made it necessary to ask for this temporary relief. There are now pending in the Federal loan banks loans that have been approved and accepted to the amount of $70,000,000. They were not——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Will the Senator give us some idea as to the experience of the Federal land banks, as to the nature of the security they have obtained for their loans, whether or not any of the loans have matured, or any of them are delinquent, and what impression the Senator has of the administration of the law by those who are in charge of the 12 land banks? I ask the question because I have heard a good many remarks and some criticism as to the nature of the loans which have been made.

Another phase of it in which I am very much interested, and I think the country is interested, is, What is the general character of these loans as to the term of them? Are they short-term loans, or are the banks carrying out the general purpose of the act and making long-time loans with amortization features?

Mr. HOLLIS. I will say to the Senator that nearly all the loans are made on very long terms, as was intended. They are all made on the amortization plan, so that with every payment part of the principal is paid in. They have been made on a very safe basis all through the country. The bill provides that no more than 50 per cent of the reasonable valuation may be loaned. That has been kept down almost altogether to 40 per cent.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. Can the Senator say of his own knowledge that it has been kept down to 50 per cent?

Mr. HOLLIS. Oh, I do not know of a single loan that has been made. I am merely acting on information that was given by the Farm Loan Board.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have information from a great many sources that in certain sections of the country loans are being made for more than the full value of the land upon which the loans are being taken. My information comes from those who know the situation, know the values of the land, and know the loans that are being made.

Mr. HOLLIS. I shall be very much astonished if that is so. Of course, that is absolutely unlawful and contrary to the letter and spirit of the farm-loan act. If the Senator knows of such a situation as that, it certainly should be exposed, and the responsibility laid where it belongs. If the Senator has any idea that that is so, the matter should be investigated, and I should encourage investigation if there is any such charge.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, is not this a very good time to expose it, right now?

Mr. HOLLIS. I should think so. I should think it ought not to continue a moment.

Mr. STONE. The Senator from North Dakota has stated that he knows of specific instances—I think he said numerous instances—where farm loan banks had loaned money on land in an amount exceeding the value of the land. Of course, any act of that kind, if done, was unlawful, and, except for the assurance of the distinguished Senator from North Dakota, I would think it inconceivable, considering all the machinery provided for and in the hands of the land banks to ascertain the value of land.

Now, although it is no particular affair of mine, I do not like to have a statement from such a high source as that just made by the Senator from North Dakota stand here in the RECORD as an indictment of the administration of the land-bank system, the establishment of which I advocated, and the proper administration of which I believed and still believe will be of great benefit to our country. I do not know whether my distinguished friend from North Dakota cares to have that general statement of his stand as he made it, or whether he cares to tell the Senate just exactly what he knows. In such matters actual details are of special value.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire further yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. When the Senator from Missouri formulates his indictment on a charge of any character, I hope he will include in it the words that were used, and not what possibly he might have thought were used. I stated then, and I repeat it so that the Senator may know what my statement was, that I know of instances in which it has been reported to me, and reported to me by those who understand the value of the land and are acquainted with the section where the loans are made, that loans have been made in such sections upon lands to the full value and even more than the value of the lands. That is my statement; so it is not my statement upon my own information at all, but on the information of those in whom I have great confidence.

Mr. STONE. If anything I said was to the effect that the Senator from North Dakota made his statement on personal information, then my statement should be modified, for I did not mean to say that. I heard what the Senator said. Nevertheless the fact stands in the RECORD now, under the authority of the statement made by the Senator from North Dakota, that he is informed—I must assume, in his judgment, reliably informed—that such things as those he has detailed here have occurred. Now, whether it is upon his individual knowledge of the fact or upon information which satisfies his judgment, I submit that it is a matter for the Senator to consider, not me, whether the Senate ought now to be specifically informed of such instances.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield further——

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am speaking in the Senator's time. I wish when the Senator is through to make some remarks upon the present situation of the farm-loan associations or banks, but I wish the Senator first to complete the statement that he desires to make to the Senate.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from North Dakota a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield?

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I am aware, of course, that there are some people, particularly lenders of money, who are opposed to this farm-loan system, because of the fact that it competes with them in the market for their money. Consequently they are opposed to its being lent at a low rate. I should like to ask the Senator whether or not the persons who have made these complaints are either money lenders or bankers?

Mr. McCUMBER. Neither.
Mr. SHAFROTH. Neither one?
Mr. McCUMBER. Neither.
Mr. SHAFROTH. It seemed to me we ought to have that information, because if, as a matter of fact, they are lending money in excess of the value, it ought to be examined into, and it ought to be condemned most strongly.
Mr. McCUMBER. I do not want the Senator for one moment to think that I have not been strongly in favor of support to the rural communities in the loans. I opposed the particular bill that was ultimately passed, and I think I shall be able to show in a very few minutes that my prophecy of what would happen has happened in reference to it.
Mr. GALLINGER and Mr. FLETCHER addressed the Chair.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield; and if so, to whom?
Mr. HOLLIS. I yield to my colleague.
Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, disclaiming any purpose of interfering with the Senator's interesting statement, I will ask him if he can tell approximately the amount of money that has been loaned by the banks?
Mr. HOLLIS. Yes. The amount that has actually been loaned by the banks is, in round numbers, $29,000,000.
Mr. GALLINGER. Twenty-nine million dollars; and they have now $70,000,000 that they have no market for at the present time?
Mr. HOLLIS. Twenty-nine million dollars have been loaned; $28,000,000 of farm-loan bonds have been sold. There are now pending loans that have been approved to the amount of $70,000,000.
Mr. GALLINGER. I will venture to ask my colleague further whether or not those loans are distributed throughout the country to a large extent?
Mr. HOLLIS. They are. They are distributed throughout every State in the Union.
Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask my colleague further whether the farmers in New England have taken many of these bonds?
Mr. HOLLIS. Does the Senator mean many of the loans?
Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.
Mr. HOLLIS. Yes; they have; a good many—not as many as in other parts of the country, in the West and South; but I can give the Senator the figures. The applications for loans in the Springfield, Mass., bank amount to $6,080,000, and those that have been approved amount to $3,012,000.
Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me one minute more, I listened with a great deal of interest to his elucidation of this subject when it was under debate, and the Senator then was very optimistic as to how admirably well this law would operate. As a matter of fact, whether or not the issuance of the liberty bonds has interfered with its operation, it is not operating as well as my colleague expected it would, I assume. Am I correct?
Mr. HOLLIS. The Senator is partly correct. I will explain when he has finished.
Mr. GALLINGER. That is all I wish to ask.
Mr. HOLLIS. I did not hope that any system would go into effect that would work without some Government aid, and for two years I advocated and tried to get adopted this exact provision; but the administration was opposed to it, and I got the bill through in its present form. Up to the 1st of November, when the enormous second liberty loan campaign was under way, everything did work perfectly. The bonds met with a ready demand. They could not be produced as fast as investors wanted them, and that was in spite of the fact of the first liberty loan.
When November came, those who had been investing said: "Every other bond, including the Government bonds, has been marked down. There has been a lower price. Now, are you going to make a lower price on these?" The Farm Loan Board said: "No; we shall not. We think they can be floated at this rate," and they have refused to mark them down. They have not marked them down now. They do not think it is necessary. They think that when the investors find that they can not get them at a lower rate the investors will continue to take them as they did last summer. That is their opinion. I do not know whether they are correct or not.
Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator, if he will allow me, whether these bonds are not exempt from all character of taxation?
Mr. HOLLIS. Everything but the inheritance tax.
Mr. McCUMBER. And they bear 4½ per cent interest?
Mr. HOLLIS. Yes.
Mr. McCUMBER. Does the Senator think that in this period, when the per capita money in circulation is enormously beyond what it ever has been before, when the rate of taxation upon incomes is very excessive, bonds bearing 4½ per cent that are untaxable and are absolutely good will go begging in the markets of this country?
Mr. HOLLIS. I do not think they will.
Mr. McCUMBER. Unless there is something back of the matter.
Mr. HOLLIS. If I thought they would, I should not favor this legislation; but these banks are tremendously undercapitalized for the amount of business that has come to them. One of the chief objections to the farm-loan act was that the farmers would not come into it; that the farmers would not agree to subscribe 5 per cent of the loans to the stock of the bank; that they would not form farm-loan associations, and that was one thing that I was afraid of; but they have done it so freely and in such enormous quantities, and have asked to borrow so much money, that the Farm Loan Board has not been able, on this amount of capital, to turn quickly enough, and it is for that reason that we ask the Treasury to take some of these bonds, to give them an opportunity to turn around. If I believed that these bonds would not go, I should not believe in the Treasury stepping in. I freely say that.
I should like to give the figures as to how this stands. Roughly speaking, the total amount of loans that have been applied for and approved is $100,000,000. Thirty million dollars of loans have been actually made and the money has gone to the farmers. That leaves $70,000,000 applied for and approved; and it is that $70,000,000, or such part as is finally taken, that we wish to take care of under this bill.
Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——
Mr. HOLLIS. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.
Mr. KELLOGG. Can the Senator give us the page of the RECORD where the table may be found showing the applications from each district and State and the amounts?
Mr. HOLLIS. I can not. I have the table here. It was in last Friday's RECORD, in the proceedings of the House.
Mr. KELLOGG. I thank the Senator.
Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.
Mr. HOLLIS. I yield.
Mr. SHAFROTH. The Senator has stated that the small amount of capitalization has been the hindrance in getting these loans floated, but to my recollection he has not stated the amount. As I understand, the amount of capitalization of each one of these banks is only $750,000.
Mr. HOLLIS. I so stated when I began.
Mr. SHAFROTH. Then the reason why these loans can not be floated is because that is too small a capital to handle thirty or forty or fifty or seventy million dollars?
Mr. HOLLIS. That is not entirely so, I think. If the capital had been larger, the bonds could have been taken through the summer in very much larger quantities; the capital could have been turned over very much quicker; but at the present time that is no reason why the bonds are not meeting with a ready sale. It is because the investment pool has been sucked dry by the second liberty loan.
I wish to say that the Senate Banking and Currency Committee had this matter before them Saturday afternoon. There was only one member of the committee present who opposed the bill—the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS]. Since the bill was reported the Senator from Massachusetts has asked the friends of the measure if they are not willing to have an amendment that will provide that as long as any of these funds from the Treasury have not been repaid the loans made shall not be made for the purpose of refunding other loans; that they shall be made merely for the purpose of increasing farm products.
I think that is an entirely reasonable proviso. If I were a member of the Farm Loan Board, I should pursue that policy. I have conferred with the Farm Loan Board and they say they will pursue that policy; but I can see that they will be subjected to enormous demands from men who do want to refund their loans at a lower rate, and I believe it will be a protection to the Farm Loan Board if this proviso is placed in the amendment that as long as any of the funds from the Treasury have not been repaid no loans shall be made except for the purpose of increasing farm products. If the Senator from Massachusetts offers that amendment, as I presume he will, so far as I am concerned, it will be accepted.
I shall be very glad to answer any questions that I can. If there are no more questions, I shall yield the floor.
Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——
Mr. HOLLIS. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. GALLINGER. Inasmuch as for some reason the sale of these bonds has been suspended, and the people have taken a 4 per cent bond which is taxable under certain conditions in preference to a 4½ per cent bond that is not taxable, suppose that the next liberty loan, if it shall be called that, carries a rate of interest of 4½ per cent—which is more than probable—what will be the chance of these bonds, then, in the market?

Mr. HOLLIS. Then I should think that these bonds would sell in preference to the others, because they carry 4½ per cent interest and they are tax exempt; but I should be sorry to see them placed in active competition with Government bonds.

Mr. GALLINGER. Everything is going to be in competition with Government bonds, unless we discover some way of meeting the obligations of the Government without the issuance of bonds; and I have found no one wise enough to suggest any such method up to date.

Mr. HOLLIS. I have already suggested that I believe it is better to have the Treasury borrow the money, pool whatever borrowings are to be made by the Government for any purpose, and for the Treasury to allot as much as should be allotted for each purpose, and for the Treasury to say that the Farm Loan Board can not lend any more than this amount of money. The Secretary of the Treasury is a member of the board, and I think that ought to be done.

I feel as Mr. Louis W. Hill, of St. Paul, does—the son of James J. Hill. He loaned $500,000 to the land bank of St. Paul at 4 per cent because they were doing such good work in his part of the country. He said:

> Agriculture must be encouraged and helped in this emergency, and the people are exceedingly fortunate to have this machinery by which it can be helped by giving money to those who have proved their worth and who can give security so that it will come back.

That was his view of it. I could not put it any better myself.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question before he yields the floor.

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. In what quantity have these bonds been sold?

Mr. HOLLIS. Twenty-nine million dollars have been actually sold on a four and a quarter per cent basis. They were sold at 101½.

Mr. McCUMBER. How much has the Government itself advanced to these banks?

Mr. HOLLIS. Nine million dollars. That is the capital of the banks; that is all; somewhat less; a little less than $9,000,000, because there were some private subscriptions.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Government has taken practically all the stock of the banks, or nearly so, has it not?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes; that was the intention.

Mr. McCUMBER. While it was put forth as a matter in which individuals would take the stock, as a matter of fact the individual citizen has not taken the stock and it has all finally fallen back on the Government?

Mr. HOLLIS. It was never the intention of those who framed the bill—never the expectation—that private persons would take any substantial amount of it. It was not encouraged; in fact, it was discouraged, because private persons owning that stock can not vote on it. It was purposely discouraged.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator whether it was not the idea that the stock would gradually pass into the ownership of the farmers' associations that are formed to borrow the money; and is it not a fact that the formation of farmers' associations has been even more rapid than has been expected, and that at the present time 2,000 of such farmers' associations exist? That feature of the bill has been very successful, and gradually those farmers' associations which are borrowing the money are securing a stock ownership in the banks.

Mr. HOLLIS. It will not be long before all the Government stock will have been paid back and retired, at the present rate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator this question, if he has not already answered it: What quantity of approved loans are now with the Farm Loan Board for which they have not yet provided?

Mr. HOLLIS. Substantially $70,000,000.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. KELLOGG. It is not true that by the passage of this bill it is intended to suspend the sale of these bonds, is it?

Mr. HOLLIS. No; not at all. This is merely temporary relief, so that they can turn around and sell their bonds.

Mr. KELLOGG. They are to be on sale, but the sale of them is not to be pushed as against the Government loans?

Mr. HOLLIS. It is to be pushed as much as the Secretary of the Treasury feels that it should be pushed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish to call the attention of my colleague to line 10, page 2, and ask him if the words "under the provisions of this amendment" should not be stricken out? This is an amendment to the existing statute and, if enacted, will become a part of a particular section of the existing statute.

Mr. HOLLIS. But then, of course, the wording of it will relate to the time that it is passed; and it seemed to me that the word "amendment" was the better word and would lead to less confusion. After it becomes merged in the act there are other provisions in the act with relation to the Treasury, and I should rather have it stay this way. There can be no mistake about this. It is true that after this amendment is passed it will become an act.

Mr. GALLINGER. It will become an act, and we will have in the body of the act itself the words "under the provisions of this amendment," although there will be no amendment.

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes; but this will always be called the amendment of so-and-so, giving the date.

Mr. GALLINGER. It may in language be called that, but as a part of that act there will be no means of determining to what amendment it has reference.

Mr. HOLLIS. It says "the provisions of this amendment," and it seems to me it will lead to less confusion in that way. Of course, if anyone wants to change it, it is entirely immaterial to me.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It would be printed just after the act.

Mr. GALLINGER. Why, certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. As an amendment to the act, in the printed copy.

Mr. GALLINGER. As following section 2.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; it would not be merged into the act, would it? In printing it they would print the original act and print this amendment just after the act, I should suppose. That is the way they usually get up these matters.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is not my experience. However, it is inconsequential, so far as I am concerned, whether it is in or out. I simply think it is not good legislation; that is all.

Mr. WEEKS obtained the floor.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. WEEKS. I yield.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I want to repeat that I have been very much confused over the reports that I have received concerning this bill. I voted for it in the first place, hoping that it would accomplish splendid results. I have had coming to me, from what I regard as reliable men, such reports as those suggested by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], and I feel as though the Senate ought to understand what is going on. While I do not wish to interfere with the Senator from Massachusetts or the Senator from New Hampshire, I feel as though I ought to suggest the absence of a quorum, so that we can have Senators present to hear this discussion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hitchcock	Martin	Smith, Ga.
Beckham	Hollis	Nelson	Smith, Md.
Calder	James	New	Smoot
Chamberlain	Johnson, S. Dak.	Norris	Sterling
Cummins	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Stone
Curtis	Kellogg	Penrose	Swanson
Dillingham	Kendrick	Phelan	Townsend
Fernald	Kenyon	Pittman	Trammell
Fletcher	Knox	Poindexter	Watson
France	La Follette	Ransdell	Weeks
Frelinghuysen	Lewis	Robinson	Williams
Gallinger	McCumber	Shafroth
Hale	McKellar	Sheppard
Hardwick	McNary	Shields

Mr. LEWIS. I have been requested to announce that the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] is detained on official business.

Mr. KENYON. I wish to announce the necessary absence on official business of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN], and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-three Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I am a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, which considered this legislation, and I am one of the members of the committee who voted against reporting it favorably. I assume that as long as the bill comes here with the approval of the administration and the large majority of the Committee on Banking and Currency no other than an affirmative action will be taken, but I think it due Senators when such an unusual step is being taken, one which has never been undertaken before, that they understand just exactly what is being done. It is for that reason I hope to have an opportunity to express to as many Senators as possible my view of this legislation.

The facts are these: This farm-loan system provides for loaning money to farmers to not more than 50 per cent of the value of their property, that is stipulated in the law. Those loans are taken by the banks and bonds are issued against them. The bonds bear and have borne 4½ per cent interest.

A syndicate of bankers was arranged with to sell these bonds on satisfactory terms. The system has been in operation for about a year, the first six months being required to perfect the organization. This syndicate included Lee, Higginson & Co., of Boston; Brown Bros., of Boston and New York; Brown & Co., of Baltimore; and Harris, Forbes & Co., and it was understood that they were to reach out all over the country and take into their organization banks and bankers so that the sales might be as generally distributed as possible.

The 1st of July, after the first liberty bonds had been placed, these bonds were put on the market. There were applications at that time for $14,000,000 of them. Those, of course, were promptly sold and the bankers were paid a commission of 1¼ per cent. They were sold on a 4½ per cent basis, assuming that they do not run for more than five years or six years—most of the mortgages are made to run 35 years—and may be paid by the borrower at any time after that period.

During the following months, up to the time when the second liberty loan was placed, there were sold about as many more bonds as had accumulated for sale the 1st of July, all told $28,000,000 or $29,000,000 of bonds. Of these about seven-eighths were sold by the syndicate of bankers, their agreement with the Farm Loan Board terminating the 30th of November, and about one-eighth or something less than one-eighth of the bonds were sold by the various farm-loan banks, it being the purpose of the farm-loan banks to sell their bonds after the first six months and save the commission. It was believed, and I think it was good judgment, that they could be sold for the first six months better by bankers, allowing the farm-loan banks to become thoroughly organized and systematized before they devoted their time to that purpose.

During the months of November and December, after the sale of the second liberty loan, all sales of these bonds stopped. Practically speaking, there have been no sales made since the 1st of November. Notwithstanding that fact, the applications which have been coming in and accumulating during all these months, aggregating something like $220,000,000, have been under investigation, and $105,000,000 of those loans have been accepted. So there is now an acceptance of $75,000,000 of these loans and the sale of bonds has stopped. It will not require $75,000,000 probably to satisfy the borrowers who have been promised their money, because in some cases they are reduced. A revisal of the list by the Farm Loan Board might cut out some loans, but practically speaking, from $60,000,000 to $75,000,000 must be furnished by some one or else the promise which has been made to these borrowers must be broken. In that emergency the Farm Loan Board comes to Congress for this loan, which is in this form, that the Treasury shall furnish before the 30th of next June $100,000,000 to buy these bonds and shall furnish an equal amount during the following year for the same purpose. In other words, the Government is to underwrite this system for $200,000,000.

Of course, it stands to reason that we are in an unusual condition at present and that perhaps these bonds might have continued to be sold if the Government had not made the rate of interest of the second liberty loan 4 per cent. It is true also that the Farm Loan Board is going to increase the rate of interest on future loans from 5 to 5½ per cent.

Fundamentally the reason why these loans are made is because borrowers now paying 6 or 7 or 8 per cent for their money can borrow it under this system at 5 per cent, or have been able to do it; but we ought to consider, after all, that those bonds do not pay any taxes; that it takes that amount of capital out of the taxable value of every community; and when the bonds are sold, practically speaking, one hand washes another in this respect.

Generally speaking these loans have been made in States where interest rates have been very high. There is something like $4,000,000,000 of farm-loan mortgages in the United States. The probabilities are that more than half of those are made at 6 per cent and higher rates. There is an absolute certainty of the fact that as soon as those loans mature the borrowers are going to turn to the Farm Loan Board to borrow that $2,000,000,000. So if we are going to continue this system and let the system run as it has been up to this time, we may rest assured that we will have in the course of the next few years to loan something like two or probably three billion dollars on farm mortgages. That is a sufficient amount of money, even in these times, to cause us to pause and consider how far we should go in this matter.

In the first place, the Government furnishes the capital to these banks. Of the $9,000,000 of the capital of the 12 banks, a little over $100,000 of it was taken by the public. There was a little stock taken by the public in each one of the banks, except the one located at Columbia, S. C. Practically speaking, the Government furnishes the $9,000,000. Now, the Government, after an operation of six months, is asked to agree to furnish $200,000,000 more, and Senators ought to consider whether they are going to permit the system to be continued so that it will involve sooner or later an expenditure, or a loan rather, of perhaps $2,000,000,000. It is that feature of it which I especially want to bring to the attention of those who are listening to me.

How is the purchaser of a liberty bond going to feel when he is importuned to buy a bond, either by the sacrifice of some security which he has or by failing to invest his money in something that will pay him better, if he is told that the money is not to be used to prosecute the war, but it is to be loaned to another one of his fellow citizens simply because that fellow citizen can borrow it at a lower rate of interest than he is now paying on his indebtedness? That is the gist and the essence of this proposition. That is exactly what is going to happen. Senators, if you subscribe to the next liberty loan you must feel that some part of your subscription, instead of being used to prosecute the war, is going to be loaned to some of your fellow citizens at a lower rate of interest than he is now paying and for that reason only. Fundamentally, of course, that is bad morally. It is bad from the standpoint of the Government at such a time as this, and it is bad finance as well.

Personally I have very little faith in any of these schemes which put the Government into business with the assurance that we are going to get better results than heretofore. It is true that there are farm-loan banks all over Europe, but they are all under private auspices, and in no case is the Government involved in any way. I want the Government in this case involved as little as possible. Therefore I am going to offer an amendment to this bill, which I will read:

That until all bonds so purchased by the Secretary of the Treasury have been redeemed or repurchased, no loan in addition to those now approved shall be made by Federal land banks except under special rules prepared by the Federal Farm Loan Board limiting further loans from funds derived from the Treasury to those made for the sole purpose of increasing farm products.

In other words, while this situation is bad, it seems to me it will be simply disgraceful if there should be continued the loaning of money for the sole purpose of enabling a man to get his loan at a lower rate of interest than he is now paying. There may be an excuse if it is going to result in an increase of farm products.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Food products.

Mr. WEEKS. I have used the words "farm products." I suppose that includes food products. However, I will accept the suggestion of the Senator from Mississippi. Personally, I do not care to be put in the position of harming this system until it has been thoroughly tried out; I have no criticism of the loans, for I do not know anything about them, and I have no other criticism of the management than that they failed to take warning of the signs which on every hand should have been sufficient to assure them that they were going to have difficulty in marketing their securities.

It seemed to me to be the height of imprudence for men to go on loaning money during the months of November and December and at the same rate of interest that had been loaned before when the slightest investigation would have shown an advancing tendency in rates of interest and a disposition on the part of all lenders not to loan further. It illustrates the truth of the fact that when we have the National Treasury behind us it is easy to reach into it as if it were a bottomless pit and get money for any purpose, even if it is not businesslike or wise.

These loans have come from those States where interest rates were the highest, as of course they would. In States where crops have been standardized and where the financial conditions are such that comparatively reasonable rates of money have prevailed in the past, there have not been any considerable amount of loans. For example, in the New England States there was loaned on an aggregate only about $700,000. In the great States in the Middle West where the crops are standardized, like Iowa and Illinois and Indiana and Ohio, where the certainty of a crop is assured, the farmers have borrowed comparatively little money, simply because the rate of interest in those States has been not over 6 per cent at any rate and very often not over 5 per cent. For example, in the State of Pennsylvania, which is a great agricultural State, there was borrowed $190,000 under this system. In Delaware, $9,600; in the State of Illinois, one of the greatest agricultural States in the Union, only $186,000; in the State of Ohio, only $33,000; in the State of Iowa, only $96,000. In other words, the certainty has been realized that where men were paying a higher rate of interest for some reason, either because the crops were not stabilized or because the financial conditions had not become sufficiently settled so that the borrower could command a reasonable rate of interest there has been a turning to this system, and there will be a continuance of that turning until we have loaned, as I have stated, a very large amount of money unless a check is put on these loans in some such manner as I have indicated in this amendment.

Moreover, I want to say now that I am also going to offer an amendment, and I should like the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS]. I am going to offer an amendment striking out the $100,000,000 underwriting which it is proposed in the bill which covers the year commencing the 1st day of next July. It does seem to me if it becomes necessary Congress will be in session sufficiently long to make suitable provision for the Farm Loan Board, and they will stand warned in my judgment that Congress is not going to without protest, in times when we are straining every nerve to maintain our financial integrity, provide money for such purposes as this.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WEEKS. I yield.

Mr. NELSON. Would it not be a good plan, to carry out the suggestion of the Senator, to prohibit the farm-loan banks from approving applications for loans beyond the amount of money they have on hand to loan?

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, that might accord with my idea, but I do not personally want to do anything that harms the system which has been established by Congress and which has not been given a sufficiently long test. If after two or three or four years the system does not work, well, of course, the law ought to be repealed. In the meantime farmers have been encouraged to think that they were going to get this money, and if they are going to use it, and they demonstrate they are going to use it, to increase their planting, which would be the only way they could use it under the provisions of this amendment, then it seems to me we might be justified in making the loans which have been applied for by them.

The Senator from Nebraska rose. Did he wish to ask me a question?

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will yield to me, I want to get light upon his amendment. I heard it read, of course, but I hardly got its full import. I was going to ask him if the object of it was to curtail the business; in other words, to put up a sort of a signboard to the Farm Loan Board that they ought to confine their operations within the limitation of the loans that they had practically agreed to make. As I take it, the Senator does not want to interfere with the operation of the board, so far as they have practically agreed to make loans. Is that the object of the amendment?

Mr. WEEKS. The object of the amendment is to provide that no loans additional to those which have been promised shall be made as long as the Government advances money on these bonds, except where the money is to be used to increase food products and that must be clearly demonstrated to the Farm Loan Board.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I inquire if that is not taken out of the funds arising from proceeds of these bonds? If the banks sell their own bonds they can use that money in accordance with the act without regard to this amendment.

Mr. WEEKS. They can do it after the Government indebtedness has been liquidated.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, there is a condition of things in Southern agriculture just at this moment the consideration of which I think is relevant to what has just been said by the Senator from Massachusetts. Cotton has recently been selling at a very high price, ordinary upland staple at twenty-odd cents, other cotton at a higher price. There is a little danger of the South being menaced with the trouble with which it has been menaced in the past and which it has been unable to withstand. Every time cotton goes to a very high price the Southern farmer raising food enough to feed himself and stock begins to put his land in cotton.

Just before this war began, when cotton had gone down to a normal price, and for six months after the war started it went down to a very abnormally low price, food production—beef, hogs, oats, corn, peas, beans, everything of that sort—was very much encouraged throughout the South. This is an abnormal condition, and I want to take advantage of this situation to warn the Southern farmer and cotton planter against the idea that he can expect permanently to reap from the present prices for cotton.

If the war lasts a year longer he can reap those prices for a year longer, because something like a million or two millions is burned up in high explosives every year in addition to the munitions that are going up into smoke. No matter how much he raises next year, he may be able to dispose of it at a pretty good price.

Mr. President, there are hops, there are various other things that are raised on the farm that are not necessary to feed men with bread or meat. It seems to me just at this time when we are worried to death about munitions and guns and foodstuffs and transportation of men, the Government ought not to do anything even the remotest effect of which might be to deflect industry from either supplying munitions and men to the front or producing food to feed them, when they are at the front, to deflect industry and capital from that sort of thing to something perhaps more profitable to the producer for the time being but less useful to the Nation right now and in the long run dangerous to it.

The South owed, perhaps, as much of its poverty for some years after the war to the high price of cotton and the expectation that it would continue and the deflection of its energies and industry and capital to the production of cotton as it did to the devastations of the war itself, although some of those devastations were most cruel and most uncalled for.

Mr. President, it seems to me for that reason if this amendment is going to be adopted it ought not to be merely farm products. Farm products may be a great many things utterly useless in this emergency, luxuries even in ordinary times, some of them necessaries, but at the same time not to be useful in an emergency right now. This amendment ought to be confined to foodstuffs, as I understand it, and not extend to all farm products.

As I understand it, the amendment is merely to put a limitation upon future loans and not upon any loans already contracted for and loans in process of contraction where the Farm Loan Board feels it necessary to consummate the transaction.

Mr. President, I think one of the greatest things that ever happened to this country is the rural-credit act which we passed. I have no sort of fear that it will not prove successful in operation. In fact, the Senator from Massachusetts hit upon the real trouble a moment ago. If we had gone along in a state of peace, as we expected to go at the time it was passed, and Government bonds had been 3 per cent bonds, these bonds would have floated all right. Now, in proportion as Government bonds go up of course we have to carry these bonds up, too.

It seems to me one of the most appropriate remedies for the situation is to authorize the increase of the rate of interest on farm-loan bonds up to a point where they shall at all events be one-half per cent above Government bonds. At the time when we originated this system they were a cent and a half above. It seems to me it is very proper and right that an amendment of this sort should be adopted. I am a cotton planter and my people have made a great deal of money out of the last year's crop. God knows they needed it, because they had not made much out of it for some 12 years prior to this situation.

In fact, they had been in a very bad condition and to a great extent what they have made since has been merely to make up what they lost before to pay the amount of debt that they had to incur; but to give a man money at the general expense in order that he may borrow money makes something which is a deflection or subtraction from the popular necessity and bears a sort of speculative aspect to my mind. I therefore think that the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts is, upon the whole, right, although it is an amendment evidently in the interest of his own section of the country and eminently not in the interest of my section.

Mr. WEEKS. I hope the Senator from Mississippi will not consider that I am discussing it from the standpoint of New England.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, no; I did not say that. I said nothing that would bear that construction. I said that the amendment is preeminently in the interest of that section of the country and preeminently not in the interest of mine. That does not grow out of any intention of the Senator from Massachusetts, it grows out of a state of fact. That is the truth.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr President, I agree that the first amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts is wise and just, but I do not think the second amendment is. The Senator from Massachusetts has talked of this matter as reaching into the Treasury. This is not an appropriation in the sense of an expenditure upon the part of the Government. It is simply a loan for the repayment, and not only the repayment but secured by first mortgages upon the lands of the people. It can not be considered as an appropriation in the sense of that which is spent by the Government in the aid of any enterprise. It is simply a loan, and if we are going to lend money to Russia it seems to me it is not out of the way to say that for the purpose of increasing that which is absolutely necessary to the success of the war, namely, to increase the food products of this country we can not go far out of the way by at least loaning our credit to that extent for this necessary purpose.

Mr. WEEKS. Let me call the Senator's attention to the fact that we are not loaning our credit; we are loaning our money.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Well, that is practically what we are doing in the case of Russia.

Mr. WEEKS. We have notified the people of this country that we were going to loan European countries associated with us in military operations some part of the proceeds of the sales of the liberty bonds, but we have not notified the people, and we shall not, that we are going to use some part of that money to loan to citizens of the United States.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Well, Mr. President, the Treasury of the United States gets a large income from the taxes that are imposed, and it is not exactly fair to say that we are going to take the identical money which comes from the sale of the liberty loan bonds and loan it to the farmers, in spite of the representations which have been made. We have as much right to say that we shall take this amount of money out of the excess-profits tax or out of the income tax or out of any other tax which is imposed, because we have more than $200,000,000 arising from the collection of such taxes.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado agree that a separate estimate shall be made in the next tax bill to provide money to be used for this purpose?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, Mr. President, we impose many taxes without reference to what they are for. Our general income tax is not imposed with reference to its use in any specific way. Then, again, the assistance which is given for the raising of farm products is as much necessary for the maintenance and successful operation of our military forces as is any loan to any country or any expenditure upon the part of the Government, even for munitions.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him there for a moment?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the question suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts presents an erroneous illustration or analogy. This is not a proposition to loan the money of the United States or the credit of the United States to any individual, but this is a proposition to lend money to certain banks that are carrying on an important function, just as in past times we have taken money from the Treasury of the United States to lend the banks in the cities to keep the commerce of the country going. It is doing in the country what we have heretofore done in the city, and doing it not for a private purpose but for a public purpose.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, there are any number of illustrations of cases where the Government has done similar things. The advances of money which were made by the Government to the Union Pacific and the Central Pacific Railroad Companies were made without any consultation with the people concerning them; and yet it was done on a very large scale, I think $30,000,000 being advanced in one case and thirty-odd million dollars advanced in the other. It is a question of whether this action is wise under the conditions which exist.

We find that these banks have been a great success; we find that they have had many applications and made many loans. Those loans were made so long as they could sell their bonds; but it was the action of the United States in putting forth a 4 per cent bond which, to a large extent, limited the demand for these bonds.

Mr. President, this is a perfectly safe proposition. The loans that are made are made upon security; they are made upon only a 50 per cent valuation upon the real estate. They are secured not only upon the individual real estate but upon the collective real estate in an entire association; so if one piece of property is overvalued in making a loan, those who are in the enterprise, those who are members of the farm loan association become liable for whatever deficiency exists in that particular case. Therefore I do not see that there is hardly the possibility of a chance of the United States losing on this advance which it is proposed it shall make.

The system has been of great benefit to the farmers. Evidently it encourages them to go into farming on a larger scale, for that has been done. It was stated at the time of the consideration and passage of the farm loan act that men ought to be given a sufficient amount of money to enable them properly to equip their farms, to stock them with live stock, to buy seeds, and in every way to encourage them to prosecute their business. If we are now going to discourage the system, I think it will have a very unfortunate effect with relation to the raising of food products that are so necessary for the successful prosecution of the war.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] has just stated that these land banks have been eminently successful; eminently successful, however, he states, in securing a large amount of applications for loans, not eminently successful in placing those loans. The trouble that we are experiencing to-day is due to the inherent defect of the system itself. When this land-bank proposition was before the Senate there were a number of us, who perhaps knew the farming situation of the country reasonably well, who at that time prophesied that a system of political banks, created by politicians and operated by politicians, would not be a success, and that sooner or later the Government would have to support the banks in toto. We further stated that the business men of the country would not buy stock in those banks. Thereupon we were answered, "We will fix that; we will make it incumbent upon the Government to buy the stock of the banks so that they can get started."

Another sop was also held out to the public in the declaration that the Government should get no return, no interest on its deposits; that we would make these banks national depositaries without the necessity of paying one penny for the millions which the Government would put into them. We further provided, in order to make a success of these banks, that the bonds which they issued upon the farmers' paper should not be subject to taxation. The Lord knows we did everything on earth to make those banks a success.

They started in business, but the public had no confidence in such a great semipolitical machine; the public did not have the confidence that those in charge would at all times make their loans upon a safe basis. Therefore it was necessary to bolster up the institution with Government credit.

We offered an amendment at that time—a little simple amendment. We asked, if in the finality the Government must stand back of the transactions of these banking institutions with its credit, what was the necessity of the Government going to the expense of establishing and maintaining those banking institutions? If finally the Government must take the loan, what was the necessity of this great complex top-heavy institution that has been foisted upon the American public? Why not let the Government then make the loans directly instead of indirectly? We drafted an amendment which provided for a bureau in the Treasury Department which would be empowered to accept the loans the same as the land banks do; that the bureau would accept them at 5 per cent and issue Government bonds, bearing 4½ per cent, that would be taken by any person in the United States; and that the other half per cent should pay for the entire expense. That meant practically that there would be little if any investment at all on the part of the Government. We should require a few more clerks in the deparment, but the Government when it had a hundred million of these obligations could turn over the bonds and could cash them immediately and the money would be back in circulation and ready for another loan.

It was stated, however, by the advocates of the bill that that was paternalism; that we did not want to put the Government itself into the business of making loans; and yet in less than a single year after this complex top-heavy proposition has been put into effect they are coming right back and asking the Government practically to buy all of the bonds which the public would not buy, and to buy them in competition with its own bonds—its liberty-loan bonds and other bonds which it will have to issue to carry on this war.

I repeat that there was no necessity, first, of taxing the Government $9,000,000 to buy the stock of these banks; there was no necessity for compelling the Government to lose the interest on the hundreds of millions of dollars that it will deposit in these banks; there was no necessity for compelling the Government to loan another hundred million dollars and take that out of taxation and receive no interest upon it; and there was no necessity of compelling the Government to pay the major portion of the expense of running and operating these banks. So this system is being made to cost the Government millions and hundreds of millions of dollars without any return whatever, and the farmers as a rule in most of the States do not receive their loans any cheaper than they previously did. In the other sections of the country, if the Government makes the loans through this circumlocution system of banks and other institutions and pays the expenses, it will save the farmer something, but if it saves the farmers of the United States one-half per cent upon their loans the Government is going to go back to the people of the United States for these expenses and call upon them to go into their pockets to make up that 1½ per cent, because if you will make out a table showing exactly what is saved and then make out the table upon the other side showing how much this system is costing the Government it will be found that we are not saving the farmer anything, for what he is saved he pays out of the other pocket.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield, Mr. President.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota has made the statement that these banks are costing the United States Government a great deal of money. I am sure he is mistaken about that. As a matter of fact, the Government can not deposit, as he says, hundreds of millions of dollars in these banks, for it is limited altogether to $6,000,000, and it has not deposited that amount. All of the expense of operating these banks, as I recall, falls upon the banks themselves and in no sense upon the Government.

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, no, Mr. President; you will find, when you get right down to the actual expense and compare what the banks pay and the Government pays that a goodly portion of the expense is paid by the Government itself, and the Government receives no interest whatever or compensation for its stock in these banks nor for its deposits.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Let me make a suggestion. The Senator is correct, so far as the stock is concerned, and we went into that with our eyes open; but the Government in this case will receive 4½ per cent for what it advances. The bonds must be redeemed by the banks themselves at par and interest when the banks take them back. It is not a permanent loan; the terms of the bill provide that it is only for a temporary purpose. This legislation has been made necessary by the fact that the Government has gone into the market and sucked up the available capital which the banks otherwise would have had at their disposal.

Mr. McCUMBER. Now, let me make another——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Government will collect——

Mr. McCUMBER. Right here let me make another prophecy. I have prophesied heretofore that the Government in the end would be called upon to buy these bonds. I now prophesy that the land banks will not buy back these bonds from the Government; on the contrary, it will be found that there has been foisted upon the country a system of buying those bonds and repurchasing those bonds, and, as has already been stated by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS], before we get through we will have the Government buying all of the bonds that are to be issued upon the farmers' paper, while it is keeping in existence this vast number of banks and subbanks and associations of different kinds at an enormous and unnecessary expense.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator is in error when he says this system is an expense to the Government; whatever expense there is is borne by the banks themselves, and the fund from which they pay it represents the difference between the rate at which they borrow their money and the rate of interest they receive from the farmers themselves. It is not the Government that is burdened.

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly, I understand that if the Government buys these bonds it takes with the bonds the security upon which the bonds are issued; that the Government necessarily collects and receives the interest paid upon that security, and to that extent it is an investment by the Government. What I am complaining of is that, taking the entire cost to the Government of the operation, the running of these banks and the relieving of all of these bonds, which may run up into the billions, from Federal taxation of any character the Government in the end will lose more than the farmer will secure in benefits.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator recalls, of course, the fact that the Government has deposited millions upon millions of dollars at different times in the commercial banks of the country.

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And it either receives no interest at all upon it or it only receives 2 per cent, as I recall.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Now, this is a case in which the Government is to receive 4½ per cent for the temporary purchase of these bonds, and I can not see how it can possibly be construed as a raid upon the Treasury or as a burden upon the Government.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not say that it is a raid upon the Treasury. The Government purchases that which the land banks are unable to float. Those banks were created, with their great amount of machinery, for the very purpose of floating bonds of this character. They are unable to do it; the Government has to do it for them; the Government has to issue the bonds at 4½ per cent, free from taxation, while at the same time the Government is borrowing money now, we will say, at 4 per cent on bonds which are subject to at least two different characters of taxation. Those things can not work together; one destroys the other. If the Government is going to get these bonds, the Government may have to sell them; and if it does sell the bonds, then investors will take them with the Government guaranty, which it must give to them, in preference to taking a bond at 4 per cent that is subject to excess-profits taxation. Therefore it is buying something which it may have to put on the market again that will come in competition with its own bonds.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is nominally competition, but it is a drop in the bucket compared with the great financial operations of the United States.

Mr. McCUMBER. A drop in the bucket to-day, yes; but it is $200,000,000 for the next two years and $4,000,000,000 before we get through, if we accept the applications as rapidly as they can come in. There is no check upon these banks in accepting applications and then calling upon the Government to purchase the bonds issued upon them. Of course, the banks want to do business, and we will have them in billions in a very short time.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Of course the Senator realizes that there will be, after the passage of this bill, a check upon the banks, and not only the check proposed by this bill but a check arising from the circumstances that hereafter they will be compelled probably to raise their rate of interest if they desire to do any considerable amount of business.

Mr. McCUMBER. A simple little provision which would have allowed the Government in the first instance to have issued bonds—Government bonds—upon the farmers' paper would have saved all of this trouble, would have produced the money immediately, and we could have taken up these applications almost as rapidly as they came in. I repeat that if you will take the trouble to find out just exactly what this banking system is costing the Government, including what it loses upon the money that it is depositing and upon the money that it is paying out for the banks and in other respects, it will be found that it is not saving the farmer any more than what it is losing, and therefore it must ask somebody else to meet the bill.

Mr. SMOOT rose.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I suggest to the Senator from North Dakota before the Senator from Utah proceeds, that the law distinctly provides that not exceeding 1 per cent in excess of the interest on the bonds can be charged to borrowers for the purpose of covering the expenses of administration? The Farm Loan Board has estimated that they can cover that expense with one-half of 1 per cent, and they have sold their bonds on the basis and made loans to the farmers on the basis that one-half of 1 per cent would cover the expense of administration. They can charge but 1 per cent more than the amount they pay on their bonds; so that the farmer is obliged to get his money at not exceeding 1 per cent above the interest rate which the bonds bear.

Mr. McCUMBER. Except as the farmer must in addition to that pay the taxes either directly or indirectly; and taxes must make up the amount which the Government loses. Therefore he is not making what he would appear to be saving upon the face of the proposition.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator having the bill in charge whether he expects to get a vote upon the bill to-night?

Mr. HOLLIS. I think so. I do not know of any disposition to delay it. I think nearly every Senator who wishes to speak has spoken, and I hope for action to-night.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not want to delay a vote upon the bill, I will say to the Senator, but if the bill was going over, I would very much prefer to say what I have to say at some other time. There are few Senators present——

Mr. HOLLIS. I understand action is being taken on a similar measure in the other House, and it is hoped to get the bill passed this afternoon through both Houses. In the other body they have a special rule to vote upon it this afternoon.

Mr. SMOOT. Are we to substitute the House bill for the Senate bill, or is the House to substitute our bill for theirs?

Mr. HOLLIS. Whichever is passed first will be substituted for the other.

Mr. SMOOT. If that is the case, I will have very little to say this afternoon.

At the last session of Congress I made the statement that the appropriations that were made during that session had not been scrutinized by myself nor by other members of the Appropriations Committee as carefully as appropriations are ordinarily scrutinized. They were the initial appropriations for carrying on the war and no one gave especial attention to the amounts asked for by the different departments of the Government. I also stated that at this session of Congress I not only should feel it to be my duty but I believed it to be the duty of every Senator before voting for an appropriation to know for what the money was to be expended.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] has said that this is not an appropriation. Why, Mr. President, the bill itself does not appropriate $200,000,000, but the Senator from Colorado is a member of the Appropriations Committee and he knows that the Secretary of the Treasury will send to the House of Representatives and to the Senate an estimate to cover the amount provided for in this bill, and we have got to appropriate the money for it or authorize its expenditure whenever called for for the purpose of buying bonds.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Of course, Mr. President, we will have security worth the amount to be paid, which is different from an appropriation for cannon or munitions or for ordinary running expenses; in other words, it is not such a thing as a river and harbor appropriation bill, or anything of that kind; we get security, and the security is good for the money we advance.

Mr. SMOOT. No one disputes that; but there are times in the history of men, and even in the history of nations, when they are in no financial condition whatever to lend money, no matter what security they get; and the United States, Mr. President, if the war continues a couple of years, will be in no position, nor is it in a position to-day, to be hunting loans throughout the United States. Do the people of this country know that from the establishment of our Government 128 years ago all the appropriations that have been made by every Congress from that day down to and including the last session of the Sixty-fourth Congress amounted to but a little over $26,000,000,000; and yet at the last special session of Congress we appropriated over $21,000,000,000, or within $5,000,000,000 of the amount of all the appropriations made by this Government since its organization. There is no question that our appropriations at this session of Congress for the next fiscal year are going to be just as large as they were at the last session; and there is no telling how much we have got to advance to our allies. I have been often asked how much that will amount to. All I can say is that it will amount to whatever the cost of the supplies our allies purchase from us, no more and no less, for none of them are in a position to pay us in gold a sufficient amount to cover the balance of trade between us and them.

As far as I am concerned, I want to appropriate every dollar that is necessary to pay the running expenses of this Government in conducting the war upon the highest basis of efficiency; but in doing so, Mr. President, I want to call attention to the fact that we are not securing from any part of the world gold for the goods that we are sending abroad. The currency that we shall issue is resting upon but $3,000,000,000 of gold in this country; and when we stop to think that there is only about twelve billions in all the world, and all of the currency that is being issued is based upon that gold, I think every Senator will realize that the United States Government is in no position to be hunting loans from any sources whatever.

I recognize the good that is being done through the organization of the farm-loan banks. I have no objection to their carrying out all of the provisions of the law, but I know that when we start to purchase the mortgages as provided in this bill and ask for $200,000,000 at this time it will be only the beginning; and we might just as well make up our minds that we are going to continue the same practice unless there is some restriction placed in this bill now in the way of an amendment. By the way, the first amendment that is offered by the Senator from Massachusetts I think ought to be adopted as a part of this bill.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator does not misunderstand. I collaborated with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] in drawing that amendment, and when he offers it I shall accept it. I think it ought to be accepted. I do not think we ought to be loaning the funds of the Government in order to refund anybody's loans, and I hope the amendment will be adopted. I have no doubt it will be.

Mr. SMOOT. I am very glad to hear the Senator make that statement. There is a safeguard in that, as far as it goes. I want to ask the Senator now, before I say anything more—and perhaps I will not say it at all if the answer I receive is satisfactory—this question:

Does the Senator really believe that it will take $200,000,000 to cover the loans that have already been promised by the land banks of the country?

Mr. HOLLIS. I do not. In the first place, it is not the intention of the Farm Loan Board to spend anywhere near $200,000,000. They feel obliged to take care of the loans that have been approved. After that they will not permit any more refunding operations out of any money that comes from the Treasury. They feel, moreover, that with this $200,000,000 underwritten by the Treasury they will be able to sell the bonds perfectly well, and that the men who have been holding off, wanting to buy the bonds, but expecting they would be marked down as all other bonds have been, will then come into the market and buy them. It is their idea that they will spend a comparatively small amount of this appropriation, but they want it large enough so that investors will see that the Government is there to do it if private investors do not.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am fearful that as long as we make a direct appropriation, which, of course, we will have to do under the provisions of this law, private investors from now on will have a chance of investing their money at a higher rate of interest with just as good security as that which is offered them by these farm mortgages. I am fearful that they are not going to invest in these bonds if the Government of the United States will take them; and I am fearful that if we make the appropriations of $200,000,000 now, every dollar will be required in purchasing these mortgages from the banks that now hold them. Will the Senator, upon his statement, be content to reduce this amount, say, one-half?

Mr. HOLLIS. This recommendation came from the Treasury Department. The Secretary of the Treasury is a member of the Farm Loan Board, and he has asked for this amount. Now, he realized that it is a burden. He does not consider that it is too large, because he thinks it will come back. He is very reluctant to assume it, but he thinks in the present emergency, with the need for food and encouragement to farmers, that it ought to be done, and he has asked for this amount, and I see no reason to reduce it. I hope the appropriation will be made in this amount. I have the assurance of the Secretary of the Treasury and of the Farm Loan Board that they do not intend to purchase anywhere near this amount, but they do want it there. If it had been $50,000,000, they would have said, "Well, that will soon be used up; we will wait." That is what they told the committee. Beyond that, I can not tell the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, I hope the Senator does not think that I believe for a moment that these advances by the Government are going to be lost. I have never expressed such an opinion, nor do I believe it. What I am trying to get at, Mr. President, is this:

I hope the American people will not be distrustful over Congress; but when the American people see Congress appropriating money by the hundreds of millions of dollars with hardly any discussion whatever I feel that they are going to begin to have a lack of confidence in our judgment and will begin to say, "Well, where on earth is it going to end? If this thing is going to continue, I think the best thing for me to do is to get what little I have into money and even withdraw it from circulation."

We have got to be careful and we have got to maintain the confidence of the people of this country in order to carry on the activities of the Government during this war. I do believe that it would be much better to accept an amendment of $50,000,000 for each year, or a total of $100,000,000, than to have this large amount admittedly not to be expended go out to the country.

You can not fool the bankers. They will know exactly what is going to happen. They have every advantage in the world to receive that information. If this were $500,000,000, I do not believe it would make one particle of difference as to the investment in the mortgages by the banks, but I believe it would have a bad effect upon the American people who are called upon not only to do their bit but to sacrifice some of the best securities they have ever owned in order to buy the liberty bonds that have got to be sold in order to pay the expenses of the Government.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator to ask him a question?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I know the Senator has given a good deal of attention to this matter; and aside from the arguments that have been presented, there are two things that have given me no little disturbance. The Senator seems to admit that everything is all right. I should like to know if he has information on these two subjects:

First, is this money that is being borrowed as a whole being used to increase the food supply of the country? And, second, is the Senator convinced, has he information which warrants him in the conviction that this money is loaned on the basis of not to exceed 50 per cent of the value of the property?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say, in the first place, that what information I can gather leads me to believe that the greater part of these loans will be for the purpose of taking up loans already in existence, made by farmers at a higher rate of interest; so all that it could possibly do would be to save the farmer the difference between what he is paying in interest to-day and what he will pay under the provisions of the law. I will say to the Senator, however, that there are some cases, and a number of them, where applications have been made for loans, and more will be made, for the improvement of farms; but the most of the money is for the taking up of loans that are already made and are carrying a higher rate of interest than that which is provided for in the existing law.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, does he think there will be any very great addition to the products of the farms unless they can get more labor than they can get now?

Mr. SMOOT. Of course that is the greatest question the American people have to meet. In that connection I want to say that I believe we shall have to follow the practice of England and of France and use the Army to assist in harvesting the crops of this country when the harvest time is on the coming year. I know that in the West even this year it has been almost impossible to secure help at any price to dig beets, to pick the fruit, or to harvest the crops, and I know, Mr. President, that there are many hundreds of thousands, if not millions, of dollars of crops in the West that have failed of being harvested and gathered because they could not pay the wage that was demanded in some instances, and in others it was absolutely impossible to secure help sufficient.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question by way of making a suggestion along that line?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. I received the other day a letter from Idaho, from a gentleman I know very well, a business man, in which he stated that hundreds of thousands of bushels of potatoes rotted in the ground, and fruit rotted on the ground, not because there was not sufficient labor but because the men were being paid from seventeen to twenty dollars a day to pick up and sack potatoes, and they struck for twenty and twenty-four dollars a day, and the result was an enormous loss; and that the same laborers, evidently of the I. W. W. type, were lying around four days a week doing nothing.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the two Senators if the condition that they have described can be charged to the farm loan banks? And if it can not, I should like to ask what bearing the farm loan banks have on the scarcity of labor in this country?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I was asked a question by the Senator from New Hampshire. I answered that question, which I think I had a perfect right to do. I do not want the Senator from Minnesota to think that I was casting any reflections upon the principles involved in the Federal farm loan bank.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator permit me a question?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. The Senator is talking about expenses. Suppose we got some of those German prisoners of war over here to work on our farms. That would cost us some money, but would the Senator be opposed to it on that ground?

Mr. SMOOT. I think, Mr. President, if we had some of those German prisoners over here they would not have a say as to what they should receive per day, and I do not think the American people would pay them more than they actually earned. I will say the German interns are receiving the best of care and in many cases living better than American citizens. The German prisoners we now have are not compelled to work.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will we not have to catch him first?

Mr. SMOOT. We have a lot of them at the present time.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not know how we are going to bring them over here when we have not the ships and have no possibility of getting them. Of course that is not pertinent to the question, but the Senator from Minnesota brought it up.

Mr. SMOOT. I am speaking now of the interned Germans that we already have in this country.

Mr. President, I do not want to take the time of the Senate further. There were a number of questions that I wanted to discuss in relation to this bill; but it is getting late, and I know that many of the Senators are going to leave the city to-night. I have no inclination whatever to prevent this bill from passing and becoming a law before adjournment this evening, if possible. I shall vote for the proposed amendments and then for the bill.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I am somewhat surprised at the peculiar tack taken by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] in this matter. To my mind, the farmers of this country, the food-producing element of the country, are as much our allies in this war as our allies over in Europe; and in order to be successful I can not see why we should make any distinction between helping our allies here and helping our allies over in Europe.

I have before me here a sheet of the loans applied for and allowed by these 12 farm loan banks; and what do I find? I find that the greatest number of applications come from the grain-raising, the agricultural States. The State of North Dakota, from which the Senator comes, is one of the greatest applicants. It has applied for over $12,000,000 in loans. It has been allowed $7,000,000, and only $1,825,000 have been closed up and finished. Take the State of California—$15,000,000 have been applied for, and in the great State of Montana $11,000,000. These are our great food-producing States, and it shows the great need of the farmers for assistance. We have been preaching food conservation for more than a year and urging our farmers in every possible way to increase their production; but mere academic help is of little consequence.

What are the conditions? The conditions among our farmers are, in many localities, that they have been bled by exorbitant interest; they have paid unusually high interest; they have come to the Government to get interest at a more reasonable rate, and we have started in in a systematic way to help them. If we want to encourage our farmers in producing more food products in this country during the pendency of the war, here is the opportunity.

A large share of our farm loans heretofore have come from the East, from the insurance companies and from the savings banks. Owing to the fact that these banks have been inclined to help the Government in taking up the liberty loan, they are calling in their mortgages. I have here a letter from the vice president of a company in Indianapolis, the Wells-Dickey Co., which has been engaged on an extensive scale for years in making farm loans in the Northwest. They have been in the habit of taking farm mortgages and then selling them to the savings banks and the insurance companies of the East; but what are the conditions now?

Here is what this gentleman says:

> Practically all of the mortgage dealers find that they are having an increasingly large number of investors in farm mortgages diverting at maturity these funds to other securities; also a heavy demand from investors to repurchase loans sold. I think it has been the almost universal custom of mortgage houses to repurchase loans sold by them at a nominal discount, sufficient to cover the cost of reselling. In these times when all securities are difficult to sell except those tax-exempt, it is likely to become a serious burden to mortgage houses if they continue their former policy.

Now, listen to this sentence:

> The New England savings banks, which have always been heavy investors in farm mortgages, I am reliably informed, are not buying any, and nearly all are calling in maturing loans. This removes a vast amount of money for the financing of the farmers.

As a matter of fact—and it came to my knowledge before I received this letter—these eastern money loaners, by which I mean the savings banks and the life and fire insurance companies that have been investing their money in farm mortgages in the West, are, for reasons of their own, calling in these loans. They refuse to renew them and have refused to grant new loans. There our farmers are stranded, so to speak, in many cases.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to call the Senator's attention also to the fact that there are a good many loan companies in foreign countries buying the farm loans and have been in the past in England, for instance, and, of course, they will not make any new loans and will not extend the old loans. They must have their money.

Mr. NELSON. I will read from this letter, in support of the statement of the Senator, another paragraph:

> About a year and a half ago the English Government ordered the English and Scottish loan companies operating in the United States to withdraw the principal invested in farm loans as it matured.

That tallies with what the Senator from Nebraska has stated.

Such is the condition of our farmers. Their mortgages are due. They have got to borrow money from some source. The old source is being cut off, the savings-bank and insurance money from the East, and it leaves them to rely on what little local money they can get in their own neighborhood.

Then, more than that, in some of these Western States the farmers have been charged an exorbitant rate of interest. I think in the State of North Dakota the farmers have been charged from 7 to 8 per cent, and in some cases even 10 per cent, on their real-estate loans. I know the interest has been so high in North Dakota that the banks in the neighborhood where I live, instead of investing their money in mill paper and in wheat paper, as they were accustomed to do, have found the best investment to be to go out and buy Dakota mortgages; and the same condition exists in Montana and in California.

I was very much surprised at the criticism which the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] made of the system. Of course it is not a perfect system, and I was a little doubtful of it myself. It was with some reluctance in the first instance that I agreed to some of its provisions; but it is not open to the criticism and to the gloomy forebodings indicated by the Senator from North Dakota. It provides for the organization of farm-loan associations. Every farmer who gets a loan must advance 5 per cent in cash on each $100 of his loan, and the association is jointly liable for all the loans and mortgages of the association; and then the expenses that the Senator speaks about, all the expenses of the system, so far as I know outside of the Federal Board here in Washington, all the expenses of the several local banks, are paid by the banks themselves out of their revenues. Am I not correct? I appeal to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. HOLLIS. All local expenses are paid in that way except the compensation of the land-bank appraisers. It was thought best to have them Government officials, so that they would not be subject to local influences. Their salaries are paid by the Government.

Mr. NELSON. I know something about the operation. I did not think this law would work much in the State of Minnesota. It is a large State from north to south. In the southern part of our State farmers were borrowing money at the rate of from 5 to 5½ per cent. In the middle part of the State, where I live, they were borrowing money for 6 per cent. In the northern part of the State—and it is a good part of our State—they were paying from 7 to 8 per cent and even in some cases 10 per cent; and I notice that the great amount of the applications for loans have come from that portion of the State that we call the Red River Valley and the country contiguous to it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator whether it is not a fact that the establishment of this low rate by the farm-loan banks has modified and decreased the rates of persons who are lending money on private account to the farmers?

Mr. NELSON. Why, it is the greatest blessing. The reduction that has been effected to these few men who have secured loans from the Government is a mere bagatelle compared with the good that the system has wrought throughout the country. The effect of the system has been, in the State of Minnesota, that private parties loaning money have had to approximate the Government level, and our farmers get money now at a much lower rate than they ever did before. It has had the same effect that we find sometimes in the case of river and harbor improvements. You oftentimes hear it said that the improvement of this river or this artery of navigation does not produce much result; that there is not much navigation; but if you will scan the thing closely, the great benefit is that it operates as a regulator of the rates of the railroads. So, Senators, the greatest blessing that this system has conferred upon the farmers of this country has been in the fact that it is to a large extent a regulator of the rates that the farmers have to pay for their real-estate loans.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if he does not believe that if it had not been for the war conditions there would not have been the slightest difficulty in the banks selling the bonds at 4½ per cent?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. And furnished all of the money that was needed for the full operation of the system through the sale of their own bonds?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly. I have no doubt at all that but for the coming on of the war and the necessity of selling such a volume of Government bonds the farm-loan bonds would have been taken and the Government would not have to advance any more money. What we have advanced is $9,000,000 in all. The Senator from North Dakota speaks of the hundreds of millions we have advanced. We have advanced from five to nine million dollars so far to these banks, in addition to the expense of inaugurating the system. I do not know just how much that amounts to, but it can not be over a million dollars, in my opinion.

Mr. President, I could say more on this subject. My heart is in it. I believe that this is a great relief to the farmers of this country, and our Government should at least treat them as well as we treat our allies in Europe. We furnished them money on their bonds. We loaned them money to carry on the war. Why should we not loan our farmers here, who are raising the food products of this country, money to make the war successful?

Mr. President, I trust that this legislation will become a law. I know it will do much good, and I have faith that in time the Government will not lose a penny, but it will come back to us in a tenfold measure in one way or another.

Mr. McCUMBER obtained the floor.

Mr. HOLLIS. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts may be adopted.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have the floor at present. I have been recognized.

Mr. HOLLIS. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator wishes to have me yield to him, I shall be glad to do so. If not, I will make my statement very briefly.

I am not in the habit myself of creating straw men for the purpose of knocking them down. I wish that the Senator from Minnesota when he makes his criticisms would be governed somewhat by the same principle. The Senator has attempted to assume that I would be opposed to lowering this interest and reducing it as far as possible. All the Senator needs to do is to go back to about a year and a half or two years ago and he will find that the act provides for a 5 per cent charge to the farmers. That is followed up now by an increase to 5½ per cent, more than the interest paid in many of the Eastern States to-day.

I believe a simple provision could be made providing for only 4½ per cent to the farmer and a 4 per cent Government bond to be issued upon that. Therefore, so far as that is concerned, I will have to my credit a difference of 1½ per cent in favor of my proposition and of my argument.

Mr. President, what I have criticized has been this, and I want the Senator from Minnesota to understand it: I criticize a system that has been made so expensive. If the Government wants to loan and to see that the farmer gets the loan guaranteed at 5½ per cent, I do not want to see the Government lose the 1½ per cent itself. I do not want to see the Government paying to a system of banks that are not doing the work but are calling upon the Government to perform the functions for which they were created and then have the Government pay the expenses. We may differ entirely upon the method by which we are to secure the best benefits.

Mr. President, I am going to vote for this amendment. I am going to vote and I intend to vote at all times to grant to the farmers who have made their applications the sum of money necessary to cover those applications. But while I do it, I am not going to stand here and excuse a system which has not worked well and which has been altogether too expensive to the American people.

The Senator says there have been but $9,000,000 expended by the Government upon this system. Let the Senator go back over the appropriation bills and ascertain whether there have been only $9,000,000 expended. Let him see what has been appropriated each year for these banks and then let him compute the saving in the interest and say whether or not it has been too expensive a measure by the results which it is securing.

But I favor the bill because we have got the system, having had it foisted upon us. Although it is top-heavy, although it is expensive, although it is tied around with red tape and operates as a nuisance in the matter of securing the benefits under it, still we, of course, will get some good from it.

I think when the Senator from Minnesota finally investigates this matter he will find he is in error when he states that we have paid but $9,000,000 to support these banks.

Mr. WEEKS. I offer the amendment.

Mr. HOLLIS. I ask that the amendment be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, after line 13, insert the following:

Until all bonds so purchased by the Secretary of the Treasury have been so redeemed or repurchased, no loans in addition to those now approved shall be made by Federal land banks except under special rules prescribed by the Federal Farm Loan Board limiting further loans from funds derived from the Treasury to those made for the sole purpose of increasing food products.

Mr. HOLLIS. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be adopted.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts to explain the effect his amendment would have.

Mr. WEEKS. The effect would be that the Government would buy bonds up to the amount of money that has been promised, and after that loans shall not be made unless it is demonstrated to the Farm Loan Board that the additional loans shall be used to increase the food products.

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to ask the Senator a further question. The Senator uses the word "promised." Does he mean by that the amount of loans approved by the Federal farm-loan banks or does he mean promised by local associations?

Mr. WEEKS. I mean that loans shall not be made, provided the Federal Government furnishes the money, unless it is demonstrated that the money shall be used to increase food products.

Mr. GRONNA. I am afraid I did not make myself understood. As I heard the amendment read I assume that the Senator's amendment provides that no loans except the applications already approved by the farm loan banks shall be made.

Mr. WEEKS. It means, Mr. President, that the Farm Loan Board of Washington shall prescribe rules which shall cover the requirements of this amendment; that is to say, that the farm loan banks shall not make loans as long as the Government is advancing the money, except where it is demonstrated that it will mean an increase in food products.

Mr. GRONNA. Will it not be left to the Farm Loan Board to interpret the law to see whether or not it is being used for that purpose?

Mr. WEEKS. The Farm Loan Board will make rules to govern the action of the farm loan banks.

Mr. GRONNA. If it is satisfactory to the Senator from New Hampshire, I shall not object.

Mr. HOLLIS. If the Senator had been here, he would have been convinced that it is satisfactory to the friends of the bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask that the amendment be read again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of California in the chair). The amendment will be again read.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, after line 13, insert:

Until all bonds so purchased by the Secretary of the Treasury have been so redeemed or repurchased no loans in addition to those now approved shall be made by Federal land banks except under special rules prescribed by the Federal Farm Loan Board, limiting further loans from funds derived from the Treasury to those made for the sole purpose of increasing food products.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the amendment?

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I am following the Senator from New Hampshire, but I am curious about the amendment to know why all these loans are not made at all times and under all circumstances with the ultimate purpose of increasing food production.

Mr. WEEKS. Most of the loans are of a different character. Most of the loans are made because a man is paying 7 per cent for money now, and he can borrow it in this way at 5 per cent. He is simply refunding his indebtedness on a lower basis.

Mr. McCUMBER. May I ask the Senator a question? Suppose a farmer has every acre of the land on which the loan is made that is available under cultivation and there is a mortgage upon it bearing 8 per cent interest. He can not cultivate any more simply because he has no more to cultivate. Would the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts prevent the man from securing a new loan at a lower rate of interest?

Mr. WEEKS. It would, as long as the Government is advancing the money.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then I think we ought to vote against the amendment.

Mr. WEEKS. The Senator has the privilege, of course.

Mr. McCUMBER. Of course, but it is only one vote.

Mr. GRONNA. As I understand the effect of the Senator's amendment, above the amount approved by the Federal land banks——

Mr. WEEKS. Already.

Mr. GRONNA. Already approved, no further loans can be made unless they are new loans. In other words, if the farmer owes a mortgage debt he can not get the money from the Government to refund it, even though his present loan may be foreclosed upon. Is not that the effect of the amendment?

Mr. WEEKS. If the man demonstrates that it will increase food products by refunding the loan he can get the money. If he can not do that he can not get it.

Mr. GRONNA. Will the Senator answer my question, if I can make myself understood? Is it not true that the effect of the Senator's amendment is that it will prevent a renewal or refunding of loans? In other words, a loan made by a farmer that is past due or may become due can not be refunded, but the farmer who has no loan upon his land may secure a loan. Is not that the effect of the amendment?

Mr. WEEKS. That does not require any new money. That is simply a refunding of a loan. I do not think that the Government ought to be advancing money to refund loans simply because the farmer can borrow it on a lower basis.

Mr. GRONNA. Of course, that may be the Senator's opinion, but I think I am right in assuming that this amendment will prevent the refunding of loans which are now due or which may become due in the near future.

Mr. WEEKS. It will if the Government advances the money.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is exactly what it does do and what it is intended to do. The only qualification is where the money is coming from the Treasury. The banks can sell their bonds and do it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEEKS. I offer another amendment. In line 9, page 1, after the words "nineteen hundred and eighteen," I move to strike out the rest of that line and line 10 down to and including the word "respectively"; and in line 4, page 2, after the figures "$100,000,000," I move to strike out the words "in either of such fiscal year."

The effect of this amendment would be to underwrite to the extent of $100,000,000 loans made during this fiscal year, but not to continue the underwriting after the 30th of next June. I do not see any real benefits to be gained by so doing. If it is decided later in the year that it is desirable to increase the underwriting, Congress can consider that proposition as a separate measure; but to underwrite into another year this method of loans seems to me to be unwise and improvident, and a financial policy that is going to deter a great many people from investing in liberty bonds.

Mr. NELSON. It is to continue the same practice to the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. WEEKS. Yes. The bill also proposes it for the fiscal year 1919.

Mr. NELSON. Your amendment limits it to the fiscal year 1918?

Mr. WEEKS. To the fiscal year 1918.

Mr. HOLLIS. The amendment now presented by the Senator from Massachusetts cuts down underwriting, as he states, just one-half. I hope it will be rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there are no further amendments as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I shall not oppose the passage of the bill in its present form. I want to say, however, I am quite sure that the law, so far as its benefit to the farmer is concerned, will be practically nullified.

I had hoped, Mr. President, that after it was demonstrated to the country that this law was a real and a substantial benefit not only to the farmers but to the business men of the country we would allow at least a limited time to let it be worked out.

I can readily see, Mr. President, that already some of those who control the financial affairs of this country are becoming alarmed over the success that has been made by those who have administered this law. There is not a Senator, there is not a man in this country, who can justify his position and maintain that this system has broken down. It may be asserted by Senators, it may be said by financial men, but it can not be truthfully said, that it has broken down.

As a banker in a small way, I know that the law has already been beneficial not only to the farmers of my country but to the business men of the country. If we had been permitted to pass the amendment in its original form, it would have stabilized the value of the farm-loan bonds. I realize how anxious the people on the exchanges are to depress the value of those bonds. Farm-loan bonds based upon 30 or 40 per cent of the value of the land, to say nothing of the improvements, are as good as Government bonds. Is there anyone here who will deny that those bonds, backed, as they are, by these associations, are not good? In my judgment, it is the best security offered on the market to-day.

But as every man knows we have been compelled to make drives for liberty bonds, and rightly we have done so. We have the patriotism back of the liberty bonds, and, of course, we realize that they are perfectly good, but no special effort has been made to sell farm loan bonds. But is there not a disposition among the exchanges of this country to depress the value of liberty bonds? Why should a bond underwritten by more than 100,000,000 people, with a property value of more than $250,000,000,000, be thrown upon the market and be said to be worth less than par? Is it not unpatriotic to attempt to lower the value of those bonds, especially during the war?

So I am not surprised, Mr. President, to hear it said that these farm loan bonds are not worth par. I believe they are worth 100 cents on the dollar, and they are worth more with the present rate of interest that is paid.

I shall not vote against the bill, although the amendments offered by the Senator from Massachusetts are detrimental to the operation and the administration of this proposed law.

I am very sorry to see these amendments, detrimental as they are, come from Members on this side of the Chamber. Mr. President, I regret exceedingly that these amendments have been offered, and I regret more that they have been accepted by those in charge of the bill. I believe that we have votes enough here to pass this bill in its original form as it was asked by the Secretary of the Treasury, and as it was asked by the Federal Farm Loan Board. I am opposed to the amendments; but I shall not delay the Senate in passing the measure. I realize that this bill when passed will allow the Government to buy bonds to the amount of the applications approved by the Federal farm-loan banks; but it will, in my judgment, do a great deal of harm to the Federal farm-loan law, its operation, and to the benefit that it otherwise would have been to the people of the country.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I ask to have one correction made. In the eleventh line, on the second page, the word "expiration" is used in the phrase "the expiration of the pending war." I ask to have that changed so as to read "the termination of the pending war."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 11, it is proposed to strike out the word "expiration" and insert the word "termination."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 6967) to increase the number of midshipmen at the United States Naval Academy, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC INFORMATION.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 172), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

Resolved, That, if not incompatible with the public interest, the Committee on Public Information is hereby directed to furnish the following information to the Senate:

What compensation, in salary or allowance for expenses, is paid to the civilian chairman of the committee? At what date did such salary or allowance begin, and what is the sum so paid up to the 1st day of December, 1917? What are the names of the persons composing the staff of the committee, when was each employed, what compensation, in salary or allowance for expenses, is paid to each; and what is the total sum paid to each up to the 1st day of December, 1917? What persons not now attached to the committee's staff have been employed since the organization of the committee and December 1, 1917? What duties did each perform and what sum, in salary or allowance for expenses, was paid therefor? What other expenses have been incurred by the committee in the course of its work up to the 1st of December, 1917?

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MARTIN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 35 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned, the adjournment being, under the concurrent resolution of the two Houses, until Thursday, January 3, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 18, 1917.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father of light and life, justice and mercy, love and liberty, peace and good will, our hearts turn to Thee with inexpressible joy and gratitude at this season of the year; which reminds us of Thine own best gift to the world, through whom Thou didst reveal Thine own heart, and through whom Thou didst impart life more abundantly unto Thy children.

Help us to forgive our transgressors as we hope at last to be forgiven of Thee. Hasten the day, we beseech Thee, when all the nations of the earth shall dwell together in the peace, heralded by the angelic host: "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth, peace, good will toward men."

Let Thy blessing attend the officers, Members, and employees of this House and their respective families as we separate for the holiday season, and bring us together at the appointed time in health, strength, and vigor, that we may do the work Thou hast given us to do, in the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ, our Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a letter addressed to me by J. H. Wheelwright, president of the Consolidation Coal Co., of Baltimore Md., discussing the coal situation. This is one of the large producing companies of the country, and this letter is one of the best statements of the present situation that it has been my pleasure to hear or read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The letter is as follows:

THE CONSOLIDATION COAL CO.,
Baltimore, Md., December 14, 1917.

Hon. JOHN W. LANGLEY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. LANGLEY: Coal being the essential of essentials must be produced in sufficient quantity to supply the fuel necessities of the home, the farm, the factories that are engaged in the production of such things as are absolutely necessary for the successful continuation and culmination of this war, the steel mills, the powder mills, the public utilities, the munition plants, the railroads, the steamships, shipyards, by-product, and other plants that can not be shut down or discontinued.

This is an undisputable fact.

The question which is important to impress upon your mind is that this amount of coal is not at present being produced and with this statement accepted as a fact, what is the remedy that should be applied immediately?

First. Soft coal almost without an exception when mined has to be dumped from the miner's car as it comes out of the pit or mine mouth over a tipple direct into a railroad car, and unless there is a railroad car under the tipple the miner's car, which holds about 2 tons, can not be dumped and the mine then and there is compelled to shut down. The 100 or more miners working at that particular mine will then come out, go to their homes, and produce no more coal for that day; so therefore the amount of coal that their labor could and would have produced for that particular day is absolutely lost.

It is perhaps also true that the railroad systems are so crowded with freight that under the present arrangement it is absolutely impossible for them to supply coal cars at mines with sufficient regularity, and in sufficient numbers to produce the coal necessary.

While the United States fuel administrator can and does direct unto whom the coal that is mined should be sent, unless coal is mined in sufficient quantity how will this bring relief when there is not sufficient coal on top of the earth to divide to prevent your people from suffering from cold and your necessary institutions, mills, and factories from shutting down for want of fuel?

This situation has been presented and re-presented and there have been months of pleading but no days of action. Now as it would seem that the Government of the United States is about to take charge of the direction of the transportation companies is it not timely to bring to your attention the fact that these transportation companies must be ordered, and these orders must be universally carried out, to furnish to the coal mines of the United States sufficient railroad cars to take care of the fuel needed for the purposes above specified?

Second. My personal belief is that if this is done we have sufficient man power at the mines to produce the necessary coal. If, however, the coal operators and the coal miners fail in their manifest duty to produce the necessary fuel then give the President of the United States the power to conscript the operators, the coal miners, and take over the coal mines and compel the operators and the coal miners to perform their duty with the same fidelity as is required of the soldier in the trenches who is facing the most powerful and cruel foe that the world has ever known.

We have a large number of coal mines in your State that have not been for months producing the coal they are equipped to produce or had the man power to produce, on account of the failure of the transportation companies to furnish cars, and, of course, unless some real steps are taken the production of these mines and all other mines in your State must necessarily be less on account of the increasing difficulties in the operation of the railroads for the next three or four winter months.

I have, my dear Mr. LANGLEY, given you in the above statement my frank and honest opinion of the situation as I believe it exists to-day.

Very truly, yours,

J. H. WHEELWRIGHT.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution and bill of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 115. Joint resolution providing additional telephone operators for the Senate and House of Representatives; and

S. 1848. An act for the relief of contributors of the Ellen M. Stone ransom fund.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Senate, two-thirds of the Senators present agreeing thereto, agrees to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 17) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 6967. An act to increase the number of midshipmen at the United States Naval Academy.

REFERENCE OF BILLS.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that H. R. 242, by Mr. RAKER, and H. R. 3371, by Mr. FRENCH, bills to protect the rights of women citizens of the United States to register and vote for Senators of the United States and Members of the House of Representatives, referred to the Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress, be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I desire to ask the gentleman from California, the chairman of the new committee recently created, if the resolutions conferring the right of suffrage on women should receive favorable consideration by the House would it be necessary for any action to be taken by the House on either of these measures?

Mr. RAKER. Presumably not; and I imagine that would be the attitude of the committee, but they claim jurisdiction, and some parties want to be heard, and the only thing is to give them an opportunity irrespective of what the committee might do; but I would say to the gentleman that when the House passes the constitutional amendment, which it undoubtedly will, I imagine there will be no reason, in fact, it would be hardly probable the committee would report this matter to the House. This, of course, can not be determined now.

Mr. WALSH. There is no intention on the part of the new committee to report in these measures before the constitutional amendment is acted upon?

Mr. RAKER. So far as I am concerned, if I can be of any assistance to the committee, it would be the purpose not to report them into the House until after the woman suffrage matter is disposed of.

Mr. WALSH. Despite that fact, does not the gentleman think it would be better to defer this matter of rereference and arranging for hearings upon these measures until action is had upon the national woman suffrage amendment?

Mr. RAKER. That may be all well so far as hearings are concerned.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. To inquire of the bill under consideration, whether it is the suffrage——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, if I can not have my question answered in my own time, I shall be obliged to object.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I simply asked for information.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposed the gentleman from Massachusetts was through.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman from California, Mr. Speaker, was attempting to answer the question I had put.

Mr. RAKER. In answer to the gentleman I will say that I think the jurisdiction ought to be transferred, but, to be perfectly frank with the gentlemen in the House, until that is disposed of—and I believe it will one way or the other on the 10th of January—I do not believe these hearings ought to be had upon those two bills or either of them until the matter is disposed of by the House, but now notwithstanding, in justice to the Committee on Woman Suffrage and the House, jurisdiction ought to be transferred.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kansas have anything further to remark?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. What bill does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. RAKER. The bills I refer to now are H. R. 242 and H. R. 3371, which are practically the same, the latter introduced by Mr. French, of Idaho.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. For what do these bills provide?

Mr. RAKER. These bills are intended, as parties contend, to give to women the right to vote under the Constitution of the United States for Members of the House and Senate.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Without regard to a constitutional amendment?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] asks unanimous consent, being authorized by his committee, to rerefer H. R. 242 and H. R. 3371 from the Committee on the Election of the President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I will.

Mr. GARD. To what committee are these now referred? Will the gentleman state the substance of the bills?

Mr. RAKER. I will. The bill 242 reads as follows. It is short.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York objects.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present the following privileged motion. I am authorized by the Committee on Woman Suffrage to move that H. R. 242 and H. R. 3371, bills to protect the rights of women citizens of the United States to register and vote for Senators of the United States and Members of the House of Representatives, referred to the Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress, be rereferred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri rise?

Mr. RUCKER. To make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RUCKER. Is this motion debatable?

The SPEAKER. No.

Mr. RUCKER. I hope it will be lost.

Mr. KITCHIN. Will the gentleman mind withholding that until we get through with these two very important matters that ought to be considered this morning? It could be deferred until these matters are disposed of.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I have another motion, a preferential one. If I will not lose my right, I will yield.

The SPEAKER. If anybody undertakes to enforce the rule strictly, if the gentleman waives his right, he will not get them back until another day. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] raised that identical point the other day.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Is this a preferential motion?

The SPEAKER. The motion is in order. The question is on rereferring these two bills, taking them from the Committee on the Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress and sending them to the Woman's Suffrage Committee.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky makes the point of order there is no quorum present, and the Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and forty-one Members are present, not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. Those who are in favor of rereferring this bill to the Committee on Woman Suffrage will, when their names are called, answer "yea," and those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 234, nays 107, answered "present" 1, not voting 91, as follows:

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, did my colleague from Pennsylvania, Mr. STEELE, vote?

The SPEAKER. He did not vote.

Mr. BUTLER. Thank you, sir. I have been paired with him. I voted in the affirmative. I want to withdraw that vote and vote present.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. BUTLER, and he answered "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Motion by Mr. RAKER: I move that the following House resolutions proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending the right of suffrage to women be referred from the Committee on the Judiciary to the Committee on Woman Suffrage, with jurisdiction, namely, House joint resolution No. 3, by Miss RANKIN; House joint resolution No. 4, by Mr. MONDELL; House joint resolution No. 11, by Mr. KEATING; House joint resolution No. 19, by Mr. HAYDEN; House joint resolution No. 34, by Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAKER. The resolutions referred to have gone to the Committee on the Judiciary. That committee has not acted upon them. It has not laid them upon the table. No action on them has been taken. Under the rule the fact that the bills are not reported would not prevent the House——

The SPEAKER. That is not a privileged matter.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. A resolution embodying the substance contained in each of these resolutions having been reported, would that make any difference in the parliamentary situation?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. GILLETT. I would like to make a parliamentary inquiry similar in nature to that made by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER], and that is that inasmuch as amendments exactly like this are already before the House for action, is it not a waste of time for the House to do anything about these?

The SPEAKER. If that were a parliamentary inquiry—which it is not—the Chair would say "Yes; it is a waste of time." [Laughter.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, if the Chair will hear me for a moment, I make the point of order that the motion proposed by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] is not privileged.

The SPEAKER. Why does the gentleman make that?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The Committee on the Judiciary——

The SPEAKER. I know; but I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that there are four of these things besides that one.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I was about to reach that point. The Committee on the Judiciary has reported to the House and there is now on the calendar a resolution in the express words, if I am correctly informed——

Mr. RAKER. No; they are not——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of the several resolutions that are pending.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. The resolutions are not the same. The resolution of Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado contains entirely different provisions. I will read it to the gentleman. It includes——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Oh, I do not yield to the gentleman. I would rather have the point of order overruled than yield to the gentleman to read. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Each measure or bill introduced into the House is referred on its own merits.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, those matters were properly referred at the time they were referred, of course.

The SPEAKER. There is no question about that.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The rule provides that correction in case of an error of reference may be made by the House without debate, in accordance with Rule IX, on any day immediately after the reading of the Journal. I make the point of order that the reference was not made by error. The reference was correctly made.

The SPEAKER. On that point the Chair rules with the gentleman, that it was correctly made.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Then a correction can only be made in case of error.

The SPEAKER. The rule has to be construed——

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the further point that the motion is to refer a number of resolutions, some of which are identical with the action of the resolution reported by the Committee on the Judiciary. To that extent the motion is not in order.

The SPEAKER. There is no question about that.

Mr. SHERLEY. And, not being divisible, the whole motion fails.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DYER. The fact that the resolution that has been reported by the Committee on the Judiciary has an amendment to it, does that make a difference in regard to the point of order made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY]? I will state for the information of the House——

The SPEAKER. The point made by the gentleman from Kentucky undoubtedly is correct; that is, joining several together. We can take more time and dispose of them one at a time.

Mr. RAKER rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from California rise?

Mr. RAKER. I ask unanimous consent to modify the motion—to strike out all after "House joint resolution No. 3, by Miss RANKIN." Strike out all the balance of it.

The SPEAKER. What does the gentleman say to the point of order made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], that these things were not erroneously referred, to begin with?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, in answer to that I have given the matter some little consideration, such as my ability will permit. The rule says "erroneous." Unquestionably there was no Committee on Woman Suffrage at the time that reference was made. The House since that time has created a committee, with jurisdiction, and clearly there could be no application of that word "erroneous" now, that the House should not transfer jurisdiction upon a proper application.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from California yield?

Mr. RAKER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WALSH. May I ask the gentleman in all seriousness if the purpose of having these measures referred to his committee is in anticipation of a request by him to have an assistant clerk appointed to that committee?

Mr. RAKER. That is a small question, and there is nothing in it. I will not ask anything from the House except what I think is right.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAMLIN. It seems that the whole trouble comes not because these bills were erroneously referred, but because a new committee has been created. Could not this whole matter be obviated by reintroducing these bills and having them referred to the proper committee?

The SPEAKER. It could.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I should like to be heard for a moment, unless the Speaker is going to sustain the point of order. If he is, I do not care to be heard.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. GILLETT. It seems to me the point of order unquestionably is technically correct, since nobody can deny that technically the rule simply provides for the correction of a mistake, and here there was no mistake in the reference. Now, in case there was an injustice done, the Chair might say, "I will not give a strained and technical interpretation of the rule. I will bend it to the side of justice." But in this case there can be no injustice done. The motion which the gentleman made is obviously of no practical effect. It is for a purely sentimental or personal purpose. The gentleman can accomplish the same result in a moment by introducing himself the same resolutions and having them referred to his committee, and it makes no difference to him or to the House whether these particular resolutions lie idle in the Judiciary Committee or not. So there is no practical effect produced by his motion. Therefore it seems to me the Chair ought to sustain the obvious strict technical meaning of the words and say that this is not to correct an error.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does sustain the point of order, although it is exceedingly narrow, because the gentleman from California has his remedy. He can reintroduce these resolutions in two minutes and a half and get them referred to his committee.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DYER. Suppose these bills are reintroduced and referred to the Woman Suffrage Committee, would a point of order then lie against their consideration on the ground that the Judiciary Committee already has jurisdiction of those resolutions?

The SPEAKER. Why, no; it would not. The ordinary practice of the House is that bills come up in the order in which they are on the calendar, and that rule goes unless the Committee on Rules brings in a rule to take a bill out of its regular order or unless somebody gets unanimous consent.

Mr. RAKER. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAKER. After a bill has been referred to one committee and still remains in that committee, is it proper under the rules of the House to introduce a similar resolution and transfer it to another committee, if the resolution is identical? I want to be fair with the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already ruled.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Regular order!

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may address the House for five minutes in correction of a mistake which I made a few days ago.

The SPEAKER. As soon as we dispose of a little business on the Speaker's table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH, indefinitely, on account of the illness of his wife; and

To Mr. JOHNSON of Washington, from January 3 to January 9.

RESIGNATIONS FROM THE HOUSE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communications:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., December 18, 1917.

The SPEAKER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have to-day transmitted to the governor of the State of New York my resignation as a Representative in the Congress of the United States from the eighth district of New York, to take effect December 31, 1917.

Faithfully, yours,

DANIEL J. GRIFFIN,
Eighth District New York.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., December 18, 1917.

To the SPEAKER,
House of Representatives of the United States,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have to-day transmitted to the governor of the State of New York my resignation as a Representative in the Congress of the United States from the twenty-second district of New York, to take effect December 31, 1917.

Respectfully, yours,

HENRY BRUCKNER.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., December 15, 1917.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

SIR: I beg leave to inform you that I have this day transmitted to the governor of the State of Georgia my resignation as a Representative in the Congress of the United States from the fourth district of said State, to take effect on December 18, 1917, at 5 o'clock p. m.

In thus terminating my long and pleasant service in the House of Representatives I can not refrain from expressing to you, and through you to my colleagues, my profound and abiding sense of gratitude for the uniform courtesy, kindness, and cooperation so generously accorded me by all.

Respectfully,

W. C. ADAMSON.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 117. Joint resolution amending the act of July 2, 1909, governing the holding of civil-service examinations.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 6967. An act to increase the number of midshipmen at the United States Naval Academy.

SENATE BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill and joint resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 1848. An act for the relief of contributors of the Ellen M. Stone ransom fund; to the Committee on Claims; and

S. J. Res. 115. Joint resolution providing additional telephone operators for the Senate and House of Representatives; to the Committee on Appropriations.

RESIGNATION FROM A COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, December 18, 1917.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker of the House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I hereby tender my resignation as a member of the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic, to take effect when the same is accepted.

Yours, respectfully,

FRANK CLARK.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation will be accepted.

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, some time ago the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] was given an hour to address the House this morning. With his permission I ask unanimous consent that instead of this morning the gentleman be granted an hour to address the House immediately after the reading of the Journal on January 7.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent, with the permission of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] that the date of his address be changed from to-day until the 7th day of January just after the reading of the Journal and the cleaning up of business on the Speaker's table, not to interfere in any way with privileged matters. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ELECTION TO A COMMITTEE.

Mr. KITCHIN. Just one other matter, Mr. Speaker, I move the election of WILLIAM B. WALTON as chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice.

The SPEAKER. Are there any other nominations? If not the Chair will put the question.

The motion was agreed to.

EXPENSES OF FIRST LIBERTY LOAN.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, on last Friday, in discussing the inability of this House to keep track of expenditures, I stated as one of the evidences of secretiveness on behalf of the administration the fact that Secretary McAdoo had not given to the House, as he had assured the Committee on Ways and Means that he would, the expenditures that he had made in selling the first liberty loan bonds.

I received this morning a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury expressing surprise at my statement and calling my attention to the fact that he had made such a report and inclosing it. I find that on December 11, three days before I spoke, it was made and referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department and ordered to be printed. So that it was undoubtedly in print at the time I made my remarks, and I wish to make that as public as my criticism.

In that connection it seems to me only fair that I should add that the statement which he submitted to the House is simply contained on one sheet of paper. It has only 30 or 40 items to account for the expenditure of over $2,000,000, and to my view does not at all meet the needs which this House is under if it is to know what the expenses of the administration are.

Mr. LONGWORTH. To what committee did the gentleman say the report was referred?

Mr. GILLETT. To the Committte on Expenditures in the Treasury Department.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman put the report in the RECORD?

Mr. GILLETT. It is printed and is a public document. I will put the report in the RECORD, but it will not give much light to anybody.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Does it include the expenses of special trains?

Mr. GILLETT. The whole expense of traveling is something over $8,000 and is put in one item.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And it does not show any special trains?

Mr. GILLETT. No; it discloses nothing but the total expense. The salaries run up to over $85,000 and they are in one item. The printing and binding is something over $50,000, and that is in one item. That is not the kind of report which I think this House is entitled to. That does not tell us whether the money was wisely and properly expended. I would not intimate that it was not, but this is exactly the kind of report that would be made if it was wished to conceal something. In view of the liberality of the House in its appropriations that is not the return we should expect.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Does the gentleman know where the printing and binding was done?

Mr. GILLETT. No; nothing is said about it, and I do not know. Here is simply one sheet, and while I did make a technical mistake when I said the report had not been made, this is not in my opinion an accurate, detailed report such as this House is entitled to. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print the report or statement in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to print the report in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. Does the gentleman know whether the Secretary made an itemized report to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department?

Mr. GILLETT. This is undoubtedly the only report made. If there was another report made to the committee the committee would have printed it. I assume that this is the only report made.

The letter of the Secretary of the Treasury with the statement is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, December 3, 1917.

THE SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SIR: In accordance with the provisions of section 8 of the act of Congress approved April 24, 1917 (Public No. 3, 65th Cong.), I have the honor to transmit herewith a statement of expenditures under said act as far as such expenditures have been submitted to the department up to December 1, 1917.

This statement does not cover complete accounts, for the reason that all bills from the Federal reserve banks have not yet been transmitted to the department, other outstanding bills have not yet been received for payment, and the work in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and other branches of the Treasury Department in connection with the bonds issued under said act has not yet been completed. As soon as the work is finished and the accounts are rendered and paid a complete classified and detailed statement will be submitted to the Congress.

Respectfully,

W. G. MCADOO, Secretary.

PROHIBITION AMENDMENT.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask unanimous consent that Members be allowed within five legislative days to extend their own remarks without the inclusion of telegrams, letters, or editorials, upon the national prohibition amendment to the Constitution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that all Members shall have the right to print their own remarks on the constitutional amendment agreed to yesterday by the House, excluding telegrams, letters, and editorials, and so forth. Is there objection?

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on prohibition and woman suffrage.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up the resolution authorizing the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department to send for persons and papers.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announced yesterday that during the extra session, on account of the great confusion and pressure and the agreement not to pass anything except for war emergency, he violated the rule for six months and recognized Members for unanimous consent, but that he was not going to do it any longer.

Mr. HARDY. But this is a resolution——

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands perfectly what it is.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I should object anyway, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. All Members are under obligation to observe the rules of the House, and the Speaker most of all.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE COMMITTEE.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the membership of the Woman Suffrage Committee be increased to 14. That is an increase of 1 as the membership is now 13, and that the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] be made a member of that committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to increase the number of the Committee on Woman Suffrage to 14, and that the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] be the additional member.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Rules has given very careful attention to the organization of this committee. I, of course, was opposed to it, but a great majority of the committee was for it. That committee very carefully considered the number of which it should be composed and acted upon it after due consideration. I do not think that this should be done by unanimous consent, and I object.

WAR EXCESS-PROFITS TAX.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House joint resolution 195, amending the act entitled "An act to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1917, so as to subject to the war excess-profits tax the compensation of officers and employees under the United States, including Members of Congress.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House joint resolution 195.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. WATSON of Virginia in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That subdivision (a) of section 201 of the act entitled "An act to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1917, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(a) In the case of officers and employees under any State, or local subdivision thereof, the compensation or fees received by them as such officers or employees;"

SEC. 2. That section 209 of such act of October 3, 1917, is hereby amended by adding a paragraph to read as follows:

"The income of officers and employees under the United States, including Members of Congress (but not including the present President of the United States during the term for which he has been elected, nor the judges of the Supreme and inferior courts of the United States in office at the time of the passage of this amendment), received as compensation or fees by them as such officers, employees, or Members, shall be taxable under this section for the calendar year 1917 and each year thereafter; but a nonresident alien officer or employee of the United States shall be entitled to the same deduction as a resident of the United States."

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, under the present revenue law, passed at the last session, the provisions of the excess-profits tax do not apply to governmental officers and employees; that is, Federal, State, county, and city officers and employees. There is considerable doubt in the minds of lawyers in the House, in the Treasury Department, and elsewhere whether Members of Congress are included in the provisions excepting such officers from the operation of the excess-profits tax title. This resolution proposes to specifically include within the provisions of such tax—that is, to make subject to the excess-profits tax—all Federal officers and employees, including Members of Congress. This would make it clear and remove all doubt.

No sections or provisions of any act have ever been more misrepresented than has this exception provision and section 209 of the revenue act.

A lot of demagogues who want to come to Congress, who want to succeed some Member of the House upon either side, and the press almost generally, have deliberately, willfully, and maliciously misrepresented these provisions, the authors of the act, and the conferees that reported it to the House and to the Senate. They have declared repeatedly, the press a thousand times over, that Members of Congress taxed the income of everyone else in the country but exempted their own incomes from taxes. There is not one word of truth in that. This new revenue act taxes the incomes of Members of the House and Senate three times more than they were taxed before.

The press has declared a thousand times over that Members of Congress exempted their own salaries from the excess-profits tax, but subjected the salaries of all others to the tax. It would have the public believe that Members of Congress specifically exempted their salaries from the tax. There is not one word of truth in that. The act does not specifically exempt the salaries of Members of Congress, and in the opinion of some of the best lawyers in this House, including the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. TOWNER, and the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. GREEN, both of whom have given diligent study and thought to the subject, in the opinion of some of the best lawyers in the Treasury Department, salaries of Members of Congress are not exempted from the excess-profits tax, and they will have to pay both the income and the excess-profits taxes, with respect to their salaries. The provision relative to the exemption of salaries of governmental officers from the excess-profits tax applies generally to all governmental officers, including Federal officers, State, county, and city officers—that is, the governors of the States, the judges of the States, the mayors of cities, the sheriffs, clerks, all officers of the State and county and city, and all officers under the United States Government, the District of Columbia or Territories of the United States. In the opinion of many eminent lawyers, a Congressman, a Member of the Senate or of the House, is not, under the Constitution, such an "officer of the United States" as would include his salary in the exemption. When the conferees decided on section 209 they left in the exception of governmental officers. That was already in the Senate exception or exemption amendments, as was also an exception or exemption of salaries of lawyers, doctors, and other professional men. As far as the House bill was concerned, individuals were not included in the excess-profits tax provisions at all, and therefore no salaries or profits in business or other income of individuals, whether officers or not, whether business or professional men, were subject to the tax. The Senate insisted on retaining its amendments including individuals in the excess-profits tax provision. The House opposed it, but finally yielded, as was pointed out by me in presenting the conference report to the House. As the individual merchant, farmer, banker, lumberman, mechanic, and so forth, were thus made subject to the tax, the conferees thought it but just that the lawyer, doctor, and other professional man and salaried business man should be made subject to the tax, and so section 209 was put in the bill and adopted by Congress. This left the exception of salaries of governmental, Federal, and State officers and employees standing as it was in the Senate amendments. The question of excepting or exempting salaries of Members of Congress was never suggested or discussed in the conference.

I may say here that other governments that have excess-profits taxes—and there are 12 or 14 in addition to the United States—except from the operation of the excess-profits tax salaries of governmental officers and employees, upon the ground that a governmental office is not a business or a trade or a profession or a calling pursued for private profit, as is the profession of a lawyer or a doctor or the business or occupation of an officer of a corporation or other person getting a salary in business. The salaries of officers of corporations, as, say, the president of a bank or of a steel corporation, are for gain, for private profit. The work done is for the benefit of the institution, which is carried on for private gain. The more efficient the officer of a corporation or the business-salaried man the more time he gives, the more thought he bestows upon the business, the more he makes for the corporation or business, the more his salary is increased. Every minute of his time is given for private gain for himself and for the institution for which he is working, while a governmental office is for governmental purposes, in performance of governmental functions, and the time and service given by the officer is not for himself, not for his private gain, but for the use and benefit of the Government and the public. It makes no difference how efficient the officer may be, how much he may save the Government, how much he makes for the Government, he gets no more than a fixed salary, no more than a man who causes loss to the Government. Take, for instance, the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. CANNON, when he was chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, or take the gentleman from New York, Mr. FITZGERALD, lately chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. By their labor and time and study and thought they may have saved the Government—as they have—millions and millions of dollars, while others of us, instead of saving the Treasury millions of dollars may have caused loss to it of millions of dollars. Nevertheless, they get no more salary than those that caused loss.

The salaries are paid not for the benefit of the officer, but for the benefit of the Government. That is the reason why other Governments do not subject salaries of Government officials to excess-profit taxes.

By the resolution we make it clear and specific that we do include Members of Congress and Federal officers and employees. Hereafter, by the passage of this resolution, no paper, no magazine, no demagogue, can have a pretext to misrepresent the provision of the act or the authors of this bill or Congress, or the present Member of Congress whose seat some demagogue may desire. I hope this will pass unanimously. [Applause.]

Under leave to extend my remarks I print below a letter to the New York Sun, in which I discuss section 209:

SCOTLAND NECK, N. C., October 30, 1917.

NEW YORK SUN,
New York, N. Y.

DEAR SIR: Section 209 of the new revenue act, to which your letter received this morning refers, reads as follows:

"That in the case of a trade or business having no invested capital or not more than a nominal capital there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid, in addition to the taxes under existing law and under this act in lieu of the tax imposed by section 201, a tax equivalent to 8 per cent of the net income of such trade or business in excess of the following deductions: In the case of a domestic corporation, $3,000, and in the case of a domestic partnership or a citizen or a resident of the United States, $6,000; in the case of all other trades or business, no deduction."

Some lawyers, doctors, high-salaried business men, and editors have strenuously objected to this section and bitterly assailed and denounced its authors, because it includes in the application of the excess-profits tax provisions the income or profits of their professions and employments, contending—

1. That it discriminates against the lawyers, doctors, and other professional men in favor of other classes of citizens.

In the remarks of Senator SIMMONS, presenting the conference report to the Senate, in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of October 16, 1917, appears the following, relative to section 209:

"When we decided to include occupations and professions the question of how to determine the deduction to be allowed greatly perplexed us. There was no invested capital, and therefore no basis upon which to make such a calculation as in the case of individuals, partnerships, or corporations engaged in trade or business requiring the investment of capital. So we decided that in the case of the business or the occupation without invested capital, or merely nominal capital, as it was impractical to apply the exemption based on capital, we would impose a flat tax of 8 per cent upon their earnings during the taxable year, less the flat exemption allowed in other cases.

"It is said that this imposes a double income tax upon occupations or professions doing business with only a nominal capital, and that it works a discrimination in favor of corporations, partnerships, and individuals doing business with capital. This suggestion is based upon a misapprehension and is unwarranted. * * *

"The rate of taxation applied in the case of invested capital is graduated, the minimum rate being 20 per cent and the maximum being 60 per cent.

"The tax imposed upon individuals, partnerships, and corporations engaged in business without invested capital is, in essence, just as in the other case, an additional income tax, with the flat exemption of from $3,000 to $6,000 allowed as in the other case, but from necessity without the exemption based upon invested capital, because there is no capital invested as in the other case. It may be that his arrangement does not accurately adjust the differences between the two cases, but it is confidently believed if there is any discrimination it is not a discrimination against business without capital. Not a discrimination against the professional man or the occupation without invested capital.

"The confusion about this matter seems to grow out of the impression that the tax now levied is a war tax, a tax based upon the actual difference between the net earnings during the prewar period and the taxable year. That was true of the bill as it was originally reported back to the Senate by the Finance Committee, but that is not true of the bill as amended, limiting the exemption to not less than 7 per cent or more than 9 per cent of the invested capital.

"As I stated this morning, in our efforts to bring the professional man under the provisions of this bill and subject his earnings to a tax, just as we had the farmer and the mechanic and the merchant and everybody else, we found ourselves hedged in by a great many limitations and difficulties. After we had discussed one or two schemes and practically fixed upon one, we finally abandoned it and adopted one to which the Senator refers and criticizes as the best means of reaching that class of earnings. * * *

"The purpose of the conferees was to subject occupations and professions having no invested capital to this war tax, just as those with invested capital were subject to it. If there had been the same basis of exemption in the one case as in the other we would have allowed a like exemption and imposed like rates of taxation, but because of the necessity of the case this could not be done, and because there was no such basis of exemption we imposed a tax very much lighter on business conducted without invested capital—a flat rate of only 8 per cent, as against a graduated rate upon profits over a maximum of 9 per cent of from 20 to 60 per cent on ordinary business. I do not think the professional man has any right to complain."

In my remarks, presenting the conference report to the House, in the same issue of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, appears the following, relative to such section:

"In the House bill the excess-profits tax applied only to corporations and partnerships and not to individuals. The Senate included individuals in its amendments. It made the individual merchant, farmer, banker, lumberman, miner, manufacturer, and every other class of individuals in trade or business subject to the excess-profits tax. But it exempted from the tax the incomes of lawyers and doctors and other professional men derived from the profession; also salaries of officers and employments, including the salaries of business occupations, as well as those of governmental officers. The House conferees opposed the inclusion of individuals in the excess-profits-tax provision, for the reasons I have before given. The Senate conferees insisted upon including them, but agreed to grant them a specific deduction of $6,000 plus the deduction of the per centum of profits made on invested capital, if any, the same as is given to corporations and partnerships.

"After much consideration, the conferees unanimously agreed that there should be no exemption from the tax of lawyers, doctors, civil engineers, or other professional men, or the high-salaried business men. So the conferees, after mature deliberation and after a special conference committee meeting called for the purpose of considering the matter, unanimously agreed on section 209.

* * * * * * *

"A prior section defines trade or business to include professions and occupations. There is not a more proper or just provision in the entire bill than this one. If the individual farmer, merchant, banker, miner, lumberman, manufacturer, and every other class of individuals in trade or business are made to pay the tax, why should not the lawyer, the doctor, and other professional men who make a profit or income in their profession of over $6,000 be also made to pay? Why should not the high-salaried business man be made to pay?

"What good reason can be given why the farmer and merchant and manufacturer should be made subject to the tax and the lawyer, doctor, and other professional man be exempt from the tax?

"The only fair and reasonable objection that can be made to the provision is that the tax is not high enough to equalize the tax which the farmer, merchant, and manufacturer have to pay. They must pay from 20 to 60 per cent of their income or profits in excess of their deductions, while the professional man and high-salaried business man will pay only 8 per cent on their income in excess of their deductions. Of course, the farmer, merchant, or manufacturer has a large deduction on account of having substantial capital invested, but this deduction will not reduce his tax to as low as that of the lawyer, doctor, or other professional man.

"It is suggested that the lawyer, doctor, or other professional man should not be taxed, because his income is derived from his brain and time and personal qualification. Does not the farmer, merchant, or manufacturer carry to his business his personal qualification? Does he not devote to his business his brain and time, and, in addition, put capital in money and property into it? Is not his income or profit derived from the combination of his brain and time and capital? It is said that the professional man is taxed under the income-tax law on his income and that it is unjust to levy another tax in the nature of an excess-profits tax on his income or profits, that it is double taxation. Is not the farmer, merchant, or manufacturer, or other individual in trade or business, taxed on his income under the income-tax law exactly as the lawyer, doctor, or salaried business man is, and is not an excess-profits tax levied, in addition to the regular income tax, on his profits or income? If such a tax is just in case of the farmer, merchant, and manufacturer, why is it not just in case of the lawyer, doctor, or other professional man?"

As suggested by Senator SIMMONS in his remarks in the Senate, and by me in my remarks in the House, if there be an injustice, an inequality, a discrimination in section 209, it is in favor of the lawyer and other professional man and salaried business man. For instance: A, an individual farmer, merchant, or manufacturer, puts into his business, in addition to his personal services, his brains and labor, $100,000 capital. He makes a net profit or income of $25,000. The excess-profits tax to be paid by him is $3,400. B, an individual lawyer or doctor or other professional man, puts into his business or profession no capital, but only his personal services, his brains, and labor. He makes the same profit or income of $25,000. The tax, under section 209 (the excess-profits tax provision applicable to him), to be paid by him is only $1,520.

If the net income of A, from his business in the case given is $50,000, his excess-profits tax will be $17,200. If the net income of B, the lawyer, from his profession is $50,000, his tax under section 209 will be only $3,520.

The merchant, farmer, manufacturer, or other individual business man puts into his business exactly what the lawyer, doctor, or other professional man (taxable under section 209) does, his personal services, his brain, and labor, and in addition puts in money and property, takes financial risks, makes financial sacrifices, builds up industry, gives employment to labor, produces for public use.

The lawyer, doctor, or other professional man (taxable under section 209) puts into his profession or occupation no money, no property, but only his personal services, his brains, and labor, and by such services takes no financial risks, makes no financial sacrifices, builds up no industry, gives no employment to labor, produces nothing.

It is inconceivable how any fair-minded lawyer or editor or other person can reason to himself the justice of levying an excess-profits tax on the income from the business of the one and of exempting from the tax the income from the profession or business of the other.

It should be remembered that this excess-profits tax applicable to the farmer, merchant, manufacturer, and other individual in business against which no protest was made by the lawyers, doctors, and editors, is in addition to the regular income tax just as is the tax under section 209, and such farmer, merchant, manufacturer, or other individual business man pays on his net income tax, at the same rate, as does the lawyer, doctor, or other professional man on his net income.

2. That it discriminates against the salaried man; that it is unfair and unjust to levy a tax in the nature of an excess profits on a business or occupation salary earned by personal service—by brains and labor.

By including individuals in the excess-profits tax provision of the revenue act, to which the House conferees were opposed, for the reasons set out in my remarks presenting the report to the House, the value of the personal services, of the brains and labor, given to his business by the individual merchant, farmer, manufacturer, and other individual engaged in business, with invested capital, was necessarily taxed thereby. Though the total income of his business is derived from a combination of his invested capital and his personal services, he is not allowed by law to separate from such income that portion earned by his personal services, his brains and labor, and to pay himself a salary for the value thereof, charging it up as part of the operating expenses of the business, as he could do if his business was incorporated. His personal services, in the management of the business, earns a part of the income and has a value just as much so as if he was employed by some corporation to perform the same services and paid therefor by fixed salary. Not being allowed to deduct the value of or earnings from such services as part of the expenses of his business, in levying the tax on the total net income or profits, his earnings from such services are thereby taxed under section 201 at the rates ranging from 20 to 60 per cent, according to the amount of the per cent of profits made on his invested capital.

The business man with a salary in excess of $6,000—the amount of the specific exemption allowed—is generally, in at least 19 cases out of 20, both an officer or employee and a shareholder in, or part owner of, the business concern paying the salary, and very frequently he is substantially the sole owner or controller of it. The concern, being a corporation, can value his personal services, fix and pay a salary therefor, and deduct same from the operating expenses of the business, and thus escape to the amount of the salary the payment of the excess-profits tax of section 201. For instance, A carries on business as an individual, has $100,000 invested, manages it, devoting his personal services to it. He makes a profit of $25,000. B incorporates, with a few other stockholders—perhaps his wife and daughter—to comply with the State law, incorporated, he conducts same kind of business, devotes to it his personal services, has same amount of capital and makes same profit of $25,000. The services rendered by each to the respective businesses are of same nature and value, those of each worth $10,000.

B, as an employee and manager of his incorporated business, is allowed to deduct the value of his services in a salary of $10,000 from the $25,000 profits and to charge it up to operating expenses. His business pays an excess-profits tax only on $15,000, or a tax of only $1,000; while individual A, manager of his business, not being allowed to charge up to expenses the $10,000 value of his services, pays on the whole $25,000, or a tax of $3,400—computation in both cases made on the 7 per cent exemption basis plus the specific exemption. B's salary would escape altogether the payment of any excess-profits tax but for section 209, and even under this he pays on his $10,000 salary only $320; while A, on his earnings from his personal services in the business, though in nature and value the same as B, pays under section 201 over three times as much as B.

The case would not be altered if B had no interest in the business or owned no stock in the corporation, but was employed by it, and paid for his personal services a salary of $10,000. He would pay only $320 tax on the earnings from his personal services, while A would pay more than $1,000 on like earnings from his personal services, they being in law inseparable from the total profits or income of his business.

It seems incredible that an intelligent, fair-minded man should approve the levying of the larger tax on A and denounce as unjust and discriminatory the levying of the smaller tax on B.

How can any one justify subjecting A to the tax and exempting B from the tax?

3. That it discriminates against earned income in favor of unearned income, requiring the earned to pay a larger tax than the unearned income.

Earned income means, according to the assailants of section 209, income derived from personal services or activities of the recipient of the income. Unearned income means income derived from investments, with respect to which no personal service or activity is contributed by the recipient.

A distinguished Senator first suggested this "discrimination" during the discussion of the conference report in the Senate, saying:

"I think an injustice is inflicted upon the man who earns his income by his own efforts as compared with the man who does not earn his income at all, but sits at a desk and clips coupons or cashes dividend checks."

To illustrate the injustice he, as many others have done, recited by comparison the case of the hard-working lawyer earning an income by his own efforts and the man who received an equal income by doing nothing except cashing his dividend checks, and then asserted that the lawyer was required by section 209 to pay a larger tax.

The facts is, the lawyer pays less tax than the "dividend-check casher."

The so-called unearned income is derived from two sources: (1) From interest on money loaned on bonds, notes, or other securities; and (2) from dividends on stock or shares in a corporation or association.

If one has $100,000, generally accumulated earnings of preceding years, and instead of going actively into business he is content to loan it out on bonds or notes at the small profit, which the low interest rates laws of the States only permit, there is and can be no excess profits to be taxed. He has capital to the amount of $100,000 invested in the bonds, notes, or other securities, and the interest does not amount to as much as the per cent (from 7 to 9 per cent) exemption allowed.

If he invests that amount in an active business, corporate or otherwise, and its profits or income do not exceed the exemptions allowed, there would be no excess to be taxed.

Can it be reasonably contended that money invested in loans, whose small per cent of income is limited by interest laws, should have a smaller exemption and a higher rate of excess-profits tax than money invested in business with prospects of large or excessive profits, with no law limit to its income? If so, there would and could be no lending of money—no investment in bonds, notes, or other securities by individuals. Interest from money loaned, of course, pays the regular income tax, like all other forms of income.

So much for the "coupon-clipper" argument.

Now, as to the dividend-check casher.

If one invests $100,000 in the capital stock of a corporation, the corporation, under the act, pays the excess-profits tax (from 20 to 60 per cent) on the earnings or income of that $100,000 for him before he gets a dollar of dividends. Should he be made to pay the second time the heavy excess-profits tax on the earnings of his $100,000, when the dividends, already lessened by the payment of the tax by the corporation, are turned over to him? The law does not and should not require him to again pay the tax.

Instead of the "dividend-check casher" paying less tax under the excess-profits tax provisions on his so-called "unearned income" than does the lawyer or other professional or business salaried man on his "earned income" from his own efforts, he pays much more.

For instance, A invests $100,000 in a $200,000 capital-stock corporation. The corporation makes 25 per cent net profit, or $50,000. A's $100,000 earns half of it, or $25,000. The corporation under the act pays for the stockholders, before they are entitled to dividends, an excess-profits tax of $8,000. A's $100,000 investment pays half of it; that is, A pays through the corporation on his income of $25,000 an excess-profits tax of $4,000. Should he be made to pay it again when the dividends, diminished to the extent of the tax, are turned over to him?

B, a lawyer, makes from his profession, from his personal services, $25,000, the same amount A makes by his investment. B under section 209 pays a tax of only $1,520 on his $25,000 "earned income," about one-third as much as A pays on his so-called "unearned income."

It should be recalled in this connection that, with respect to the income tax, A through the corporation pays under the act on the earnings of his investment—that is, on his $25,000 income—a normal tax of 6 per cent, without exemptions, while B, on his income of $25,000, pays a normal income tax of only 4 per cent, with exemptions.

And so much for the "dividend-checks-casher" argument.

It should not be overlooked that section 209 applies not only to professional and business and occupation salaried persons, without capital invested in their professions or occupations, but to other individuals, partnerships, and corporations that carry on any business or are engaged in any trade or occupation with no or only a nominal capital invested.

Answering your direct question relative to the repeal of section 209 at the next session of Congress, I beg to say: If the application of the excess-profits tax provision to individuals (which I opposed) is retained, section 209 should not be repealed but amended, providing for the increase of the tax rate therein so as to more nearly equalize the tax paid by the class of individuals subject to such section with the tax paid by the class of individuals subject to section 201 of the act.

Permit me, in conclusion, though your letter made no reference to it, to allude to the false charge persistently made by some demagogues, a few lawyers and doctors, and many editors, that in the new revenue act "Congress exempted from taxes the salaries of Congressmen."

Under the new act Congressmen will pay three times more income tax on their salaries than before. They will pay both the rates under the act of September 8, 1916, which doubled the previous rates, and the rates under the new act, which more than doubled the rates of the act of September 8, 1916.

With respect to the "excess-profits tax" of the new act, these demogogues and the press would have the public believe that the conferees and Congress specifically exempted the salaries of Congressmen from the tax, but taxed all other salaries.

Here is the provision of exception of salaries (sec. 201, subdivision a):

"This title shall apply to all trades or businesses of whatever description, whether continuously carried on or not, except—

"In the case of officers and employees under the United States, or any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or any local subdivision thereof, the compensation or fees received by them as such officers or employees."

This exception applies to the salaries of all officials of the United States or States, counties, cities, etc., and properly so in the unanimous opinion of the entire conference. No member of the conference—and, perhaps, no Member of Congress when he voted for the bill—discussed or had in his mind the salaries of Members of Congress. The conference, and so had the Senate before, considered the broad question whether it was proper as a policy to exempt from the excess-profits tax the salary of Federal, State, county, and city officials.

There is a difference between the income tax and the excess-profits tax.

The income tax is imposed upon individuals and corporations with respect to their entire income, including salaries of Congressmen and all other Federal officials.

The excess-profits tax is a tax upon the business, trade, profession, or occupation of the individual, partnership, or corporation with respect to the profits or income of such business, trade, profession, or occupation in excess of certain exemption or deductions.

What kind of "business" or "trade" or "profession" or "occupation" is the office of governor, judge, clerk of court, mayor of city, secretary of state, Representative or Senator? It is neither a business, trade, profession, nor occupation. What is the excess profits of a governor's salary? Of that of a judge, clerk of court, member of the Cabinet, of a Congressman?

An official (especially one whose salary is as much as $6,000—and this is the exemption under sec. 209) gives his time, industry, and brains, not to his profession, business, or trade, for the promotion of such trade, business, or profession, and for private profits as does the lawyer, doctor, and high-salaried business man, but to the service of the Government, Federal, State, county, or city. However efficient, however much time given, however valuable the service rendered, they are for the Government, for the public, and he gets no more compensation than the fixed salary of the office. Not so with the professional man or high-salaried business man (the latter generally a high-salaried officer in his own business—his own corporation). His time, his labor, his brains are devoted solely for himself—his private profits. The more time, labor, brains bestowed the more efficient, the more service rendered, the more he serves himself, his profession or business, and the more are his private profits.

The duties of an official, whether Federal, State, or municipal, whose salary exceeds $6,000 (the exemption in sec. 209) practically debars him from engaging in a business or a profession for private profits, and this privilege he sacrifices when he takes office. However, if a Member of Congress or other official receives income from a business or profession, he is not exempted from the excess-profits tax with respect to such income, as that comes from a business or trade or profession devoted to making private profits.

There is a difference in principle in levying an excess-profits tax on the business, trade, profession, or occupation organized and carried on for private profits than levying such a tax on the salary of an office established and conducted for governmental purposes, the service going to the benefit of the Government, of the public, and the official by his duties practically debarred from engaging in such business or profession for private profits.

Having given some of the reasons which justify the exception of governmental salaries in the application of the excess-profits tax, and being perfectly willing to assume full share of responsibility for it, I will say that I was not the author or suggester of such exception or exemption, as the press so frequently charges, nor do I oppose, nor have I opposed, the inclusion of the salaries of Congressmen or other Federal officials in the excess-profits tax provision.

Yours, truly,

CLAUDE KITCHIN.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, when I make a mistake as a Member of this House and am conscious of it I am willing to admit it, but I am not willing to make a confession of error when I am not conscious of it merely to satisfy a false public opinion. In voting for this war-tax bill I voted to hold Members of Congress to its terms. Neither in conference nor in the House did I vote to exempt Members of Congress from any responsibility placed upon other salaried men or profit earners of a like class.

The act of September 18, 1916, which is law in force, imposed upon Members of Congress a 2 per cent tax upon the normal income of married men earning over $4,000. If they earn in excess of $20,000 it imposes upon them a supertax. The act of October 3, 1917, imposed upon Members of Congress an additional normal tax of 2 per cent upon all they earn (married men) over $2,000 and in addition a supertax of 1 per cent upon everything they earn over $5,000. In addition the act grouped Congressmen with another class of citizens to be taxed for excess profits and fixing their capital of $6,000, which is the amount of exemption granted to everybody, taxed them 8 per cent on all earnings above that amount. Now, that is what you Members of Congress have to pay. If you want to confess you exempted yourself, that, at least, is what you have to pay. I make no such confession. I am liable to 2 per cent normal tax under the act of September, 1916, to an additional 2 per cent tax under the act of October 3, 1917, and I am liable, as is every other salaried, occupational, or professional man, for 8 per cent tax on everything I earn over $6,000. The so-called salaried or professional man receives no better treatment than I receive, nor do I receive any more or less than he receives.

Now, as to this fanfare that has given Members of Congress so much unjust criticism:

The whole war-tax bill is sufficiently intricate to puzzle even the lawyers who helped to frame it. As a layman I am willing to amend it or to wipe it out entirely, if assured that the United States can pay its obligations without taxing anybody. I am not willing to concede, however, that we can beat an efficient nation like Germany by making patriotic speeches or publishing cartoons ridiculing the Kaiser. The people of this country must pay for the war, which some of us think should be prosecuted more vigorously than it is in view of the tremendous appropriations that have been made. We have already appropriated approximately $21,000,000,000, but judging from the importance which many people attach to the question of taxing Congressmen's salaries it would seem that we had been endeavoring to camouflage the country. This is the most arrant bit of nonsense that has come along since the war began, but occasionally, under stress, Members of Congress, like many other patriots, sometimes get cold feet when the pen that is mightier than the sword is directed toward their districts. This war-tax bill, intricate and burdensome as it is, never exempted Congressmen from taxation. It taxed them along with certain professional and business men, and on the same terms. If there was any loophole whatever through which Members of Congress could escape taxation it was as to the difference between the $6,000 exemption allowed to everybody on excess-war profits and the salary of $7,500, a matter of about $40,000 in all, but since Congressmen are not Federal officials under the Constitution and are not State officials, they were not entitled to even this exemption. But lawyers who make fees above $6,000 were touched by this law, and such editorial writers as make over $6,000 were also touched, and therefore "the brains" of the country "were unduly taxed." Those who vote for the amendment now before the House will not relieve these "brains" of war excess-profits taxes; they will simply defer to that enthusiastic group of patriotic pikers in the United States, who, being in funds in excess of $6,000, conjured up the destruction of all Members of Congress who were so "unpatriotic" as to include for taxation money made by "brains" along with money made by industry and brawn. My humble judgment is that when Congress learns to stand its ground against such indecent and unpatriotic assaults, it will be far more highly respected than it is. [Applause.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of taxing the salaries of the Members of Congress in the same manner the salaries of any other person or persons are taxed, but I am not in favor of this proposition, because I consider this bill entirely unnecessary, and because, in my judgment, it will place Congress in a false light. When I voted for the last revenue bill I voted to put the excess-profits tax on the salaries of Members of Congress the same as on the salaries of any other party who was taxed. When this matter first came up and it was charged that Members of Congress were exempted, I stated that there was nothing in the charge, that the tax was placed upon Members of Congress as well as upon others. I said then that I should pay the tax without claiming exemption. I claim no credit for this, as, like all other Congressmen, the law required me to pay it. I so intended when I voted for the bill, and if there is any Member of this House who says that he intended to the contrary I would like for him to stand up and say so. Gentlemen of the House, I am unwilling to plead guilty to the commission of an act which I have never done.

I do not want to admit, either by inference or by implication, that a charge is true when in fact it is absolutely baseless and unfounded.

I have no time in five minutes to make a legal argument on this matter. I wish I had in order that I could show there is nothing in the statement that Congressmen's salaries were exempt as a legal proposition. I did, however, address a letter to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue sometime ago, which was printed in the RECORD, in which I stated my reasons for holding that Members of Congress were subject to this excess-profits tax and asked that his department so rule. I am willing now to stake my professional reputation on the opinion of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, feeling absolutely satisfied and confident that if he ruled on this point he would hold that as the law now stands Members of Congress are subject to this tax.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield? Will the gentleman kindly give the date of the RECORD in which that is published?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The RECORD of December 10.

Mr. GARD. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The Constitution of the United States provides that the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint all officers of the United States except that Congress may by statute provide for their appointment by certain heads of departments. Over and over again—as I showed in this statement I sent to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and might have shown other authorities—has the Supreme Court of the United States held that "officers of the United States," speaking strictly and in the terms of the Constitution, are only those who are appointed; and consequently Congressmen are not embraced in these words when used in the Constitution. That has been held in cases where it became necessary to determine whether a man was an officer of the United States or not. Gentlemen, you will find these cases referred to in my letter and find other cases, if desired, in support of this proposition.

Now, there is another point in the way in which this law was drawn. The terms of the exceptions under this statute, the last revenue bill, are that "officers under the United States" are exempt. But Congress and its Members are under no one. They are in fact the Government of the United States and each House is responsible to no one except Members of its own body. No one is over Congress. It would seem as if in framing this law that especial pains was taken that no mistake might be created as to who would be embraced within its terms, but gentleman say there has been an impression created abroad that Congress was exempt, and therefore we want to correct this impression. Let me say if gentlemen think they are going to escape the Congress mucker in this matter that they are mistaken.

Those who were so careless or reckless or so malicious as to state that Members of Congress had exempted themselves from the income tax will be as malicious as they were before and invoke some other charge against them. Every Member knows that there was not a pin point on which to hang the claim that Congress had exempted its Members from the income tax. The only question that could possibly arise was whether the salaries of Members were exempt from the excess-profits tax, and I have never seen a lawyer who had read the bill and considered the authorities that thought they were. What we ought to do is to await the ruling of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue instead of passing this wholly unnecessary bill. [Applause.]

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL].

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, immediately after the passage of the war-revenue act on October 3, some question arose as to whether the compensation paid to Senators and Representatives in Congress was subject to the excess-profits tax. That controversy, however, was at once shifted to a general charge, made in the press of the country, that they had been exempt, as the gentleman from North Carolina has stated, not from the excess-profits tax but from the income tax. In other words, the real question was at once completely beclouded by the injection of entirely erroneous statements and sweeping charges with respect to the status of the salaries paid to Senators and Representatives in Congress as they might be affected, not by the excess-profits act, but by the income tax.

There was ground for enough difference of opinion as to the application of the excess-profits law to the compensation of Senators and Congressmen as to afford room for controversy. And while I thought then, and think now, that the Treasury Department would probably rule that the compensation paid by the Federal Government to Senators and Representatives is subject to section 209 of the excess-profits tax law, yet, in view of the widespread charges sent all over this country as to just what Congress intended in that connection, and in view of the perversion of what I know was the intention of this House in that respect, I have thought as one Member here that, notwithstanding the fact that the Treasury would probably rule that we are subject to the excess-profits tax as stated, we owed it to ourselves to say in the clearest terms what our intention was, in order to leave no doubt in the minds of any citizen of this country, and in order to give no person or newspaper the pretext to say falsely that Congress attempted to exempt itself.

Now, this resolution simply does what I know was in the minds of the House on October 3, when this war-revenue act was passed.

Mr. GLASS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. GLASS. Does not this resolution do vastly more than that? If it be true that we find it necessary or desirable to fence and foil demagogic criticism as applied to ourselves, why should we break all precedent and be weak enough to apply this tax to Federal officials, when the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee says that the tax does not apply in other nations to Government officials?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Well, Mr. Chairman, there is so much opportunity for discussion and so little time, like the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], I have had no disposition to enter into a legal argument as to any of the phases of this tax law. I simply wanted to emphasize the purpose for which this resolution is being considered; that it comes up here to express, or, rather, to reiterate in unmistakable language, the original intention of the membership here. And I think it does that. I think no one can be criticized for reiterating what was on his mind when the act was passed.

Mr. GLASS. But it does more than reiterate that. It goes further and makes this excess-profits tax apply to Federal officials when it never was intended it should apply to Federal officials, and when the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee explicitly states that similar taxes do not apply in any other government. Now, in order to relieve ourselves from criticism, why should we be weak enough to go forward and tax Federal officials?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the idea was in the minds of most of us, I think, that the Treasury would and should rule that the salaries of Congressmen would be taxed on the theory that they were not Federal officials under the Constitution and that they did not come under the law of exemption contained in paragraph 9 of section 201. That being true, it was only contemplated that all salaries, whether official or whether those derived from other than official sources, should be treated alike. The sole purpose of this resolution is to make clear and certain the liability of the salary of Members of Congress in excess of $6,000 to excess-profits tax of 8 per cent. No question as to whether salaries generally should have been subjected to this tax in the first place, as they were, does not now arise. This question can later be considered on its merits now that the status of all salaries has with certainty been made the same. I have heretofore indicated my attitude as to the taxation of salaries under excess-profits act.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. POWERS].

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I shall support this joint resolution, and I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask if the gentleman intends to extend his remarks on this subject or on the subject that he asked to extend them on some time ago?

Mr. POWERS. On this subject; and I would like also to extend them on prohibition.

Mr. FOSTER. I object to that. I object to anything on that resolution.

Mr. POWERS. I will confine it, then, to this resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the resolution under consideration. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BRAND].

Mr. BRAND. Mr. Chairman, I have only two minutes of time at my disposal, and therefore can only make a mere statement of my position upon this question. I would not occupy this time were I not apprehensive that my vote in favor of the pending proposition may be construed into an admission that the report sent out all over the United States after the close of the last session of Congress that Members of Congress had voted to exempt themselves from payment of the income tax was true.

According to the view I hold upon this question, the passage of this resolution is useless legislation, and if I had time I believe I could demonstrate it to the satisfaction of any critic. I make this statement in no sense as a criticism of the Ways and Means Committee, because it has likely adopted the correct course to terminate the life of a misrepresentation which has been circulated, and to some extent credited, in every congressional district of the United States. When I first heard of the report that Congress had voted to exempt themselves from the payment of the income tax and the excess-profits tax, though the report was confined to the former, I denied it, and I deny it now.

It is not true for two reasons, as I contend;

First. The portion of the revenue act upon which this report was based does not bear the construction, currently prevailing, and, in my judgment, no court of any respectable reputation would so hold. My contention is that a Congressman is not an officer and an employee of the United States, or an officer and an employee under the United States within the meaning of the law, and therefore the provisions of the revenue act referred to do not exempt him.

Second. As all know, a tax levied upon the people or a class of people operates on all alike. No man and no one class of people can be held exempt from its operation by implication. All are subject to the provisions of a bill designed to raise revenue unless expressly exempted. No class is exempt in a tax or revenue act unless express words are used clearly showing that the legislative body had that particular class in mind at the time the legislation was voted for. No such words can be found in the section under consideration.

I know, and every Member of this House, Republican and Democrat alike, knows as well as we know that our Redeemer liveth, that no vote was cast on the revenue bill by any Congressman with the intention or purpose in his mind to exempt himself from these taxes.

I know and you know that we did not intentionally or purposely vote to put burdens upon other people which we ourselves were not willing to help carry, and as there is not a line in the bill expressly exempting Congressmen from the payment of the income tax or the excess-profits tax, I insist under the law as it stands now that we are subject to the payment of these taxes. And according to the calculations of the tax gatherer, the act imposes an income tax of $245 on each unmarried Congressman and $205 on each married Congressman, and in addition to this an excess-profits tax of $120 on all Congressmen. Those interested should not be unmindful of the further fact that in addition to the payment of these taxes Congressmen will have to pay an income tax on the property respectively owned by them. These taxes will be paid by us ungrudgingly and as cheerfully, in my opinion, as by any other class of taxpayers in this Republic. [Applause.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH].

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, my friend from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] has just made a rather remarkable speech in support of this resolution. In arguing in favor of its passage he gave strong, logical, and, to my mind, unanswerable reasons why, as a matter of principle, public officials should not be included in an excess-profits tax. Now, let us be perfectly frank about this proposition. Let us not delude ourselves as to just what we are doing. The sum and substance of this resolution is the declaration by legislative enactment that $1,500, the amount by which our salaries exceed $6,000, is excess profit. No such glaring absurdity has ever been enacted in the statutes of this or any other country. How is it possible logically to say what portion of our salaries is an excess profit? Imagine this situation, and I suggest it because the gentleman is not present, for I do not desire to embarrass him. If the salary of the gentleman from New York [Mr FITZGERALD], who is about to leave us, was $100,000 a year, I think every man here will agree that, measured by his service to the country, not one cent of it could be properly regarded as an excess profit. [Applause.]

There are many Members of Congress whose value to the country is not to be measured in dollars. To call any portion of their salary an "excess profit" is, I think, a rank absurdity.

While under ordinary circumstances I would oppose this resolution on its merits to the last ditch, I realize that the Yuletide season is approaching. We are about to adjourn for the Christmas holidays, and I see many of my most cherished friends here with haggard faces, due to loss of sleep from brooding, I suppose, over the abuse they have received for having voted to impose an excess-profits tax on the incomes of doctors and lawyers and clergymen and other income earners and exempted themselves from its operation. Under the circumstances, then, I am prepared, as a finality, to accept this resolution with as good grace as I can.

Now, gentlemen, all this trouble—and I am still speaking frankly—was brought upon us by what I regard as the temporary aberration of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] and a few of his colleagues on the conference committee. I want to say this about my friend from North Carolina, that up to the time he reached the conference committee he behaved remarkably well; he comported himself with dignity, discretion, and wisdom. I will not say that this was due to the benignant influence of association with myself during the formative period of this bill [laughter], but the fact is that when deprived of that association during the conference he so far lost his former admirable poise as to lend his approval to this amorphous invention known as section 209.

I use the word "invention" advisedly. Section 209 is an invention. It is without parallel in the statutes of this country or of any other country under the sun. It is the product of the intelligence of a few gentlemen who succeeded in reconciling their consciences to advocacy of the proposition that human brains are to be regarded as invested capital, and that the product thereof is an excess profit. I assert that no such absurdity has ever before been written into the statutes of this or any other country. Every man here knows that this proposition to impose an excess-profits tax on incomes received where there is no invested capital at all was never even hinted at, much less discussed, on the floor of this House. In the Senate, by common consent, salaries and professional incomes were specifically eliminated from the bill. I think the question whether the conferees, there being no difference between the two Houses on this question, did not exceed their power to bring in this proposition might be distinctly open to debate. The gentleman from North Carolina, in his able argument against the imposition of an excess-profits tax on the salaries of public officials, in which I entirely agree with him, added that no other country had ever imposed such a tax. That is true; but furthermore it is true that no other country under the guise of an excess-profits tax has ever imposed a tax upon earned incomes where there is no invested capital.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I yield to the gentleman for a brief question.

Mr. GLASS. If we want to relieve ourselves from criticism, why not stop there? Why break all precedents and tax other Federal officials as well as ourselves?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Well, I will answer that simply on the theory that we are giving a Christmas present to our colleagues, about to go home for the holidays, I am willing to do it.

Mr. GLASS. Give them a Christmas present, but not burden Federal officials with it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman has included all trades and business covered in "professions"?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman wants to relieve his entire earnings from taxation?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I want to relieve the man who earns his income, whether large or small, by his personal effort and from his brain alone from an additional penalty tax over the man who without any effort on his own part derives his income from invested capital.

Now, just what does section 209 do? It puts a tax of 8 per cent on trade and business where there is no invested capital. Let me call attention to this fact particularly. Section 209 of itself would not include professional incomes and salaries were it not for the fact that in section 200 of the revenue law the terms "trade and business" are specifically defined to include professions and occupations. It is on account of that definition that professions and occupations come in under section 209.

Now, what is its practical effect? Let me give you an illustration, amplifying my answer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. MOORE) a moment ago. A inherits an estate of $200,000, invested at 5 per cent. He draws an income of $10,000 from that inheritance without any effort on his part at all. B is a man who has inherited nothing, but who, by his energy, his ability, and his brains, has built up a capacity to earn an income of $10,000. Which one ought to be taxed the higher, A or B? Is there any man in this House who will say that B, who actually earns all of his income, ought to be taxed more than A, who does not? And yet that is what section 209 does.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. I want to ask this question: The man who earns his income would pay $320 a year more than the man who does not?

Mr. LONGWORTH. A and B pay the same income tax. At that point A's liability to pay taxes ceases, but B, as the gentleman from Wisconsin says, would be compelled, under section 209 to pay an additional tax of 8 per cent on $4,000, the excess of his income, over $6,000.

Gentlemen, this doubly violates a principle that should be fundamental in every income-tax law. It is a fundamental principle of every income-tax law in every other country but this—that earned income pays a less rate of taxation than unearned income.

In Australia there is a difference made of 50 per cent in favor of earned as compared to unearned incomes. In Great Britain, I think, it is 25 per cent. Every country except this discriminates in favor of the man who earns his income by his personal exertion and by his brains, as compared with the man who sits down and cuts coupons or collects rents. Under our law not only does such a man not pay less taxes, but section 209 has imposed upon him an additional tax in the form of an excess-profit tax from which the coupon cutter or the rent collector is exempt.

There is a fundamental reason why a discrimination should be made in favor of the man who earns his income. The man who derives his income from invested capital does not thereby destroy or impair his capital. It remains the same, and his capacity to receive the income therefrom remains the same during his life; but the man who has to earn his income thereby diminishes his capital from day to day, to some extent, and the time eventually comes when his earning power vanishes. Our present law, then, is a double violation of that principle which I am sure most men in this House believes should be made one of the permanent fundamentals in our income-tax legislation. It is a pity that Congress has not so far recognized this principle, but it is an infinitely greater pity that we should have adopted a provision which not only makes no discrimination in favor of the man who earns his income, but places a penalty upon him.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I did not hear the first part of the gentleman's remarks. Is the gentleman's opinion in harmony with that of the chairman, that Members of Congress are liable for this 8 per cent tax on anything in excess of $6,000?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I am inclined to think that under the law as it is now we are liable for this tax, though the question is open to doubt.

Mr. ROSE. Under what pretext can the examples that the gentleman gives be called excess-war profits?

Mr. LONGWORTH. They can not under any circumstances. They can not in any case, I imagine, be a war profit, because in all probability the incomes of clergymen, doctors, attorneys, and presidents of universities, and others with no invested capital are, with few exceptions, less since the war started than they were before. That is an additional reason why these incomes should not be subjected to an excess-profits tax.

After all, gentlemen, it is the passage of section 209, as extended by the definition in section 200 of trade and business, that has brought all this criticism upon us. We are seeking to disarm criticism by committing two wrongs on the mistaken theory that two wrongs make a right. It is not the way to accomplish the result. The way to disarm any just or fair criticism against the revenue law is to eliminate the root of the evil—the penalty tax on earned incomes. I have myself a proposition to suggest by way of remedy in the form of a bill I have introduced, which I sincerely trust will meet with favorable consideration before we adjourn. It is a bill which simply amends the definition in section 200 of the terms "trade" and "business," providing that they shall not include professions and occupations where there is no invested capital. The result of the passage of such a bill would be simply this, that section 209 would still apply to corporations and business partnerships having no invested capital, but would not apply to professional men and to men who earn an income by their personal efforts and by their brains alone.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman propose to offer that as an amendment at the proper time?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I have some little doubt as to whether this precise amendment would be ruled to be in order. I shall attempt to accomplish the same thing in another way.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman does propose to offer an amendment, I want to be heard on that question; that is all.

Mr. KITCHIN. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN].

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I am very heartily in favor of this resolution. Congress has been maligned, first by some gentlemen of the demagogue type who desire to defeat some worthy Members of this body, and then again by the metropolitan press of this country, whose toes are trampled on a little by the war-revenue bill passed in the last session of Congress. Every sensible man who has investigated the question knows that without this excess-profits tax Members of the House and Senate were taxed $205 per annum on their salaries. The United States Senate put on that bill after it left the House an excess-profits tax on the salaries and incomes of professional men and all others above $6,000. No Senator nor Congressman intended to exempt themselves from the excess-profits tax on their salaries, nor did they believe that Congressmen or Senators were exempted. All of us know that we are to pay $325 taxes on our salaries yearly under the war-revenue bill passed at the last session of Congress. We are not exempted from any kind of tax under that bill. We are in war, and all people should be willing to pay taxes. Congressmen are not officers of the Government. Yet some of the metropolitan papers and weekly periodicals of the northeastern portion of this Republic have severely criticized Congress and impugned the motives of Members, as though a man elected from a great State as a Senator or from a congressional district of 200,000 souls as a Representative would make a scoundrel of himself for the paltry sum of $120 on his salary. The excess-profits tax on the $1,500 above $6,000 amounts to only $120; and yet some of these periodicals would impugn the motives of a man who has principle and honor enough to be elected by an honorable constituency. [Applause.] The trouble of it is these publications have been for all these years getting a subsidy in the shape of having their papers transported through the mails at 1 cent a pound when it cost 8 cents a pound to transport them. In other words, they have been getting out of the taxpayers of the United States 7 cents on every pound of the papers carried; and the Ways and Means Committee, out of $90,000,000 that these papers and periodicals have been grabbing annually out of the people through this mail subsidy, has compelled them to pay $26,000,000 a year; and the time is near at hand when they shall be made to pay all that it costs to transport their papers through the mails, the same as a man pays for the expense of transporting a first-class letter. There is no reason why the taxpayers of the United States should pay to transport these papers free, but such publications as these weeklies and magazines that I have mentioned have impugned the motives of Members of Congress because the American Congress saw proper to keep those papers, journals, and magazines and others like them from sending through the mails at a cent a pound the tons of pages of advertisements from which they get such enormous revenues. [Applause.] Some of the country papers have accepted as true what the selfish metropolitan press and magazines have published. They should investigate before wrongfully criticizing Congress. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, when I came back to Washington, having seen the notices in the papers that we exempted ourselves from the income tax, I at once took up the matter with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and attempted to show that there was no intention on the part of Members of Congress to make such exemption, and that it was impossible under the terms of the act. I would have been pleased indeed if the commissioner had seen fit to order, as he might have done, that there should be no exemption of Congressmen from section 209. That would have settled the entire matter.

Of course I shall support this joint resolution, but I regret exceedingly that it was introduced, because I think it was entirely unnecessary, for we were liable without the passage of this act. It gives the newspapers and those who delight to malign Congressmen an opportunity of saying that we are passing this resolution because of the severe criticism.

Title 2 was devoted exclusively to the ascertainment of whether or not there was more profit being made during the war period than there was during the years called the prewar period and placing a tax on such excess profits. It was exclusively devoted to that object and purpose, and the amount was ascertained by a comparison of the profits made in trade and business of the prewar period with the taxable year. The prewar period was fixed as the years 1911, 1912, and 1913. Profits were to be determined by the relationship of the income received with the capital invested. So, of course, it was utterly impossible that there should have been any intention or expectation of including in this any salary or proposition of that kind, because it would be absurd to say that a man receiving a fixed salary was receiving an excess profit. That was the condition of affairs when the exemption provision was inserted, and of course it was perfectly proper under those circumstances. The exemption was in the original act, and it was proper under the original act. Section 209 was inserted by the conferees, and it could not be said that it was the intention to apply the exemption provision which existed in the old title when this was entirely a new matter and had no relation to the old condition. So the facts absolve Congressmen from attempting to exempt themselves from the provision of section 209.

The exemption provision would not apply to Members of Congress unless the language of the statute was expressly or by clear implication intended to so apply. An officer of the United States is defined by the Constitution to be one appointed by the President or by a court of law or by the head of a department. The Supreme Court has said in numerous cases that none others are officers. Language has been used sometimes in statutes in a popular sense, but it never has been so interpreted, except under circumstances where it is shown that that was the intent of the legislators. Certainly no intent could be shown in this case. So we have a clear proposition of law upon which I do not think any lawyer studying the decisions in this case could for a moment believe that the Supreme Court of the United States or any other court would say that Members could claim exemption, because they were officers of the United States, from the operation of section 209. So that in fact we were not exempt, and so in fact this resolution is entirely unnecessary. [Applause.]

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DICKINSON].

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, it has been charged that in the passage of the war-revenue bill Members of Congress exempted their own salaries from the payment of all income taxes. The contrary is true. It has taxed them along and on the same terms with professional and business men.

Everybody familiar with the Federal income-tax laws knows that all persons, including Congressmen, are subject to the payment of income taxes of 2 per cent upon their net incomes above $2,000 exemption for heads of families and above $1,000 for single persons, and an additional 2 per cent upon their net incomes above $4,000 for heads of families and $3,000 for single persons, and a further 1 per cent on net incomes above $5,000 up to $7,500, and an increasing surtax for larger incomes. The war-revenue tax law very largely increases the income tax on the salaries of Congressmen and others with like incomes.

But the general public were not so familiar with the income-tax laws and were easily misled by unjust criticism. The occasion of the criticism was a provision in the war-tax revenue law, finally enacted on October 3 last under the title of war excess-profits tax, which provision was inserted in this revenue bill after it had passed the House and had gone to conference where the differences between the Senate and House were adjusted, and the conference report was adopted during the final days of the special session.

War excess profits are known as the profits during the war in excess of prewar profits. Naturally there could be no excess profits in salaries that are the same both before and during the war. But the conference committee concluded to levy in lieu of an excess-profits tax, as provided in section 201 of the war-revenue law, a tax equivalent to 8 per cent of the net income of the trade or business of every domestic partnership or citizen or resident of the United States in excess of $6,000 where such trade or business had no invested capital, except—

In the case of officers and employees under the United States or any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or any local subdivision thereof, the compensation or fees received by them as such officers or employees.

This exception to the conference committee amendment did not at the time attract the attention of Members of Congress generally, for it simply enlarged or extended the exemption heretofore existing in prior income-tax laws as to State officers, and so forth, so as to make officers and employees of the United States as to this law also exempt, and it did not seem unreasonable or of much moment, as few Federal or State officers have salaries above $6,000. But when it was afterwards suggested that Congressmen might be construed to be within this exception there was a general demand from Members of Congress that the language be so amended as to make it plain that Members of Congress were not exempt from this 8 per cent additional tax written in the law under the title of excess war-profits tax. It was well argued that Members of the House and Senate were not officers and employees of the United States in contemplation of the Constitution and could not be held to be within the exception, as they were not officers and employees of the United States, and that Members of Congress were liable to this additional tax, not being expressly named in the exception.

Nowhere in the revenue act are Members of Congress mentioned as being exempt from the payment of any income tax or excess war-profits tax. However, to put the matter beyond any controversy, and responding to the unanimous desire of all Members to make it clear that Senators and Congressmen are liable to this additional tax, and thereby end all controversy, a joint resolution was reported by the Ways and Means Committee, which, when adopted in the House, read as follows:

Joint resolution amending the act entitled "An act to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1917, so as to subject to the war-excess-profits tax the compensation of officers and employees under the United States, including Members of Congress.

Resolved, etc., That subdivision (a) of section 201 of the act entitled "An act to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1917, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(a) In the case of officers and employees under any State, or local subdivision thereof, the compensation or fees received by them as such officers or employees."

SEC. 2. That section 209 of such act of October 3, 1917, is hereby amended by adding a paragraph to read as follows:

"The income of officers and employees under the United States, including Members of Congress, received as compensation or fees by them as such officers, employees, or Members, shall be taxable under this section for the calendar year 1917 and each year thereafter; but a nonresident alien officer or employee of the United States shall be entitled to the same deduction as a resident of the United States."

This joint resolution, unanimously supported in the House, specifically mentions the incomes of Members of Congress as subject to this additional 8 per cent tax, together with the incomes of officers and employees of the United States, received as compensation or fees by them as such officers, employees, or Members, thereby ending all further controversy as to the meaning of the law and the intention of Congress with reference thereto.

Under existing Federal laws Congressmen, as well as others, if married men or heads of families, will pay 2 per cent normal tax on their net incomes exceeding $2,000 up to $4,000, and 4 per cent on their net incomes above $4,000, and a further 1 per cent or surtax above $5,000, and in addition thereto 8 per cent above $6,000.

The incomes of State officers are exempt from payment of all Federal income taxes by reason of a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States.

The unanimous support given this amendment should end all further criticism from any source. Many Members of Congress have sons in the Army—some have already gone and others shortly will go to the battle fields of France, to do service for their country. All Members have far more care for the welfare of these soldier boys than for the income tax cheerfully levied upon their own salaries.

I insert herein a table showing how the income tax figures out for both married and single men. Here is what a married man will have to pay under the income-tax section of the new revenue act. The only alteration necessary in applying the figures to the income of a single man is to make the exemption $1,000 instead of $2,000, as in case of a married man.

Married man having income of—	Amount of normal tax.	Amount of war normal tax.	Surtax.	Total individual income tax.

$4,000,000	79,920	79,960	2,310,300	2,470,180

Heads of families are allowed an additional deduction from income of $200 for each dependent child.

In the foregoing on all earned incomes above $6,000 an additional tax of 8 per cent should be added.

You will note from this table that the normal income tax heretofore levied on the salaries of Congressmen was $70; that the new revenue act imposed an additional war normal tax of $110 and a surtax of $25, making a total of $205, to which the additional tax of 8 per cent, or $120, will be added, making in all $325 to be paid by Congressmen and others having similar net incomes.

I believe in the income-tax law and the levy of a reasonable per cent on all incomes, above a fair exemption, for the support of the Federal Government—a larger per cent in war times than in times of peace—and an increasing per cent upon the larger incomes.

If our boys enter the service of their country, risking life and health, then those who earn while others fight should pay without complaint and cheerfully pay the reasonable and fair tax contribution necessary to provide our soldiers with food, clothing, munitions of war, and all the necessities required by this dangerous and patriotic service.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL].

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill to amend the revenue law passed at the last session of this Congress, but it is not for the purpose of correcting that law but is simply for the purpose of making absolutely certain that which everyone in this House thought was certain when the act was passed. I have not yet found a man who was present when the revenue bill was passed who believes that there was any intention to or that it did, in fact, exempt Members of Congress from the payment of their taxes under the excess-profits provision the same as salaries of all other citizens of the United States. But there is no doubt that among the people the belief does exist that we did exempt our salaries and I with many other Members of Congress have received letters from friends saying that Congress had taxed everything in sight except themselves and their own salaries, which were exempted.

We did not do anything of the kind, and every man here at the time understood that we did not. The good lawyers in this House and outside of it say that our salaries are subject to the tax, but I am glad to-day to be able to vote for a resolution not to correct but to make absolutely certain that which we thought was certain at the time we voted for and passed the revenue bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, my distinguished friend from Ohio, Mr. LONGWORTH, says that section 209 is the root of all this trouble. That section taxes lawyers, doctors, professional men, and others, including corporations, without invested capital who make profits in excess of the specified deduction.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. Did the gentleman state the matter correctly?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; he did not state it correctly, and I am going to show you that he did not.

Mr. SNYDER. I mean the gentleman from North Carolina now speaking. Does the gentleman not mean that these men were penalized and not taxed?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; they are justly taxed and not penalized as long as other individuals are taxed. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] said that nobody knew that this proposition was in the bill until after it was passed.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I never said that I did not know it. I said that not 10 Members of the House knew it.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman knew it when it was passed.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Oh, yes; I did.

Mr. KITCHIN. That is the point that I am making. The gentleman knew it was in there when he voted for it. I discussed that very section, 209, upon the floor of the House when I presented the conference report. I discussed it at length, and the gentleman was sitting in front of me as I discussed it. I showed why it was put in there and why it ought to be put in there, and when the time comes and any man wants to strike it out, I shall try my best to show why it ought to remain there. The gentleman knew it was in there, and yet he never raised his voice against it. The time to have denounced section 209 was when it was before the House for approval or rejection. If he wanted to protest against it, that was the time to protest. If it is wrong now, it was wrong then, and yet he never made any protest, knowing it was in there and knowing that we and he were to vote on it. He never made any protest until after he went home and no doubt talked to some of the big Cincinnati lawyers, and he then comes back here and is convinced that it is a big outrage; that it penalizes the lawyers and the doctors.

Mr. LONGWORTH. And the clergymen.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; and the preachers.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I have not the time now.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman is aware that there is a rule that a conference report must be voted either up or down.

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, we could have stayed here and voted it down if it was such an outrage as the gentleman makes out this morning. If I were in the gentleman's place I would have voted against it and told the conferees to go back and correct the outrage, because if we had committed an outrage the conferees would have been glad to correct it. Or I certainly would have protested against it and warned the House of its injustice in the speech which the gentleman made on the report; but not a word of protest or warning did he make.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman at the time was impressed with the necessity for raising revenue.

Mr. KITCHIN. There is no fairer or more equitable or righteous provision in all the revenue act than section 209. When the Senate included individuals in the excess-profits tax we protested against it. The House conferees and the gentleman from Ohio and myself agreed on that, and the Ways and Means Committee agreed on it, and the House was of the opinion that individuals ought not to be put in the excess-profits tax provision, but when the Senate insisted upon it and refused to yield, then we said that it was not right to put in the individual farmer, and the merchant, and the lumberman, and banker, and butcher, and blacksmith, and every other individual and leave exempted from the tax lawyers and the doctors and other professional men.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the gentleman think, then, that a man having an income from invested capital should be taxed less than a man who earns his income?

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman has got that error from the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH].

Mr. LONGWORTH. If it is an error.

Mr. KITCHIN. I want to tell you that the man who has his money, say, $100,000, invested in stocks pays on the average three times more than the lawyer that you are trying to protect. He pays the tax before his income gets to him. The corporation takes it out and pays it for him.

Mr. LENROOT. Suppose he has a hundred thousand dollars invested in real-estate mortgages?

Mr. KITCHIN. And gets his income on that?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. KITCHIN. Let us see; let us appeal to the gentleman's sense of fairness. If I have $100,000 of my money loaned out on mortgages at 6 per cent interest—and in my State it is 6 per cent—should I not be allowed the same deduction on the amount, $100,000, so invested as the gentleman or other person who puts that amount in an active business? We both have the same amount invested. But the amount of my small profits—my income—from my investment is limited by interest law, while the amount of profits from the gentleman's investment is unlimited; it may reach 20, 25, or 50 per cent or more. Should he call his income earned and therefore demand a larger deduction or exemption and call my income unearned and therefore demand a smaller deduction or exemption for me? Under the law capital invested, it matters not how, has the same deduction or exemption.

Mr. LENROOT. But the gentleman is not discussing the question——

Mr. KITCHIN. I am discussing exactly the question the gentleman asked about investment in mortgages. Of course, when I lend $100,000 at 6 per cent there can not be any excess profits, because I would be entitled to a deduction of 8 per cent upon my capital of $100,000 invested even if you make the excess-profits tax apply to such a case.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That subdivision (a) of section 201 of the act entitled "An act to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1917, is hereby amended to read as follows:

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of occupying the floor for a moment or two only.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, is that motion in order at the present time? The paragraph has not been read.

Mr. LANGLEY. The first paragraph has been read, and I think I am in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The first paragraph has been read.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I make the point of order that the Clerk has not completed the reading of the paragraph, Mr. Chairman. I was waiting to be recognized.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, am I recognized? I only made this pro forma motion to get a chance to say a few words. The time for general debate was so limited that I did not feel that I ought to ask for any part of it. I only wish to say this: I am glad this question has been so fully and clearly explained as to leave no doubt that all this criticism of Congress was unjust and wholly unwarranted. I do not deny that it caused me no little embarrassment, as I——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Has the Chairman ruled on the point?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has raised a point of order which the Chair thinks is well taken.

Mr. LANGLEY. I ask unanimous consent, then, for one minute more in order that I may finish now what I had said in part when the gentleman from Pennsylvania interrupted me.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chairman will recognize the gentleman from Kentucky when the first paragraph is really read.

Mr. LANGLEY. All right, then.

The Clerk read as follows:

(a) In the case of officers and employees under any State, or local subdivision thereof, the compensation or fees received by them as such officers or employees;

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I now move to strike out the last word.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Being a member of the committee, I ask for recognition at this point. The recognition of the gentleman from Kentucky was made by a fluke. I could have arisen at the same time, but it was the wrong time to rise.

Mr. LANGLEY. Oh, no, Mr. Chairman, it was not a fluke, or anything of that kind. I thought the first paragraph had been completed, and so did the Chair at first, evidently. But I am perfectly willing to yield to a member of the committee. I do not desire to seek to take the floor from him. I understand the rule. I did not know the gentleman from Pennsylvania wanted the floor when I addressed the Chair and made the motion I did.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I concede the gentleman from Kentucky ought to be heard, and I hope he will be. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] has made a 15-minute speech, which seems to be at variance with those made by other members of the Committee on Ways and Means, and I desire to point out one or two points of his speech that I think are wholly misleading. In the first place there is an impression upon the part of Members on this floor that this amendment proposes to tax poor lawyers, poor doctors, poor preachers, the preachers having been brought in as a sort of last resort to fortify the argument. This paragraph will not apply to any poor doctor, poor lawyer, or poor preacher, who earns less than $6,000 a year. I am not responsible for this bill or for any provision in it; but, as a Republican, desiring to help the President prosecute this war and raise the money to pay for it, I voted for what I supposed to be as equitable a system of taxation as the other side had to present. I was not for exempting certain classes of individuals and holding certain other classes of individuals liable to tax. Three kinds of taxes are under discussion—the income tax, which we all pay; the supertax, which we all pay if we have income enough; and the new system or scheme of taxation, which seems to have come from England or some other country, where we get many of our ideas, which is called the war excess-profits tax. If a man makes enough after paying the income tax, after paying the supertax, then for war excess-profits tax we tax him to the extent of 8 per cent in the case of an individual without invested capital and in certain other per cents, much higher, in the case of an organization or concern that has invested capital. The law simply endeavored to reach that skillful, clever sort of brains which generally knows how to make tax returns, and which is not the poor preacher, or the poor lawyer, or the poor doctor. It does include that devilish smart fellow who comes down here and suggests amendments to a conference committee or to the Ways and Means Committee, and who goes home and charges his corporation $100,000 for that service. His is the kind of brains that might be affected.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No; not in five minutes, thank you. I do not care whether it is Elihu Root, who can afford to charge a big fee, or some lawyer who can only charge $5,000, I do not think that because he has brains we should put the entire war tax bill of the country upon the industries and corporations and individuals and allow the professional man to go scot free. I do not mince words about this at all. If you are going to play fair, play fair.

My friend from Ohio has an amendment to this bill, which he proposes to introduce if he can have it held in order, which provides "the term trade and business shall not include professions and occupations having no invested capital or not more than a nominal capital." I would change that and say the term "trade and business" shall include professions and occupations having no invested capital or not more than a nominal capital. It would not touch the poor man or anybody else who makes less than $6,000. Some lawyers are capable of absorbing the business of 20 lawyers, some doctors absorb the business of 20 other doctors, some engineers absorb the business of 20 other engineers. If others have to pay they should not escape taxation because they have brains enough to come under the proposed Longworth amendment.

Contrast such an individual earner with a corporation or a poor business concern. The business pays an income tax, a corporation tax, a surplus tax, a munitions tax in certain cases, and an excess-profits tax—five different kinds, in some instances—and when it is all paid the stockholders, the poor widows and orphans, if you please, who have stock in the concern, get nothing. But the clever fellow who gets a salary of $20,000 before the taxes are paid, who may leave nothing for the stockholders, would escape under this amendment. I am not for letting that fellow do it in these war times, and that is the reason I do not propose to let the Longworth amendment go into this bill if it can be prevented. [Applause.]

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE]. I do not think the word "employees" should be stricken out. It is a very important word, and I do not think we ought to mutilate the paragraph in that manner. I am in favor of this joint resolution. If it can be improved in any way by amendment I am for that, but the general purpose of it meets my hearty approval.

Mr. Chairman, I had already said, before the Chair decided that I was not in order, nearly all that I intended to say. I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania feels too much personal responsibility in this matter and takes the situation too seriously. He referred a while ago to the "pusillanimous, patriotic pikers" who had caused all this trouble and opposed any concessions to them. I do not desire to make any concession to them; but one reason why I am for this resolution is that I wish to satisfy the many people in this country who are honestly mistaken about it and who have been misled by these so-called "pikers" into believing that we intended to do something that we did not intend to do. I wish them to know that this great body did not then intend to exempt themselves from any tax, and I want to help pass this resolution to show them that such is not now our purpose, and that we are willing and anxious to bear our full share of the burden. [Applause.]

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I want to say of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], whom we all admire, that I think this is the first time since I have been a Member of the House that he has made a real demagogic speech. And that was exactly what his speech was.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. I can not yield. The gentleman did not yield. So far as the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] is concerned, the Democratic leader, from a partisan standpoint, I am glad he takes the position he does, but I have been very much surprised that that side of the aisle defends a proposition that taxes men who earn their income at a higher rate than men who sit down and get an income from unearned capital. I asked the gentleman a question, but he begged it. I asked him whether he would defend taxing a man at the higher rate who earned an income as against a man who had his capital invested in mortgages? He did not answer. He referred to the man who had $100,000 invested in a cotton factory. Let me take his own illustration. A man earns an income of $7,000 through his own efforts. He will pay an excess-profits tax of $80. A man has $100,000 invested in a cotton factory, out of which he receives an income of 13 per cent, or $13,000. How much of excess-profit taxes will he pay? He will not pay one penny. Is that the position that the Democratic side of this House will take, namely, that a man who has invested money shall not pay a tax as high as a man who earns his income?

Another illustration: Take $100,000 invested in 7 per cent farm mortgages. Another man has an earned income of $7,000. What about the excess-profits tax of these two men? The man who is president of a university, as my colleague suggests, earning a salary of $7,000 a year, will pay an excess-profits tax of $80. The man who has $100,000 invested in real estate mortgages will not pay one penny of excess-profits tax. If you gentlemen on the other side of the aisle want to defend that kind of a proposition, well and good. We will take it to the people of the country in the next election. [Applause.]

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. LEHLBACH. This title of the revenue law purports to tax the excess profits due to the existence of the war, not excess profits that are levied by reason of the revenue necessitated by the war, but excess profits which come by reason of the existence of war. That is perfectly plain, because the title determines what a prewar period is and directs that, within limitations, profits earned in the prewar period should be deducted from profits now earned, and the difference—excess profit due to the existence of the war—be subject to the tax provided in the title.

Now, I would like to know what profession or occupation, having no invested capital now by reason of the existence of the war, earns an excess income. It has been said that an individual who comes under this title and pays tax by reason of the conduct of a business ought not to be taxed, and the professional man exempt from a similar tax. If an individual runs a steel business, and by reason of the war enjoys excess profits, he is to a certain extent a profiteer and he ought to pay the tax, and it is no injustice to him that a man who earns a normal income that he has always earned in the prewar period is not saddled with an extra income tax. Now, this act, this particular section, as it has been pointed out, taxes earned incomes in excess of $6,000 and exempts unearned incomes. This may be an example of taxing until it hurts, and it does hurt, not because of the money that is to be paid out, but because of the inherent injustice contained in the provision.

Another anomalous provision is that where several professional men associate themselves in a partnership they shall be taxed largely in excess of a man who is conducting a professional business in his own name. If one man associates himself with two other lawyers and does a business of $12,000 a year and pays to each of his associates $4,000 a year in salaries, retaining $4,000 as his profit in the business, not one of the three pays any of this excess-profits tax. But if there is a partnership of these same three, or lawyers similarly situated, and they earn in partnership $12,000 a year, then each pays a tax on $2,000 of his share of $4,000, or $160. These three men pay each $160 because they are honestly in partnership, and the other three do not pay a cent, because two purport to be employees of the other one.

It is an anomalous provision. The section itself is an injustice, and the inclusion of partnerships in professions makes it ridiculous.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr PLATT. I was going to suggest to the gentleman that if three men associate themselves together and get $12,000, their individual incomes on the division of this $12,000 would be very much less. Of course, they all pay that.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes; but the two employees get $4,000 each, and the other man gets $4,000, and the incomes would be the same. Of course, the partnership would have to pay.

Mr. PLATT. Their individual taxes would be less.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this resolution and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

Here is the situation: We have the rural-credit bond proposition to come up after this. In the Senate there is a motion lodged to rescind the resolution to recess, and they do not know how long it is going to take to discuss that. They do not know whether they are going to rescind it or not if it comes to a vote. We ought to go on and get through with this bill. Every man knows exactly how he is going to vote on it. I would like more time myself to answer the ingenious argument of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] and to show the strained and exceptional nature of the case he gave, and the reason why he gave it. But we have not the time, and I am not going to take the time now. We ought to finish this, so that we can adjourn.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I suggest that the gentleman answer the argument so far as the paragraph read goes. I have an amendment.

Mr. KITCHIN. You can offer your amendment in the 15 minutes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have five minutes to offer an amendment.

Mr. DILLON. I want to offer an amendment.

Mr. GILLETT. I did not quite understand the gentleman's purpose. Does the gentleman mean that he wants to adjourn before the Senate resolution gets over here?

Mr. KITCHIN. If they decide to rescind it, yes.

Mr. GILLETT. Why don't you adjourn now? There would be no objection to that.

Mr. KITCHIN. According to the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], I think "the boys" ought to be be given their "Christmas present," and we should vote on this proposition before we go home.

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman says there is another proposition after this. It seems to me we should be allowed to discuss important amendments. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] has an important amendment that he wishes to discuss.

Mr. AUSTIN. Yesterday, when the gentleman asked unanimous consent to have an hour's debate, I withdrew my objection on the assurance that I would have five minutes of that hour. I found in the general debate that I did not receive my five minutes. I want to be included now in any arrangement that is made here providing for 15 minutes.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yesterday I asked unanimous consent to consider this resolution this morning, in order to accommodate gentlemen on that side. I was going to be recognized by the Speaker to suspend the rules and pass this resolution last evening, and then we would have had only 20 minutes to a side, without the opportunity for amendment. We have now had an hour and forty minutes' debate.

Mr. AUSTIN. It has all been practically taken up by members of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. KITCHIN. Does not the gentleman think we could finish the debate and discuss the amendments in 20 minutes? Let us see. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] wants three minutes.

Mr. AUSTIN. I was promised five minutes yesterday when I withdrew my objection to unanimous consent for limited discussion.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I shall object to unanimous consent to limit debate until the consideration of the resolution is completed.

Mr. DILLON. I want four or five minutes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I want five minutes.

Mr. KINKAID. I would like to have five minutes.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I see an hour's debate right here. Gentlemen, I think we ought to close this debate.

Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this resolution and all amendments thereto be closed in 15 minutes, with the privilege of gentlemen offering amendments during that time and sending them to the desk.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that the motion is not in order until the reading of the resolution has been completed. I do not want any time, but I desire to offer an amendment at the proper place, at the conclusion of the resolution. I shall therefore object to the limiting of time until the resolution has been read.

Mr. KITCHIN. The resolution has been read.

Mr. LONGWORTH. No; only the first paragraph. I shall not object after that is done.

Mr. AUSTIN. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that you can not limit the debate in committee.

Mr. KITCHIN. I did not catch the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH].

Mr. LONGWORTH. This resolution has not yet been read. We are reading it now for amendment.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will make the motion after it is read, then.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Then I will offer the amendment.

Mr. KITCHIN. Let the Clerk read the next paragraph. I ask unanimous consent that all debate be considered closed on section 1 and all amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. At this time?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on section 1 of this resolution be considered closed at this time. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The clerk will read the next section.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That section 209 of such act of October 3, 1917, is hereby amended by adding a paragraph to read as follows:

"The income of officers and employees under the United States, including Members of Congress (but not including the present President of the United States during the term for which he has been elected, nor the judges of the Supreme and inferior courts of the United States in office at the time of the passage of this amendment), received as compensation or fees by them as such officers, employees, or Members, shall be taxable under this section for the calendar year 1917 and each year thereafter; but a nonresident alien officer or employee of the United States shall be entitled to the same deduction as a resident of the United States."

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I want to give the Speaker a chance to lay before the House an enrolled bill which he wishes to sign, and therefore I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WATSON of Virginia, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration House joint resolution 195, amending the act entitled "An act to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1917, so as to subject to the war excess-profits tax the compensation of officers and employees under the United States, including Members of Congress, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled joint resolution of the following title:

S. J. Res. 17. Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

RESIGNATION FROM A COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., December 18, 1917.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I hereby resign as a member of the Commission on Reconstruction of the Hall of the House of Representatives.

Respectfully, yours, JOHN J. FITZGERALD.

WAR EXCESS-PROFITS TAX.

On motion of Mr. KITCHIN, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of H. J. Res. 195, with Mr. WATSON of Virginia in the chair.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 15, after the word "States," insert:

"Provided, however, That incomes derived from professions or occupations having no invested capital or only a nominal capital shall not be taxable under this section."

Mr. KITCHIN. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto be closed in 20 minutes, with the privilege to gentlemen to send up amendments at any time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that debate upon this section and all amendments thereto shall close in 20 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Can I have three minutes?

Mr. DILLON. I should like four minutes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I want five minutes.

Mr. AUSTIN. It was agreed yesterday that I should have some time on this.

Mr. GILLETT. There are five gentlemen on this side who want time.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will make it 25 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The request is that debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 25 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, let me first call the attention of Members to this fact, that the primary object for which this joint resolution is introduced will be carried out if this amendment is adopted, because the salaries of Members of Congress will be included under the provisions of section 209, and will be taxed. Thus, the only persons who will be relieved from the provisions of section 209 will be men who derive their incomes from professions or occupations in which there is no invested capital or only a nominal capital. As I pointed out a few moments ago, such incomes as these are not taxed as excess profits in any country in the world. Furthermore, such incomes as these in every other country in the world are taxed less than incomes derived from invested capital. By adopting this amendment you will have removed what I regard as a gross injustice, in spite of what has been said in praise of it by two gentlemen who were on the conference committee—the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE]—who are the only ones so far to attempt to defend the principle of this proposition. They are entitled to all the pride they can take in their handiwork; no one else does. For myself, I regard section 209 as the one absolutely indefensible proposition in the revenue law.

It is no answer for the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] to say that I had the opportunity to attack this section when the conference report was before the House. He knows, and we all know, that a conference report is unamendable. He knows, and we all know, that the revenue to be raised by that bill was essential to carrying on the war, and even though there were some provisions in the bill of which I entirely disapproved, this particularly, for one, I was not willing to have the bill sent back to conference and the whole subject opened wide again. It is no answer to my statement that this proposition is absurd and inexcusable to criticize me for not voting against the conference report.

If you adopt this amendment, gentlemen, you will eliminate from the bill the proposition which has caused all this criticism of which you complain, the proposition that you have taxed salaried men without invested capital and exempted yourselves from the operation of that tax. That is what the criticism was about. Nobody, least of all the gentleman from North Carolina, has ever advocated, on its merits, the proposition that the salaries of public officials should be taxed as excess profits. But a condition, not a theory, seems to confront us, and by adopting this amendment you will salve your consciences, so far as being included and paying this $120 tax is concerned. At the same time you will have removed the most vicious principle in the revenue law, a principle not recognized in any other country under the sun, and never recognized in this country before, which puts an extra tax on the man who earns his income by his ability and his brains, as compared with the man of wealth, inherited or acquired, who draws his income from invested capital, with no effort on his own part. [Applause.]

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, is there a real necessity for this joint resolution? The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, has stated that the original proposition included Members of Congress. The chairman of the Finance Committee of the Senate, Mr. SIMMONS, stated yesterday in the Senate that it included Members of Congress, and that that was also the opinion of the General Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Mr. Roper.

Every member of the Ways and Means Committee who knew all about the matter when it was before the conference committee has stated that it did not mean to exempt Members of Congress. With all these accumulated statements as to the meaning and intention of the provision, why should we pass a resolution to answer a misstatement, a campaign falsehood, started somewhere in the United States to injure the Members of the Senate or House? As we are innocent of the charge and the testimony and record vindicates us, why is it necessary to take up our valuable time to pass this resolution?

What did the Congressman pay in income taxes prior to the enactment of the new revenue law? Seventy dollars a year for a married Member drawing $7,500. Under the new revenue law he is made to pay $325 a year, or $27 a month. If the so-called excess-profits tax is not included it would be $255 a year, or $21.25 a month. The pending resolution does exempt the President of the United States, with a salary of $75,000; it exempts the Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court, with a salary of $15,000. It exempts the Associate Justices, with salaries of $14,500 each, and every circuit court judge with a salary of $7,000. Why should we exempt one class of Federal officials and not another? If one should pay all should pay whose salaries fall within the provisions of the income tax and excess-profits tax. The Supreme Court has never in any decision said that Congress could not tax the President of the United States or the members of the judiciary.

The Constitution of the United States says you can not lower the salary of the President during his term of office or increase it. But this is not a reduction of his salary, it is to put him on an equal footing with every other officeholder in the country. It is a reflection, it is an injustice which, I imagine, would be resented by the President of the United States and the members of the Supreme Court and the judges of the circuit courts to pass any law or resolution which would not permit them to do their share and duty in financially aiding the Government to win this great war. Pass such a resolution in time of war, the most expensive war in the history of the world—tax everybody and every officeholder except these. Exempt the highest paid officer in the United States, and along with him the next highest, holding life positions. You can not justify such action before the American people.

I want the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] to answer the speeches of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH]. Men who have fortunes which they inherited, who are not earning by effort, labor, or ability the income from money invested and left them by their rich ancestors, are not taxed like you propose to tax the professional man, the lawyer, the physician, the minister, the doctor, or the officer of a corporation. Why should we as impartial lawmakers discriminate in this manner? It is unfair; it is unjust, and not to the credit of the American Congress to retain such a law. [Applause.]

Now, one thing more. The most unpopular section in the revenue law to-day is section 209. We will be held to a strict accountability when we face the electors on this section. It is unfair; it distinctly discriminates against earned incomes and penalizes industry in favor of inherited coupon-clipping incomes. In other words, earned incomes are doubly taxed.

This law or section says if you earn your money yourself you are going to be penalized in favor of the nonearning parasitical inheritor of accumulated and inherited wealth. No political party can afford to favor it, and the Members of this House can not stand for it before a thinking, intelligent people. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I hope that amendment will be voted down.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LONGWORTH) there were 56 ayes and 98 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 2, after the word "hereby," strike out all of the remainder of the section and insert in lieu thereof the word "repealed."

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, if the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] had been adopted it would have cured a great deal of the evil that is going to be wrought by this section. That amendment having been voted down, it occurs to me that this section should be repealed. It is absolutely unworkable except to do very great injury to those to whom it applies. No one wants to avoid their just proportion of taxation, but everyone objects to unjust discrimination in taxation.

I call the attention of the committee to one concrete example that shows how absolutely unfair and unjust this section is. It applies to any partnership that has only a nominal capital invested. I think you will admit that it would apply to attorneys. Suppose, for example, you have four attorneys engaged in the practice of law. Their net income is $15,000 at the end of the year. From that they are entitled to a deduction of $6,000, leaving a balance of $9,000, upon which this tax will apply. The tax is $720, and that divided by 4, the amount that each individual of the partnership would pay, is $180.

Now, take another partnership engaged in the practice of law, with two in the firm, earning $7,500—just half of what the four earned. You take $6,000 from it and it leaves a balance of $1,500. Eight per cent of that is $120. Divided by 2, what each individual would pay, and it is $60. The share is $60, as compared with $180 where the partnership consists of four. This is but one example of a very great number of examples that might be cited showing the absolute unfairness of this section of the bill.

This section can be repealed, and if there should be anything omitted by its repeal there is ample time in which to remedy it. But if you will stop for a few minutes and consider how many, many concerns like the one I have cited to you throughout the United States there are where such great injustice will apply I believe that fair-minded men desiring to do justice to your fellows whom you are representing here, you will repeal this section of the law in order that that injustice may not be done them.

We can not go home now and say that we have not had time for reflection and that these inequities have not been pointed out to us. Every one of us, in some way or other, has had brought to our individual attention the absolute unfairness and the impractical working of this section 209, and it affects every section of this country, from one end to the other. It does not apply only to the lawyers, but to other professions and businesses where the investment is only nominal. Therefore I say to you that it is the bounden duty of this Congress to remedy this evil while it has a chance, before it becomes effective in the enforcement of the law by revenue collectors all over the country. I hope this matter will be given the consideration to which it is entitled, and I believe the greatest service that we can render before adjourning here and going back to our people is to be able to say to them that, having discovered an evil, we have remedied it at the first available opportunity.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to occupy the four minutes that I have remaining right now. I would like for every man to pay just a little attention to the facts. Section 209, levying an 8 per cent tax, does apply to lawyers, doctors, and professional men, making them subject to the tax, as other provisions of the act make the farmers, the merchants, the blacksmiths, the butchers, the bankers, the miners, the lumbermen, and all other individuals in business subject to a tax, they paying from 20 to 60 per cent upon their profits or income in excess of their deduction, while, under section 209, lawyers and doctors and professional men and others without invested capital pay only 8 per cent in excess of their deductions. If the gentleman's amendment to repeal section 209 prevails, then every farmer, merchant, banker, miner, lumberman, blacksmith, butcher, and every other individual in business in the United States would have to pay on his profits or income in excess of his deduction the war-profits tax of from 20 per cent to 60 per cent—and it will average 25 per cent—while the lawyer, doctor, or other professional man or salaried business man would pay no excess-profits tax on his profits or income. I dare any man in this House to go back to his people, whether to the city or the country, and tell them that in voting to repeal section 209 while other provisions of the bill remain unrepealed he voted to make the man who must work from sunrise to sunset, and sometimes his wife and children working with him, whether a merchant, a butcher, a blacksmith, a banker, a miner, or a farmer, pay taxes as high as from 20 per cent to 60 per cent of his income or profits over his deduction to help carry on the war, and at the same time voted to make the lawyer or the doctor or high-salaried business man, who works mostly to suit himself, who makes his money by the devotion only of his time and brains, with no capital invested, pay not a cent of excess-profits tax on his profits or income to help our country in its war struggle. If you vote to repeal section 209, that is exactly what you are doing; and if you tell your people the truth, you will have to tell them that.

They say that a man ought not to pay an excess-profits tax who makes a profit or income in excess of $6,000 from his brains and labor; that the lawyer makes it only by his brain and labor, and therefore he ought not to pay an excess-profits tax. Does not the farmer or merchant or blacksmith or any other business individual make his income not only by devoting his brains, his time, and his labor, but by risking his capital in his business? The farmer, the merchant, the banker, the lumberman, mechanic, or like individual not only puts into his business to make his income exactly what the lawyer and the doctor does—his brain and his labor—but his money, his capital. He takes financial risk; he makes financial sacrifices. He builds up industry. He gives employment to labor. He produces for public use. The lawyer takes no financial risks, makes no financial sacrifices. He builds up no industry. He employs no labor. He produces by his profession nothing for public use. And yet the advocates of the repeal of section 209 insist that the lawyer, doctor, and other professional and salaried men go scot free of the tax, while piling this heavy excess-profits tax burden on the backs of every other class of individuals. Gentlemen, you can not face your people, you can not face an honest man, you can not face your conscience around your hearthstone with such a vote.

What else does section 209 do? It not only applies to lawyers, doctors, professional men—which you gentlemen seem to be so anxious to protect and favor—but it was written into the act to meet another situation. Repeal section 209 and every corporation hereafter organized will escape the payment of the excess-profits tax. And why? This section applies to partnerships and corporations "without invested capital," according to the definition of the act. What will the corporations organized hereafter do if section 209 is repealed and nothing substituted for it?

The members will organize them without invested capital within the meaning of the act. They will issue no or only a nominal amount of stock and will do business on borrowed capital—borrowed from the members of the corporation. They will then escape the excess-profits tax. With section 209 repealed, if I wanted to organize, say, a $4,000,000 corporation to escape this tax, and the three gentlemen in front here were associated with me, we would issue no stock, or only a nominal amount, and then each of us would lend our $1,000,000 to the corporation and it would do business on the borrowed capital without "capital invested." The corporation would escape all excess-profits taxes, though it might make a million a year. But section 209, which some of you wish to repeal, would catch that corporation and does catch hundreds of corporations already organized without "invested capital" under the definition of the act. But for this section many corporations now so organized would escape the payment yearly of millions of dollars of excess-profits taxes.

One thing more. The Secretary of the Treasury appointed nine, I believe, of the wisest men from all walks of business life as an advisory committee to study this new revenue act and to make such suggestions as they saw proper. They had hearings. Business men, including lawyers, from all over the country appeared before them. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL], the only Member of Congress from either the Senate or the House on that committee, was made its chairman. They had meetings and worked day and night for three, four, or five weeks, and still are at work. That advisory committee unanimously agreed that section 209 was right and proper, and they have no suggestions to make, except that the tax rate of 8 per cent was not high enough to equalize the tax paid by those subject to it with the tax paid by those subject to the tax of section 201. I hope the amendment of the gentleman will not carry. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. DILLON] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DILLON offers the following amendment: Strike out all the words after the word "Congress," in line 5, page 2, down to the word "received," in line 9, page 2.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to bring the President and the Federal judges within the terms of this resolution. Under section 1, Article II, of the Constitution, "the President's salary can not be increased nor diminished during the period for which he shall have been elected." Under section 1, Article III, the judges' salaries can not be reduced during their tenure in office. Amendment No. 1 of the Constitution, which reads as follows:

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived—gives the Congress the absolute power to tax the salaries of these officials. Will any lawyer on this floor take the position that Federal judges and the President should be exempt from this tax? The sixteenth amendment grants full power to tax these officials. The taxing provision is without limitation, is without exception, so far as incomes are concerned. Articles II and III relate to compensation or salary. There is no confusion in these three articles of the Constitution. The first two provisions relate to salaries, but this last one relates to incomes from any source whatever. Why should the Federal judges be exempt from this income tax? Under what theory is the Congress going to say that these judges who have perpetual salaries during their whole life should be exempt? They know what they will receive, and I know they will willingly bear their part of the burden of this war. Why should we tax everybody on their incomes and exempt them? Upon what theory can you justify this injustice and go to the American people after they have expressed themselves upon the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution? There is absolutely no excuse for this exemption and this classification. If there is any lawyer upon this floor who can justify the exemption, I would like to have him tell us why the sixteenth amendment, which stands here without limitation and without exception, does not allow the Congress to levy taxes upon all incomes. Some must fight, but all who are able must pay in order that we may win the war. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote on my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. DILLON].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Upon a division (demanded by Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee) there were—ayes 93, noes 44.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The committee again divided; and the tellers (Mr. RAINEY and Mr. DILLON) reported that there were—ayes 95, noes 54.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KINKAID] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. KINKAID. Mr. Chairman, I grant that it is anomalous that the Congress is making haste now, at the beginning of this session, to relegislate what was enacted at the close of the last session, according to the best authorities on the subject. We are going about it speedily to make it clear, beyond a peradventure, that the congressional salaries are subject to the war excess-profits tax provision the same as incomes derivable from other sources—to make it plain that the Congress would not belittle and degrade itself by discriminating in favor of its own membership while imposing this burden of taxation upon its constituencies.

The Congress is not legislating to reassure itself that membership salaries must pay an additional tax, because it is satisfied such is the law already; but its purpose is to set at rest completely in the public mind that such is the law. I agree with the Member from Missouri, the able and distinguished lawyer, Mr. RUSSELL, that "this is a bill to amend the revenue law passed at the last session of this Congress, but it is not for the purpose of correcting that law, but is simply for the purpose of making absolutely certain that which everyone in this House thought was certain when the act was passed. I have not yet found a man who was present when the revenue bill was passed who believes that there was any intention to, or that it did, in fact, exempt Members of Congress from the payment of their taxes under the excess-profits provision the same as salaries of all other citizens of the United States. But there is no doubt that among the people the belief does exist that we did exempt our salaries and I with many other Members of Congress have received letters from friends saying that Congress had taxed everything in sight except themselves and their own salaries, which were exempted."

Mr. Chairman, the Members know that in construing legislation the intent of the legislative body is to be given effect, when the language employed shall reasonably permit of it, and it is conclusive that the intention of both Houses was that congressional salaries should not escape the excess-profits tax provision.

The present step is impelled, also, by the purpose to satisfy constituencies, beyond cavil, that their chosen Senators and Representatives have acted conscientiously and fairly in the passing of the revenue law of October 3, 1917.

Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of this Kitchin House joint resolution 195. On the first day of the session I, myself, was prompt to introduce House joint resolution 167, which, if enacted, would have the same legal effect as the Kitchin resolution; but, sir, I very cheerfully grant that it is most appropriate that the resolution of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], who is chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, which formulated and reported to the House the revenue bill now under discussion, be given the right of way in preference to my resolution or that of anyone not a member of the Ways and Means Committee. In fact, I did not ask for the consideration of my resolution by the Ways and Means Committee, when I learned that similar resolutions had been introduced by members of that committee. Certainly, I should have sought consideration of my resolution by the committee had none been introduced by members of the committee.

Mr. Chairman, it is plain that the question—I may say, sensation, which will be short-lived, arising out of the legislation involved—has come about because of the difference between the popular and the legal or judicial construction of the words "officers of the United States." The popular, and perhaps the press construction would have this language include Members of Congress, while the legal or judicial construction excludes Senators and Representatives in Congress. If "officers of the United States," judicially interpreted, means Members of Congress, as well as the executive and administrative officers who are appointed to their offices and not elected, then the act of October 3, 1917, did not require that the portion of congressional salaries in excess of $6,000 should pay a tax of 8 per cent. If it did not exclude them—in other words if they were left out of the exemption—then the excess-profits tax was imposed upon their salaries.

Since I have made a careful study of the act and of the decisions of the Supreme Court I am convinced that the language, "officers of the United States," as employed in the act of October 3, 1917, does not include Senators and Representatives in Congress; therefore, that their salaries were by the act made liable to the excess-profits tax of 8 per cent. And this seems to be the unanimous opinion of the membership of the House, which includes many lawyers who before they came to Congress had attained distinction at the bar and on the bench.

It has also been reliably stated in this discussion that several lawyers in the Treasury Department, where the act is to be administered, are of the opinion that the salaries of Congressmen are not left exempt from the excess-profits tax. It is stated, also, that the collector of internal revenue, whose province it is to administer the provisions of the law by collecting the tax, is of the opinion that congressional salaries are covered by the excess-profits tax provision.

Several decisions in the Supreme Court are to the effect that only appointive officers are included in the language "officers of the United States." Hence, these decisions are to the effect that salaries of Congressmen were not exempted by the revenue act of October 3, 1917, but that their salaries are liable thereunder for payment of the excess-profits tax.

The opinions involve the construction of Article II, section 2, of the Constitution. These opinions construe the article to mean that only such persons as are appointed either by the President or by the courts or other proper authorities are "officers of the United States." They mean, therefore, that Senators and Representatives of the Congress, who must be elected, are not in the meaning of the Constitution "officers of the United States." To this effect are the opinions contained in United States v. Smith (124 U. S., 525-531); United States v. Germaine (99 U. S., 508); United States v. Mouat (124 U. S., 303), and in Wharton's St. Trials, 200, where it was expressly held that a United States Senator was not an "officer of the United States" in the meaning of the Constitution; of course, it is the same with a Representative in Congress. So, according to the highest judicial authority, salaries of Congressmen are required to pay excess-profits tax by the act of October 3, 1917.

The conferees who drafted section 209, now in controversy, most of them lawyers, must be presumed to have been aware of the construction placed upon the words "officers of the United States," and therefore intended that congressional salaries be made to pay the excess-profits tax.

The question may arise, in the light of these authorities, Why reenact what is already law? I can only repeat that it is prompted by the duty and deference that Members of Congress owe their constituencies to assure them that the Congress has been fair. The Members further owe it mutually to themselves and their constituents, on account of the misunderstanding over the construction of section 209, to make a full exposé of the circumstances attending its adoption. It is very pertinent that the public be informed of the fact that section 209 was not contained in the bill when passed in the House, neither when it was passed by the Senate, nor when it came back to the House for the ratification of the amendments made in the Senate. This is a fact that no one controverts.

After the House had refused to concur in the Senate amendments and had asked for a joint conference and the conferees having been named by the House and the Senate had conferred, section 209, which has caused the questioning and discussion that have arisen, was first formulated and agreed upon by the conferees and by them reported to the Senate and the House. The report was unanimous with the result that no direct attention was called to section 209 by a printed minority report, usually accessible to every Member for his advice. The attention of Members of the House generally was not in any manner called to section 209, and few of the membership had knowledge that the section was contained in the conference report. On the other hand, the few who had such knowledge did not construe its language to exempt congressional salaries from the excess-profits tax. All the Members believed and assumed that their salaries were being made to pay excess-profits tax. No Member would have prostituted his power by thus shielding himself from participating with his constituents in carrying the burdens of the war.

It is only just to mention the remarkable unanimity with which the Members, regardless of party, have responded to every recommendation and demand made by the President for the enactment of war measures. No political partisanship predilection has betrayed itself in war legislation. The passing of the war resolution fixed the limit for any indecision or half-heartedness in the war cause. He who has not since been affirmatively and zealously for our cause is, even without any overt act to the contrary, in moral effect, against it. No difference what the predilection may have been hitherto, it became henceforward the patriotic obligation of every citizen to be absolutely devoted to the cause. Self-preservation, the first law of nature, without any other reason whatever—but the reasons are many—should impel every one to sustain the war heroically until the honorable peace shall be secured, which American genius and valor, reenforcing the unfaltering and determined offensives of the allies, shall make certain.

My own votes and remarks on war measures have been in full accord with these expressions.

In the just recognition of the nonpartisan unanimity of the support of the war during the recent extra session Speaker CLARK, when officially closing the session, said:

Gentlemen of the House of Representatives, I congratulate you on the ending of the most important session of Congress in the history of the Republic. The amount of business that we have transacted is absolutely amazing and stupendous. I think every Member of this House has contributed all that was in him to the support of the Government of the United States in this great emergency. [Applause.] So far as I have been able to observe—and I have observed very closely—partisan politics has been temporarily banished from this House. [Applause.]

I think every man has given the utmost of patriotism to his service here.

Likewise the statement of the President concerning the work of the Congress during the extra session expressed appreciation of the high value of the service rendered. The President wrote:

OCTOBER 6, 1917.

The Sixty-fifth Congress, now adjourning, deserves the gratitude and appreciation of a people whose will and purpose I believe it has faithfully expressed. One can not examine the record of its action without being impressed by its completeness, its courage, and its full comprehension of a great task. The needs of the Army and the Navy have been met in a way that assures the effectiveness of American arms, and the war-making branch of the Government has been abundantly equipped with the powers that were necessary to make the action of the Nation effective.

I believe that it has also in equal degree, and as far as possible in the face of war, safeguarded the rights of the people and kept in mind the considerations of social justice so often obscured in the hasty readjustments of such a crisis.

It seems to me that the work of this remarkable session has not only been done thoroughly but that it has also been done with the utmost dispatch possible in the circumstances or consistent with a full consideration of the exceedingly critical matters dealt with. Best of all, it has left no doubt as to the spirit and determination of the country, but has affirmed them as loyally and as emphatically as our fine soldiers will affirm them on the firing line.

These high testimonials are very complimentary to the entire membership of the Congress, and especially to the minority, as a tribute to their patriotic nonpartisanship.

In view of all the facts and the grave situation it is unthinkable that the membership could have intended to discriminate in favor of themselves.

But, Mr. Chairman, the only constituent who spoke to me upon the question of exemption of salaries in the excess-profits tax disclosed in the language he used that he and his neighbors were under the impression that Congressmen had been exempted not only from the excess-profits tax but from any income tax whatever. For this reason I take time to mention here that under the law as it existed before the passage of the act of October 3, 1917, and now, a married Congressman who has no other income than his salary must pay an income tax of $205. An unmarried Congressman having no other income must pay $245. Both married and unmarried Congressmen under the act of October 3, 1917, as it now is, in the opinion of the best authorities and in the light of the decisions of the Supreme Court, are required to pay $120 as war excess-profits tax in addition to their salary income tax, making the aggregate salary tax for married Congressmen $325 and for unmarried Congressmen $365. These amounts, I am sure, every Congressman will pay ungrudgingly and would be glad to double and treble in aiding our fight for civilization. [Applause.]

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me the Committee on Ways and Means has brought this House into a very unfortunate and very unnecessary predicament. If we vote against this resolution we appear before the country as if we were voting against the proposition to make us pay the same tax as others, while on the other hand, if we vote for this resolution, we admit thereby that in the original bill we did try to exempt ourselves. Either way we are subject to the public criticism that at one time or the other we were trying to exempt our salaries from taxation.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. I can not yield.

I do not believe there were half a dozen Members in this House when the original bill came out of the Ways and Means Committee that had any suspicion there was anything in the bill that would exempt them. And I do not believe that, if the bill remained as it was before, we were exempt. I believe on the arguments presented by the gentlemen from Iowa that the Members of Congress are not officers, and therefore the Members of Congress are subject to taxation just the same as anybody else. But at the same time we can not afford to vote against this bill, superfluous as I believe it is, because if we do we at once meet the criticism that we were trying to oppose a bill which would make us pay the same taxes as the rest of the country.

Mr. KITCHIN. But this clarifying item makes it beyond any doubt.

Mr. GILLETT. But you ought never to have put us in the position where there was need for clarifying. The rumor is that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is going to decide that a Congressman under the present law would have to pay this excess-profits tax. And I think it would have been much better not to have put this in at all and thereby put us in the attitude of trying to repeal an exemption which we originally made in deference to public clamor.

Mr. KITCHIN. Does the gentleman believe the Ways and Means Committee or the conferees put the House in that position, or that the misrepresentation of the press throughout the country put the House in that position?

Mr. GILLETT. You put us in a position where the press were able to represent it so that the country believed it.

Mr. KITCHIN. Misrepresent it.

Mr. GILLETT. If you had waited the ruling of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, then you would have put us in a position where the press could not have done it. And I heartily approve the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], for I supposed it was axiomatic in any taxing system that the man who earns his income by his brains or by his brawn should not be taxed more on it than the man who earned his income simply by cutting inherited coupons.

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Chairman, it is doubtless true that under the act of October 3, 1917, the Members of Congress are required to pay all of the taxes set forth in the act. The words, however, are capable of two constructions, and an effort has been made to convince the people of the country that the Congressmen undertook to exempt their salaries from the payment of the tax.

I am fully satisfied that no Member of Congress had in mind the exemption of his salary from taxation, and I can not subscribe to the language of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREENE] that we will be stultifying ourselves by making known the fact that we are not willing to escape payment of the taxes provided in the bill.

The Members of Congress are not Federal employees and hence would not be affected by the exception in the original bill, and this present resolution will set at rest completely all unjust criticism heaped upon the Members of this body.

I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ALMON].

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, while I do not consider there is any question but that the original revenue law makes the salaries of Congressmen liable to the excess-profit tax, still, in order to remove all doubt on the question, I am in favor of the resolution as amended and will vote for it. I voted for the amendment of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. DILLON].

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the resolution as amended.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WATSON of Virginia, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration House joint resolution 195, amending the act entitled "An act to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1917, so as to subject to the war excess-profits tax the compensation of officers and employees under the United States, including Members of Congress, and had directed him to report the same to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the resolution.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendment to final passage.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. To make a request for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not want the yeas and nays on the engrossment of the third reading, does he?

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] moves the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Massachusetts rise?

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the resolution to the Committee on Ways and Means with instructions not to report it to the House until the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall have ruled whether under the present bill the Members of Congress are subject to the excess-profit tax.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] moves to recommit the bill with instructions, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against that. It is putting off the resolution until somebody else not within control of the House rules on it. It is like the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to recommit the Underwood tariff bill of 1913, to postpone passage of the tariff bill until the Tariff Board reported. The Speaker properly held such a motion to recommit out of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to recommit this resolution to the committee until the Commissioner of Internal Revenue reports or rules on the exemption or exception provisions of the revenue act. That is not pertinent to this resolution at all. It has nothing to do with it. It is simply to delay it. It is indefinte. The commissioner may never rule on it at all. He never has to rule on it until he begins to collect this tax and some Federal official protests against it.

The Mann motion to recommit the Underwood tariff bill cited by me is exactly in point and on all fours with the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts. At the proper time Mr. MANN moved to recommit with instructions not to report the bill until the Tariff Commission or the Tariff Board had reported. After nearly an all day's discussion the Speaker held that it was not in order to recommit, because such a proposition, if offered as an amendment to the tariff bill, would not have been in order, and unless it had been in order while considering the tariff bill in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union it could not be in order on a motion to recommit. We never could vote on a proposition if we had to wait until somebody not within the control of the House reports on it.

Now, suppose, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] had made this motion or offered this amendment to this bill when in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Would that have been in order? Would it have been germane to the bill? It would have been absolutely out of order, and a point of order would have been sustained unhesitatingly.

Now, unless it is in order on a motion to amend it would not be in order as a motion to recommit. That is a clear and fixed rule.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, of course I could not move to recommit the resolution in committee. But that does not prove anything. I could now have moved to recommit absolutely, without limit. Suppose I had simply asked to recommit. That would postpone the bill still more indefinitely than the motion that I did make, so that the mere fact that it postpones the bill indefinitely does not argue against the right to make such motion. There is no question but that I would have the right to move simply to recommit. That would recommit indefinitely. I am more liberal than that. I do not move to recommit it entirely, but I just move to recommit it until an event happens. If I could move to recommit it absolutely I do not see why I have not the right to recommit it to a time which is more restricted than that. If I have the right to do the whole, I certainly have the right to do a part.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, there are numerous precedents for holding that a motion to recommit is not in order unless the legislative matter it contains would have been in order if offered as an amendment while the bill was under consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT. It would not have been in order in Committee of the Whole to make a simple motion to recommit?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It would not have been.

Mr. GILLETT. It is in order here.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman from Massachusetts evidently misunderstood my statement and the statement of the gentleman from North Carolina. Of course a motion to recommit would not be in order in Committee of the Whole. But there are numerous precedents holding that a motion to recommit is not in order unless its legislative substance would have been in order if offered as an amendment in Committee of the Whole. That is the substance of it—offered as an amendment while the bill was under consideration in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Tennessee will yield——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SHERLEY. The rule is this, that a motion to recommit with instructions would not be in order unless the instructions of the motion to recommit would have been in order as an amendment to the bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman from Kentucky has stated more clearly than I that which is the correct rule.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. LENROOT. The statement of the gentleman from Kentucky is absolutely correct if the instructions carried with it an amendment. But I do not think it is true if the instruction does not involve any amendment at all. The question is, Would that have been in order at any time when a motion to recommit or refer was in order if an instruction had been coupled with it?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. In reply to that I will repeat the precedent which has been referred to by the gentleman from North Carolina. I mean when a motion to recommit the Underwood tariff bill was made by Mr. MANN, with instructions to await the report of the Tariff Commission before reporting any bill at all. The matter is clearly subject to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained. The question is on the passage of the joint resolution. Those in favor will say "aye."

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and one gentlemen are present—not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of passing this joint resolution will, when their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 312, answered "present" 2, not voting 119, as follows:

Mr. VAN DYKE with Mr. SNYDER.

Mr. WALKER with Mr. TEMPLETON.

Mr. WEBB with Mr. WARD.

Mr. DILL with Mr. HUSTED.

Mr. HENSLEY with Mr. JOHNSON of Washington.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, I voted "yea." I have a pair with the gentleman from Maryland, Mr. TALBOTT, but if he were present he would vote "yea" also, and therefore I let my vote stand.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will unlock the doors.

On motion of Mr. KITCHIN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. SEARS until January 12, on account of important personal business.

FARM LOANS.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I have a resolution from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will send it up.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 197.

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall proceed to consider H. R. 7731, amending section 32 of the Federal farm-loan act; that said bill shall be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House and shall be a continuing order of the House until disposed of; that there shall be not exceeding one hour of general debate on said bill, at the conclusion of which time the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and all amendments thereto to the final passage.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] how much time is desired on that side on the rule.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I have requests for 40 minutes.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Does the gentleman think 20 minutes on a side will be sufficient?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Make it 30 minutes.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this rule proceed for 40 minutes, 20 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] and 20 minutes by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that debate on this rule be limited to 40 minutes, half the time to be controlled by himself and half by the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. And that at the expiration of that time the previous question be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. And that at the expiration of that time the previous question be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman state what is the intention with reference to adjournment to-day, and how long he thinks this matter will take?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. We ought to get through with this proposition in an hour and a half, if it is not interfered with too much.

Mr. DYER. Does the gentleman think that will be a reasonable time to adjourn to-day?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. We ought to finish this very quickly. I do not think there is any opposition to the matter at all.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to know if the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] are both in favor of this rule?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will direct his inquiry to me, I will tell him that I am opposed to it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I know of no vote that I have cast since I became a Member of this House that has given me greater pleasure than the one I cast for the rural-credits bill. [Applause.]

High and exorbitant interest rates had long been exacted on loans to the farmers of the country and the passage of the farm-loan act was a very just and necessary measure. When we created that system we led the farmers of this country to believe that by its provisions they would be enabled to borrow money on long terms at low rates of interest. We believed and led them to believe that the system would be a great success. At first there was an apparent delay in inaugurating the system, due to first one thing and then another, but finally the system became organized, and when it was placed in operation it rendered benefit to the farmers to the amount of $30,000,000. That amount has already been lent and to-day we are confronted with this situation: There are now on file applications amounting to about $70,000,000, which have been approved by the Federal Farm Loan Board, and the farmers are waiting to get that money. Their plans have been made on the idea that they would be able to obtain the money.

This Government is under a moral, if not a legal, obligation to lend the farmers that money. In addition to that, there are about $65,000,000 of applications for loans that have not been acted upon by the Federal Farm Loan Board. The board have been unable since about the 1st of November to sell a sufficient amount of bonds to make loans on the approved applications. Since the great campaign for the second liberty loan there has been a most decided falling off in the purchase of farm-loan bonds. There is either a scarcity of money that influences the sale of these bonds or the bond investors are waiting, hoping and believing that the farm-loan bonds will either depreciate in value or the interest rate increase. In either such event the farmer would have to pay the bill. If the bonds sell at a discount, then the Farm Loan Board will necessarily increase the interest rate to the farmer. If the interest rate on the bonds is increased, then the Farm Loan Board will increase the interest rate to the farmer. In either event the productive energies of this Nation will be hampered, and hampered at a time when we can least afford it.

In this great crisis every force of the Government must be utilized that will aid in the slightest degree the success of our cause. If the Farm Loan Board is unable to sell these bonds and make loans to the farmers on legitimate applications that are filed with the various farm-land banks, and that failure is due to the war emergency, then this Government can perform no wiser or more just thing than to purchase the bonds and sell them when normal conditions prevail again. [Applause.]

No class of our people has responded more loyally and promptly to the demands of the Government than have the farmers. In certain sections last year, notably in my section, floods came, storms swept over the country, and unfavorable climatic conditions prevailed, adding greater burdens to the already stooped shoulders of the farming classes. But the farmer did not waver; he set heroically to his task, and from early morn till dewy eve, in the sweat of his brow, labored that the world might be fed. This year when the President sounded the call to the farmers of the country to plant greater acreage that the armies and civilian population might be supplied in this great crisis, they responded by insuring us the greatest food crops in the history of our country. [Applause.] This year we have a wheat crop fifteen million and a corn crop five hundred and ninety-three million bushels more than last year.

Springtime and planting season are approaching. These thousands of farmers who have made application for loans are depending on the success of this system in furthering their plans for next year. If they fail to obtain these loans in this crisis, it will challenge the success of the rural-credit system.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The gentleman says that it is owing to the subscription to the liberty-loan bonds on the part of the farmers that they are not able to meet their obligations.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Oh, the gentleman misunderstood me. It may be attributed to two or three reasons. The farmers have subscribed for the liberty-loan bonds as much as they could, as much as the people of the towns. They have been patriotic, but it may be that the capitalists, the bond purchasers, having an idea that because of the large amount of liberty bonds placed on the market that in the course of time these Federal farm-loan bonds would either depreciate or the interest rate would be increased so that they could get a better investment. In other words, for some reason known to themselves they are not purchasing the bonds. It is not because the farmers have bought liberty-loan bonds. These people who need this money are farmers not able to buy liberty bonds, or, if they do buy, they necessarily borrow the money through the banks to make their purchases; but other farmers who were able bought them in as large quantities as the people in towns.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Then it comes down to this, that the original prospect or project that $9,000,000 should be taken to finance this thing to make up for the expected difference has failed.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. No; I understand that the first bonds on the market sold at a premium of 1½ per cent.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I am talking about the amount of money that was to be taken from the Treasury to finance this proposition.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Oh, well, the gentleman is just against the bill; and the gentleman knows that the fact is the Farm Loan Board can not sell these bonds, and the Government ought to take them over to the extent of a hundred million this year and a hundred million next year. [Applause.] Those in the House who are friendly to the farmer and want to do something for the situation that has arisen will support the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Yes; but I want to know how I am helping the farmer before I get carried away by rhetoric.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. The gentleman will help him by providing for a sale of these bonds. [Applause.] The Government is under a moral, if not legal, obligation to make these loans.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The original expectation that $9,000,000 would do this has failed.

Mr. GLASS. We did not think that $9,000,000 would be a drop in the bucket. The main source of revenue was to be derived from the sale of the bonds.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The Government was to come in to the extent of $9,000,000.

Mr. GLASS. Not at all. The capital stock of the Federal Loan Bank was fixed at $9,000,000. That was not expected to afford as much as a drop in the bucket toward accommodating the farm loans in the country, but the main source of revenue was to be derived from a sale of the farm-loan bonds.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. So the scheme has not turned out as was expected.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I refuse to yield further. The scheme has been a magnificent success.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. Can the gentleman tell why the farmers' loan board can not sell bonds at 4½ per cent interest that are not taxable while the Government sells 4 per cent bonds?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I can not tell, unless some of the gentleman's constituents want to extort a higher interest rate from my constituents who desire to borrow money. [Applause.]

Mr. PLATT. I can tell the gentleman why——

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I refuse to yield further.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. In view of the great yield in crops that the gentleman has stated, for which the farmers get a greater price than ever before in the history of the Nation, can the gentleman tell us why the farmers need the money?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. The gentleman ought to know that the farmers of this country are situated like men in the cities—some of them are very poor and some very rich. This will provide for the farmers who need the money and need it badly, and not those who do not need it, and the gentleman can render a great service to them by helping them in the present situation.

Mr. SABATH. I am willing to help the farmer that needs help, but I am not willing to help a farmer who hoards his products for an exorbitant price, and who for that reason makes a loan and asks us to help enhance the price of his products.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I may say that it is the opinion of the Farm Loan Board that the Government may not be compelled to take over the bonds. They may not need a dollar of money, but it will be a stimulant and an encouragement to those who might want to invest.

I know the impression has prevailed in some quarters that the farmers are against the war. In my own State I have heard the cry go up that the farmers are against the war, meaning that they are less patriotic than the people in the towns. I deny such a slanderous statement. [Applause.] In this crisis the farmers have responded as patriotically to the demands of the Government as have the men in the cities. They have given their boys and their labor to win the war. They have bought, as they were able to, liberty loan bonds, and in many instances they have borrowed money with which to purchase the bonds. They have contributed to the Red Cross and the Young Men's Christian Association. They are just as patriotic as the farmers have always been. Throughout the history of this country the farmers have played as great a part, in times of peace as well as times of war, as the people in the towns and cities. [Applause.]

Cincinnatus retired from the leadership of the greatest empire the world has ever seen to go to his farm and plow before the season was too far advanced. George Washington refused to accept a third term as President of the United States because he desired to return to Mount Vernon and cultivate his farm. Thomas Jefferson, James Madison, James Monroe, and thousands of others whose names are illustrious in history, were men who loved the pursuits of the farm. I love to look at that page in history and see the picture of Israel Putnam, that brave and sturdy New England farmer, who, hearing the clarion notes of the bugle call, left his plow in the fields and went forth in his working clothes to join the other patriots and help win the Revolutionary War. It was the embattled farmers of Lexington that gave their services, and in many instances their lives, that our independence might be won. At Kings Mountain it was farmers from Virginia and North Carolina that gave us victory. From '61 to '65 as brave men as enlisted in the Federal or the Confederate Armies came from the farms of the North and the South. [Applause.]

To-day the Rural Credit System is in the balance. Its continued success depends, in a large measure, on the fate of this resolution, and in behalf of the farmers of this country I plead with those gentlemen who oppose the passage of the resolution to withdraw their opposition that we may send to the farmers a Christmas message of good cheer and good faith, letting them know that their loans will be made and that the Rural Credit System is a success. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I enjoyed very much the eloquent remarks of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], but they did not give me much reason why this rule should be adopted. It strikes me as very extraordinary that on December 15—last Saturday—the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] should for the first time introduce this bill providing for the expenditure by the Government of $200,000,000, and that on the same day there should be introduced a rule to take up the vast proposition, and providing further that we should consider it with only one hour of general debate, and that then the previous question should be considered as ordered, so that there would be no five-minute debate or opportunity to amend. I agree that we are getting accustomed to voting out hundreds of millions and even billions of dollars without a great deal of consideration or knowledge, but to come forward Saturday last for the first time and give us notice then that he was going to ask $200,000,000, and then to-day to come forward with a rule granting only one hour of debate seems to me to be the very climax of arbitrary legislation. As I understand it, there have been no hearings except two or three before a subcommittee at the very end of last week. The need for this money can not be anything new. If the farmers of this country are in such terrible condition that they need $200,000,000 right offhand, they must have known it before last Saturday, and if they did not know it before last Saturday it can not be so pressing that they can not give us time to inquire into it and investigate it. It seems to me that it is an outrageous proposition to bring before us without time to give us the facts, without time to investigate whether the action of these farm boards has been such as to merit our approval. I have heard something about the operation of the farm loan board in my district, and I regret that it is not such as to give me great confidence. There are scandals already rumored about these institutions, and before we are asked to come forward and vote $200,000,000 more, before we are asked to indorse a proposition which I think the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] himself opposed when it was originally brought forward at the time of establishing the system, we ought to have time in which to make a thorough investigation and learn something about the real facts.

If I mistake not, when this original farm-loan proposition was brought forward it was urged that the Government should back these bonds, and that proposition was voted down by Congress. We decided that it was a business proposition, and that these farm-loan bonds ought to stand on their merits. I recognize, of course, that the war has made a difference, and I recognize that it is much more difficult to float any bonds since the war than it was before; but the grievance that I have against this rule is not the merit of the bill but that it is brought in here on the last evening of the session, without our having any knowledge of it, without any hearings except just by the head of the Farm Loan Board, when the House, except the very few members of the Banking and Currency Committee, has had absolutely no opportunity to acquire any information and when the House impatient to adjourn is in no disposition to consider it impartially. I am not surprised that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] moved the adoption of this rule. I notice that Mississippi has $4,000,000 of these farm-loan bonds already approved. Mississippi can not get the money readily, I presume, and they want the United States to come in and advance it

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important matter and there are not enough present to properly consider it. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twenty-two Members present—not a quorum.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 270 Members answered to their names, a quorum. The Doorkeeper will unlock the doors.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. They are dispensed with automatically.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend remarks I made yesterday for five or six minutes so as to present them connectedly.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

FARM LOANS.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I have just discovered that the rule as read from the desk is not the rule which the Committee on Rules has agreed upon, and I wish to raise the point of order on it now.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 101, noes 160.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. On this vote the ayes are 101, the noes are 160, and the gentleman from Arkansas demands the yeas and nays.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the demand.

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 96, nays 185, answered "present" 1, not voting 151, as follows:

Mr. STERLING of Pennsylvania with Mr. MAGEE.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] has 10 minutes and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] has 15.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to submit a substitute resolution for the one at the Clerk's desk and ask unanimous consent for its consideration.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania objects.

Mr. McFADDEN. I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ANDERSON. Let us hear it read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 199 (H. Rept. 231).

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 7731, amending section 32 of the Federal farm-loan act approved July 17, 1916; that there shall be not exceeding one hour of general debate, one-half of such time to be controlled by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] and one-half by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WOODS]. At the conclusion of such general debate the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. After the bill shall have been perfected in the Committee of the Whole House the same shall be reported to the House with such recommendation as the committee may make. Whereupon the previous question shall be considered as ordered upon the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I ask the gentlemen on that side to use their time. There will be only one more speech on this side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] has 15 minutes and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] 10.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I was debating the old rule when this unfortunate roll call interrupted me.

I recognize that this new rule is a little better. It allows some opportunity to amend in the Committee of the Whole. In so far as that, it is fairer. But my objection to this whole proposition is not to the bill, but it is to bringing it up in these very last hours of the session, when the House is not in a state of mind and has not the time to fully debate it, and trying to rush it through.

I have suggested to the other side that we should by unanimous consent postpone it until the first day we meet again, the 3d of January, and then take it up and give it full and fair consideration. I will be very glad to have that done, and I wish the gentlemen on the other side would accept that proposition and would be willing to take it up at a time when it would receive the consideration and debate and opportunity for amendment to which its importance entitles it. [Applause.]

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I want to say, in answer to the gentleman, that the Senate has just passed this bill. There is plenty of time for discussion.

Mr. GILLETT. It depends upon what you mean by "plenty of time."

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this rule solely because it is very plain that there will be no serious consideration of the merits of this bill if this rule is adopted and this bill is considered this evening. I am not opposed to at least a portion of the bill, so that I do not speak as an enemy of the legislation.

But, Mr. Speaker, here is a bill involving $200,000,000, and if this rule is adopted, while there are serious questions in connection with the bill and as to which amendments will be offered, there will be no serious consideration of those amendments. That is entirely plain.

Is it any wonder that the country, as each session goes by, looks with less and less favor upon the House of Representatives, when day after day this House is not deliberating, is not giving consideration to legislation upon its merits, but is making of itself mere rubber stamps? That is absolutely true, and every one of you know it.

I represent an agricultural community. I represent a constituency that is interested in farm loans. But I am not so much afraid of my constituents as I am afraid some Members will vote for anything and everything, with no consideration, simply because they may say, "I am afraid some farmer in my district will say I am against farm loans simply because I do not at the drop of a hat, without any consideration, vote to favorably consider a $200,000,000 proposition."

Mr. Speaker, this House will never gain the respect of the country—and it ought not to gain the respect of the country—if it is going to legislate in this manner at the hour of 5.30 o'clock in the afternoon, with a very large percentage of the membership gone and with the balance of the membership anxious to go and unwilling to give serious consideration to this measure on its merits. And, mark me, if this rule is adopted, it will be demonstrated to everybody that this House is not giving consideration to the bill on its merits, but is anxious to get rid of it at the earliest moment and in such a way as to give the least offense to their constituents.

Is that the way, is that the method in which legislation should be considered by the House of Representatives? We ought to have an opportunity to consider it. We ought to consider it on the 3d day of January, the first day we meet after the holidays. If it were considered then, it should have consideration whether or not at this time we ought to appropriate $100,000,000 for 1919; whether or not it is an invitation to take on all these hundreds of millions of dollars of farm loans, and there will be no private investment in them at all. And what will then happen? With the liberty bonds, the necessity of carrying on this war, with the other demands upon the Treasury, this country may be up against a stone wall inside of 12 months; and if it is, this House of Representatives will be responsible for that stone wall if it is without consideration going to vote to-night not only for the $100,000,000 that is necessary at this time but for another $100,000,000 that may not be necessary at all, and in conditions that may not exist, with authority that ought not to exist in any officer of this Government to purchase $100,000,000 of these farm-loan bonds. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] is recognized.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, how much time did the gentleman from Wisconsin use?

The SPEAKER. Four and a half minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is recognized for four minutes.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to adopting a rule which allows the consideration of as important a measure as this at so late an hour, just before adjournment. This bill is important to the people of this country for two distinct reasons. It commits this Government to the expenditure of $200,000,000. It does so at a time when, I think, the people of the whole country do not expect us to pass measures of this kind without giving them any consideration whatever. It is also important from the standpoint that it commits this Government to a new policy. By doing this we are committed to the policy of taking over the bonds of a corporation that can not sell them; and I do not see any more reason why we should take over the bonds of this corporation because it can not sell them than there is to take over the bonds of any public utility or railroad, or any corporation in the country which is having trouble in floating its bonds at this time, and nearly every one is having this same trouble at this time. I feel that this House is entitled to more knowledge in regard to the actual workings of the land bank. From anything I can learn, it seems to me that the land bank is not in a solvent condition, and I am basing that statement on what Mr. Norris says in his letter to the Banking and Currency Committee. He says:

We feel that even the most remote possibility of a suspension of the operations of the farm-loan system should be avoided, and that the legislation suggested would avoid such possibility.

Now, any institution that demands $100,000,000 Government aid certainly, in my judgment, is tending toward insolvency, and I believe the country at large and the Members of this House are entitled to much more definite knowledge as to the actual working of the land bank and to a longer time to consider such an important proposition as this.

It has been generally understood by the Members of the House that before the holiday recess there would be no more important legislation considered after the prohibition amendment yesterday. A great many Members of this House have gone home, and the others who are here are anxious and eager to get away, and every man in this House knows that it is absolutely impossible to give fair and careful consideration to any proposition at this time. I trust that the judgment of this House will be to put over this matter until such a time as we are able to give a bill of such importance to the House and to the whole country as House bill 7731 is the careful and thoughtful consideration that it is entitled to receive from this body. For that reason I trust you will not adopt this rule at this time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I am a friend of the Federal Land Bank System. The district which I represent is very largely an agricultural district, with something of manufacturing. We must not forget that there have been two drives for the liberty loan bonds, and it is perfectly patent that there will be another in the near future, and another before the close of the fiscal year. We must finance our allies. Now, if the drives for the liberty loan bonds have operated throughout the country as they have operated in the rural districts of Illinois, I want to state to you that, while we subscribed substantially the maximum, yet a great many patriotic country banks, sure of the solvency of the Government, of which I, as well as they, have no doubt, realizing the necessity from the patriotic standpoint of taking these bonds, made subscriptions larger than they are able to carry and care for their depositors and for those who desire to make loans of them, unless they can dispose of these bonds. What is true of Illinois is, I think, true throughout the Middle West, and I presume it is true of the South. Certainly it is true of the North. Of course, they can borrow on short time from the Federal reserve banks. But after all that is only temporary relief. They hope to dispose of these bonds, and no doubt are disposing of them to some extent to the people who have money to invest.

Now, I believe that this Federal Land Bank System is solvent. I believe that if they are willing to pay a reasonable interest on the farm loans they can get their money at less than the rate of interest that prevails, which is now 5, 6, and 7 per cent for commercial loans. It is well enough for us to take notice of this. But I believe that with proper advertising and with proper effort these bonds can be placed. I think it is wise to consider this matter for more than an hour. Many of our people have gone; and I believe this should go over until after the holidays, and that it should then be considered under a rule not providing for an hour's consideration by the House but for fair consideration, and then we can, without harm to anybody, in my judgment, and without injury to the credit of the land bank, determine what it is wise to do. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CANNON. If I may be granted a half a minute more——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman half a minute.

Mr. CANNON. As to the land banks, I do not think we can afford to go to the country under all conditions, subject to the tax that may be made and will be made, and say that this thing was rushed through with one hour of debate. It is not just to the Land Bank System, it is not just to the country, and it is not just to the House of Representatives. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. GLASS. I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker, that that is dilatory.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is overruled. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of order that no quorum is present, and the Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and sixty-two Members present, not a quorum.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Doorkeeper locked the doors, and the Sergeant at Arms was instructed to notify the absentees. The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this call 264 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GLASS].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, I am just apprized of the fact that the Senate has passed this bill, with certain amendments, and has adjourned. That being so, it is impossible for the bill to become a law until after the holiday recess, and in my view it would be futile to keep the House here debating a matter that can not be concluded this evening. In my view, while the criticism of haste—I would call it expedition—is measurably justified, not one whit of the blame attaches to the House Committee on Banking and Currency. That committee considered this matter the instant it was brought to its attention; and, with its customary intuitive wisdom, as well as dispatch, immediately disposed of it by reporting it favorably to the House. Furthermore, the speed employed has not been harmful in the least. The whole subject can be understood in five minutes as easily as it can be understood in five years; and, as I have said to friends on that side, if they please to appropriate to themselves a lack of comprehension that I am unwilling to impute, that is their affair. At all events, we can not conclude the matter this evening, and I have risen simply to ask unanimous consent that the bill shall go over and have privilege and precedence as the first matter to be disposed of by the House when the Congress reconvenes on January 3 next.

Mr. CANNON. As transportation may be a little uncertain, and I doubt if all of the Members who ought to be here will be here, will not the gentleman agree to substitute the 4th for the 3d? I shall not object, of course, but I simply make that suggestion.

Mr. GLASS. I would be willing to do almost anything the gentleman from Illinois could ask, but an informal agreement already has been made for the 3d.

Mr. CANNON. Very well.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Virginia mean that the House shall on the 3d of January resume the consideration of this bill right where it is now?

Mr. GLASS. No.

The SPEAKER. That it shall start in anew?

Mr. GLASS. No. Consider the bill to its final passage under such agreement as shall be made as to the division of time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that on the 3d day of January next this bill shall be the order of business after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, not to interfere with privileged matters. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask the gentleman if that request contemplates the yielding of some time——

Mr. GLASS. I have already said such time as may enable the gentleman from Pennsylvania to understand this simple problem.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is not satisfactory to the "gentleman from Pennsylvania." The "gentleman from Pennsylvania" has seen enough to know that there will be some objection to this bill, which the gentleman from Virginia says is so clear to himself and the members of his committee.

Mr. GLASS. Undoubtedly there will be some objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency that because of the lack of information upon this subject I have introduced to-day a resolution calling on the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish information regarding the Federal farm-loan system. If the gentleman can expedite the matter with the Secretary of the Treasury and see that we have that information by January 3, I think it will help very materially the discussion of this subject.

Mr. GLASS. I do not agree that it will help one bit, but I have no objection to the gentleman getting the information.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to know what understanding has been made in regard to the division of the time.

Mr. LENROOT. It will be under the rules of the House.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I have had a personal agreement which is entirely satisfactory to me, and which I think will be satisfactory to this side of the House.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I ask if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN] has been consulted?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, in answer to the question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania as to the division of time, I might say this, that so far as our side is concerned we feel that the control of the time should be in the hands of some one who is opposed to the proposition. If that is arranged satisfactorily, I have no objection.

Mr. GLASS. I have no objection to that. The senior minority Member was mentioned in the resolution from the Committee on Rules, but he very promptly came to the chairman of the committee and suggested that the control of the time upon that side should be by some one who is opposed to the bill, and that will be arranged.

Mr. McFADDEN. As long as that is understood I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman withhold that for a moment?

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

An act (S. 3235) amending section 32, Federal farm-loan act, approved July 17, 1916.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the prohibition resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

REPORT OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS COMMISSION.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a report of the Public Buildings Commission. It was instructed to report prior to January 1, 1918, and I ask unanimous consent, it being short, that it may be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to print the report in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The report is as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

The undersigned Public Buildings Commission, appointed by the provisions of the sundry civil appropriation act approved on the 1st day of July, 1916, respectfully submit the following report:

We give below the provision of the law creating the commission:

"Public Buildings Commission: With a view to ultimately providing permanent quarters for all the governmental activities in the District of Columbia in buildings owned by the Government, a commission is created to be composed of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate and two other members of said committee, to be appointed by said chairman, the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate and two other members of said committee, to be appointed by said chairman, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives and two other members of said committee, to be appointed by said chairman, the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the House of Representatives and two other members of said committee, to be appointed by said chairman, all of whom shall serve thereon only so long as they are Members of Congress, and the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds, and the Supervising Architect or the Acting Supervising Architect of the Treasury during any vacancy in said office.

"The said commission shall elect one of its members as chairman of the commission and is authorized to employ such expert clerical or other services as it may deem necessary, and shall avail itself of the advice of the Commission of Fine Arts.

"The said commission shall investigate and ascertain what public buildings are needed in the District of Columbia to provide suitable and adequate accommodations, with allowances for future expansion, for all of the offices, establishments, and public services of the Government in the District of Columbia, the proper location of such buildings, the probable cost thereof, and the probable cost of such new sites as they may deem it necessary for the Government to acquire.

"Any vacancies in said commission shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointments were made.

"For expenses of said commission, $10,000, to remain available until expended and to be paid out on vouchers signed by the chairman of said commission.

"Said commission shall make final report to Congress not later than January 1, 1918."

The commission organized by electing Senator THOMAS S. MARTIN as chairman. As soon as the commission was organized it appointed the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, the officer in charge of Public Buildings and Grounds, and the Acting Supervising Architect of the Treasury, all of whom were members of the commission, a subcommittee to study the question of providing permanent quarters for all Government activities in the District of Columbia. We submit herewith the report, including appendix and maps, of that subcommittee. With the many other duties devolved on the members of this commission we have found it impossible to give any considerable consideration to the report of this subcommittee or to the many difficult problems involved.

The subcommittee under the supervision of the general commission followed a plan of operation and investigation, including the following:

I. PLAN OF OPERATIONS.

A. A survey of buildings now occupied.
1. Owned by the Government, including details of space, numbers of occupants, and cost.
2. Rented by the Government, including details of space, numbers of occupants, and cost.

B. An estimate of future requirements for buildings for such period as the commission may designate.
1. Those now available.
2. New buildings needed.
3. Provision for increase of existing establishments.
4. Provision for new establishments.

C A survey of building sites.
1. Now owned by the Government, including those now occupied and those available for future use.
2. Required for new buildings, showing locations and cost of acquisition.

D. Monthly reports to the members of the commission.

E. Final report of the commission.

We believe that the report of this subcommittee contains very valuable information and will serve as the foundation for the final disposition of the questions submitted to your commission. The commission regrets exceedingly that they have been unable to digest the problems which are presented and that they can do no more at present than submit the report of the subcommittee for such disposition as may seem proper to the Congress. We respectfully suggest that it be printed so as to be easily accessible to all the Members of the two Houses of Congress. The inflated conditions due to the war emergencies make the present time very inopportune for dealing with many of the questions involved. It seems to the commission that the final disposition of the matter may well be permitted to remain until normal conditions are again reached.

Your commission appends to this report an itemized account of its expenditures, showing that of the $10,000 appropriated approximately $4,603.53 have been expended. A very few items of expense will have to be added.

Respectfully submitted.

THOMAS S. MARTIN, Chairman.

Itemized list of expenditures by the Public Buildings Commission.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bill:

H. R. 6967. An act to increase the number of midshipmen at the United States Naval Academy.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the prohibition question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. KITCHIN. I am willing for all to have it; let all have it. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen who spoke on the prohibition constitutional amendment be allowed to extend and revise their remarks.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this morning I proffered that request, but coupled with it the understanding that such extensions only include the remarks of the gentlemen and not telegrams, letters and editorials and articles?

Mr. KITCHIN. Was it granted?

Mr. WALSH. It was not granted. If the gentleman will proffer that request——

Mr. KITCHIN. I will do that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that all gentlemen who spoke on the prohibition amendment shall have the right to extend their remarks in the RECORD, barring telegrams, letters, editorials, newspaper articles, and so forth.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not know any reason why those gentlemen who had time to speak should be given that privilege when those who could not get the time were denied it.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I object to a monopoly of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object to this request?

Mr. FIELDS. I do, unless all gentlemen have that right.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will modify the request by asking that all gentlemen be given the right to extend their remarks in the RECORD, barring telegrams, letters, and editorials.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman objects.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen——

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] objected.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to gentlemen who spoke extending their remarks in the RECORD, but I object to gentlemen extending their remarks who did not speak.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

ADJOURNMENT.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the House, under the concurrent resolution previously adopted, adjourned to meet on Thursday, January 3, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. Letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of War submitting a paragraph of legislation authorizing the accounting officers of the Treasury Department to allow and credit in the accounts of Maj. (now Col.) Henry L. Newbold, the sum of $2,157.61, being the amount disallowed and charged against him on the books of the Treasury Department (H. Doc. No. 627); to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

2. Letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of Agriculture submitting a supplemental estimate required for general expenses of the Forest Service for the fiscal year 1918 (H. SENATE.

THURSDAY, January 3, 1918.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, in Thy great goodness Thou hast brought us to the beginning of a new year. Thou hast enabled us to write one of the fairest and greatest pages in the history of the whole world in the year that has gone. We bless Thee that Thou hast led us through the year with unity of spirit and with devotion to the great and high ideals to which this Nation has been consecrated.

We pray Thee that as we begin the new year we may begin it under the inspiration and guidance of God alone. Let Thy blessing rest upon every man whom Thou hast called to a place of influence in this Nation, that they may feel the support and interest and cooperation of all the citizenship, that we may continue the unity of spirit and purpose and effort until success comes to our enterprise.

We miss the genial face to-day of one of our colleagues in this Chamber whom Thou hast called to the great Beyond. We thank Thee for the wide influence, for the friendship, for the inspiration of his life. We pray that Thy blessing may rest upon the inner circle of his loved ones and that his memory may abide as an inspiration to us all in this Chamber.

Now, God our Father, guide us by Thy counsel. Give to us the continual influence of Thy Spirit. Bring us to the end of our great national enterprise for the establishment of peace and brotherhood in the earth. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday, December 18, 1917, when, on request of Mr. MARTIN and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

DEATH OF SENATOR FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, in the absence of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and acting in accordance with a request from him sent to me by wire—and I should say that Senator PITTMAN's absence is due to a delayed train on which he is now traveling to Washington—it becomes my duty to make public announcement on the floor of the Senate of the death of the senior Senator from Nevada, Senator NEWLANDS. I ask that the telegram received from Senator PITTMAN may be printed in the RECORD.

The telegram referred to is as follows:

CHARLOTTESVILLE, VA., January 3, 1918.

Senator MARTIN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

My train is five hours late. Should I not arrive in time, may I beg you to move an adjournment in respect for the memory of our late colleague, Senator FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS? In his death our State and our Government has lost one of its foremost statesmen. He won the affection of his friends by his ever gentle, genial, and considerate manner, and commanded the admiration of all by the power of his statesmanship. His loss is bemourned by all in our State. At the proper time I will ask that a day be set apart in which tribute may fittingly be paid to his memory.

KEY PITTMAN.

Mr. MARTIN. I think, Mr. President, I can safely say that Senator NEWLANDS was not only held in high regard but affectionate regard by every Senator on the floor of this body. In addition to our personal loss, Mr. President, I feel that I should also add that the death of Senator NEWLANDS in this crisis of our history is a great public loss. His familiarity with the subject which is now engrossing the attention of the country made his services peculiarly desirable and efficient. But it has pleased the Almighty to call him from our midst, and all we can do is to bow humbly to that decree.

Later on a day, of course, will be fixed when proper tribute may be paid to the memory of this distinguished Member of this body. In the meantime, Mr. President, I send to the desk resolutions, which I ask may have immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be read.

The resolutions (S. Res. 173) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS, late a Senator from the State of Nevada.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the memory of our deceased colleague, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, January 4, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 3, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, whose invisible hand guides the stars, which mark the flight of time, Thou hast brought us to the beginning of a new year, with its hopes and ever-widening possibilities.

The past is ours by inheritance and by our personal experience. The future is a closed book. Help us by the wisdom of the past, its mistakes and defeats, that with calmness and serenity we may read the pages of the future, as they are unfolded, with fortitude, courage, and vigor.

As the sun rose upon the new year it looked down upon a world of strife, carnage, brutality, and heart-rending suffering and sorrow. Grant, O most merciful Father, that amid all we may cling to Thee in faith as our refuge and our strength, for faith is truer than doubt, truth is mightier than the sword, right is stronger than might, and love shall live when the stars have all gone out.

May the duty well done to-day strengthen us for the duties of the to-morrow, and may the achievements of the past inspire us to the new achievements which the future hath in store for the faithful.

Since we last met two Members of the congressional family have crossed the river of death; peace be to their souls, and the consolation of faith, hope, and love sustain their colleagues, friends, and bereaved families. In His name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday, December 18, 1917, was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri rise?

Mr. BORLAND. I rise to ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. McARTHUR. Reserving the right to object, on what question?

Mr. BORLAND. On the question of war efficiency.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that is a very good way to start out the new year, and I shall object.

Mr. BORLAND. I hope the gentleman will not object. This is purely original matter.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the order of business for to-day, which is the bill H. R. 7731, be made the continuing order for to-morrow, immediately after the reading of the Journal, until finished. I do this because the House in all probability will adjourn as a mark of respect to the late Senator NEWLANDS and the late Representative BATHRICK, who died during the recess holiday.

The SPEAKER. Week before last week the House by unanimous consent made the bill H. R. 7731 the special order for to-day. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] asks unanimous consent that that order be transferred until to-morrow.

Mr. KITCHIN. And be the continuing order.

The SPEAKER. And be the continuing order to-morrow. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

RESIGNATION FROM COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
December 24, 1917.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker of House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I hereby tender my resignation from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, the same to take effect immediately.

Yours, very truly, B. C. HILLIARD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

RESIGNATION OF MEMBER FROM HOUSE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following notification of resignation from the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., December 31, 1917.

To the SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SIR: I have to-day transmitted to the governor of the State of New York my resignation as a Representative in Congress of the United States from the twenty-first district of New York, to take effect January 1, 1918.

Respectfully, yours, MURRAY HULBERT.

The SPEAKER. The communication will be filed in the archives of the House.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leaves of absence were granted as follows:

To Mr. CRISP, until Monday next, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts, for one week, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. IRELAND, for 10 days, on account of important business.

To Mr. CLARK of Pennsylvania, for one week, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin (at the request of Mr. BROWNE), for three days, on account of important business.

ARMED FORCES OF THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7697) authorizing the calling into the service of the United States the militia and other locally created armed forces in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 7697. Is there objection?

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does that include the Philippine Constabulary?

Mr. DENT. It does.

Mr. LITTLE. How many are there, if the gentleman knows, in the Philippine Constabulary?

Mr. DENT. There are 5,200 in the constabulary and 5,500 in the scouts, and they have about 6,000 in the militia, which is organized under the act passed by the Filipino Legislature substantially in the form of the national-defense act of June 3, 1916. They propose by this bill to recruit these forces up to a full division, so as to tender to the Government of the United States a division of about 27,000 officers and men, one-third of whom, at least, will be officered by American officers.

Mr. AUSTIN. May I ask the gentleman if we are going to retain any standing army in the Philippine Islands in the absence of these Philippine troops?

Mr. DENT. Of course this bill does not cover that. That will be a matter for the executive government to decide. But I will state to the gentleman from Tennessee that all of the evidence before the Committee on Military Affairs showed very clearly that there was absolute peace and contentment in the Philippine Islands, and that the object of this act on the part of the Filipinos is to show their gratitude and loyalty to the Government of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. AUSTIN. Which Government bears the expense incident to this?

Mr. DENT. Of course the Government of the United States will. It will have to feed them just as it does all other soldiers that we have in the service.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. With pleasure.

Mr. TOWNER. It might be added for the information of the House that this militia has been organized since the war. It is in direct contemplation of the Philippine Islanders of being called into the service. It was altogether a voluntary offer on the part of the people of the Philppine Islands.

Mr. DENT. The gentleman is entirely correct about that.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. Who are to be the regimental officers, Americans or Filipinos?

Mr. DENT. The higher officers will be Americans.

Mr. LITTLE. But the colonels, the battalion commanders, and regimental commanders?

Mr. DENT. As I understand it, most of them will be Americans. I can not answer the gentleman definitely about that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7697) to authorize the calling into the service of the United States the militia and other locally created armed forces in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the militia and other locally created armed forces in the Philippine Islands may be called into the service of the United States, and all members thereof may be drafted into said service and organized in such manner as is or may be provided by law for calling or drafting the National Guard into said service, and shall in all respects while therein be upon the same footing with members of the National Guard so called or drafted: Provided, The pay and allowances of officers and men of the Philippine Militia and other locally created armed forces in the Philippine Islands called into the service of the United States under the provisions of this act when serving in the Philippine Islands shall in no case exceed the pay and allowances for corresponding grades of Philippine Scouts.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Amend, page 1, line 10, by inserting, after the word "Provided," the word "That."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DENT, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a statement of the facts relative to the bill that has just been passed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following statement of facts, together with letter of Bishop Brent and letter of Gen. Frank McIntyre, printed in the report:

The Filipino troops in the Philippine Islands consist of National Guard, Philippine Constabulary, and Philippine Scouts.

The National Guard and constabulary are locally organized troops.

The Philippine Scouts are part of the Regular Army of the United States.

The constabulary consists of 106 companies, 361 officers, and 5,201 enlisted men.

The Philippine Scouts consist of 52 companies, 170 officers, and 5,570 enlisted men.

The National Guard is organized under the militia act of the Philippine Islands, and complies, as far as possible, with the provisions of the national-defense act of July 3, 1916, all the objectionable features in National Guard organizations in the United States having been eliminated.

Section 7 of the militia act of the Philippine Islands provides that the organized militia, under the designation of the "National Guard," shall constitute a general headquarters and a complete division under the command of a major general.

Section 8 provides that immediately after the passage of the act the Governor General be authorized to organize, equip, and muster a general headquarters and a provisional division. These general headquarters and a provisional division have been organized, and the provisional division is now in active training. The provisional division was organized under Executve Order No. 35, dated April 12, 1917, with the various units located at the main towns throughout the islands.

The school for officers and noncommissioned officers of the National Guard was organized on Saturday, July 21, under Col. Lincoln Andrews, Ninth United States Cavalry, with other officers of the Regular Service as assistants, and for infantry officers continued until October 1 in the camp located on the water front in Manila, the work for the artillery officers being continued in that branch at Camp Stotsenberg under Col. Oliver L. Spaulding, of the Field Artillery, United States Army, until October 15.

Immediately on the expiration of the different schools, the different units of the division were formed at the several towns throughout the islands and active training of the enlisted men began. The entire National Guard is now in training under the supervision of Regular Army officers, scout officers, and constabulary officers of ability and experience.

It is proposed to organize the scouts, the constabulary, and the National Guard into a full division of troops under the new Tables of Organization, which require some 27,000 officers and men. The scouts and constabulary are old organizations of the very highest experience and efficiency, they having been from their inception under the instruction and command of some of the best officers of the United States Army.

The National Guard is newer, and consists of the very flower of the Filipino youth of the islands. The greatest interest and enthusiasm has been exhibited by the officers and men enrolled therein. The officers of the division will consist of the present officers of the National Guard, officers from the constabulary and Philippine Scouts, and officers of the Reserve Corps located in the Philippine Islands. The officers will consist of Americans and Filipinos. It is proposed that from 25 per cent to 33⅓ per cent—and these the more responsible officers—will be Americans, and the balance Filipinos. This would necessitate some 300 American officers and 600 Filipino officers. In the organizations above enumerated there are some 600 Americans, and the very best of them will be selected for the division. In order that the division may come up to the required number, the governors of the different Provinces will be required to assemble at their provincial capitals five days before the date draft becomes effective twice the number of volunteers that would be required, and from these the extra men necessary to make up the new division will be selected. Recruiting officers and doctors from these headquarters will be sent in time to arrive there five days before the draft to make the selection and physical examination. In this manner the complete personnel of the division can be taken over to the department commander of the United States Army upon date of the draft.

For sites for the final organization of the division either Fort McKinley or Camp Stotsenberg would be ideal, Camp Stotsenberg being the better during the wet season, but Fort McKinley the more desirable on account of the splendid transportation facilities. There are quarters in McKinley for 8,000 enlisted men, and cantonments for the balance could be erected within 30 days; but as there will be six months of dry season from now on the lightest construction would be all that would be at present necessary.

Medical supplies: There is on hand in the medical supply depot, United States Army, in Manila, six months' supply for 20,000 men and families, or a total of 45,000 people. This does not include field equipment, which is in the hands of different departmental surgeons, sufficient for approximately 14,000 men more.

Equipment: There is on hand in the department reserve equipment for a regiment of Cavalry at war strength, equipment for two Mountain Gun Artillery battalions at Camp Stotsenberg and the machine gun, besides the complete equipment of Corregidor.

Engineer equipment: There is about 80 per cent in the engineer equipment necessary for a regiment, less tool wagons, which can be made in the islands; the other 20 per cent can also be made there.

Field equipment: There is enough field equipment on hand, such as field ranges and kitchen utensils, etc., for 15,000 men.

Clothing: There is on hand sufficient clothing for half of the division and some 4,000 woolen blankets. The shoes can be made locally by the Exchange Shoe Co. and the United States Shoe Co. Leggins in any quantity can be furnished if material is supplied. There is sufficient olive drab cotton cloth on hand in Manila to make 24,000 uniforms.

ORIENTAL NEWS AND COMMENT—FILIPINOS MAKE ACTIVE WAR PREPARATIONS—BISHOP BRENT GIVES GLOWING PICTURE OF FILIPINO INTEREST IN WAR—IF NOT IN FRANCE, HE SAYS, THEY COULD SERVE ADVANTAGEOUSLY ON MEXICAN BORDER.

The Rt. Rev. Charles H. Brent, former bishop of the Philippine Islands, who has just accepted the call of the bishopric of western New York, brings us a glowing picture of Filipino interest in Uncle Sam's war, an interest which has been evidenced from the beginning in subscription to liberty bonds, cooperation in Mr. Hoover's food campaign, and intensive farming, and the offer of a submarine and destroyer. Bishop Brent tells us particularly of the training of an army and the eagerness of the Filipinos to see active service.

"There has been an offer made by the Philippine Government," says Bishop Brent, "to provide a division of troops, Filipinos, a total of 19,000 or 20,000 men, for the United States Army. Large numbers of men are in training to form the division. There are already 5,000 Filipinos in service, known as scouts, and they are excellent soldiers.

"This offer is a notable thing for the Filipinos to do, considering their former attitude toward the United States. They offer their services in France, but if they can not be utilized with the Army there owing to the cold climate, to which they are not accustomed, they could be placed on the Mexican border most likely to the great advantage of our Government. The Filipinos are entirely in sympathy with our Government in this war and are anxious to do anything they can to serve the cause of democracy and freedom which has done so much for them; and the Governor General and officials are enthusiastic about giving men and aid to the United States.

"The Filipinos would give our country this great advantage along the Mexican border; they could talk with the Mexicans in their own language; they could tell the Mexicans what the United States has done for them, could explain the true attitude of our Government toward them and their country, and, I believe, could become a great peacemaking and peacekeeping force. The scouts are commanded by American officers, principally, with some troops in command of their own men, and they are rated as excellent soldiers by Army commanders who know their work and its value."

Bishop Brent is at present in France, at the request of Gen. Pershing, working with the Y. M. C. A. among the American soldiers. It is not as yet reported when he will take up his work as bishop of western New York.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF INSULAR AFFAIRS,
Washington, December 8, 1917.

MY DEAR MR. DENT: At the last session of Congress there was included in bills introduced by you and by the chairman of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs a provision authorizing the President of the United States to call into the service of the United States and make use of certain military forces organized by the Philippine Government under an act of the Philippine Legislature.

These bills included many other sections, many of the important provisions of which were included in the bill to increase the Military Establishment of the United States. It is possible, therefore, that these bills will not again come up for consideration. The section, however, authorizing the utilization of the Philippine troops is most important, and I hope that it will be possible to introduce it as a separate measure and that it may be passed early in this session.

The Philippine government has gone forward as rapidly as possible in organizing its troops, has followed, in so far as practicable, the steps taken in the United States with reference to officers' training camps and other details of instruction, and that Government is naturally desirous that its efforts be recognized as soon as possible and that the men will receive that encouragement which can only come with a knowledge that their efforts are to be made use of.

The provision to carry out the approved recommendation of the War Department should be as follows:

"That the militia and other locally created armed forces in the Philippine Islands may be called into the service of the United States, and all members thereof may be drafted into said service and organized in such manner as is or may be provided by law for calling or drafting the National Guard into said service, and shall in all respects while therein be upon the same footing with members of the National Guard so called or drafted: Provided, That the pay and allowances of officers and men of the Philippine Militia and other locally created armed forces in the Philippine Islands called into the service of the United States under the provisions of the section when serving in the Philippine Islands shall in no case exceed the pay and allowances for corresponding grades of Philippine Scouts."

I hope that it may be possible to introduce a bill in this form promptly. Its early passage would have a most beneficial effect in the Philippine Islands, where the people have shown a most earnest desire to be of assistance to the United States in the present emergency.

Very sincerely,

FRANK MCINTYRE, Chief of Bureau.

Hon. S. HUBERT DENT, Jr.,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on next Monday, after the address of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK], my colleague [Mr. KNUTSON] be given 15 minutes in which to address the House in relation to the military camps which he has recently visited.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that on next Monday, at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK], his colleague [Mr. KNUTSON] shall have 15 minutes in which to address the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the conclusion of Mr. KNUTSON'S remarks Mr. TREADWAY, of Massachusetts, have the privilege of addressing the House for five minutes. If it is desired to know the subject, the subject is his predecessor in the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the remarks of Mr. KNUTSON, on next Monday, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] be permitted to address the House for not to exceed five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Speaker's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Woman Suffrage be, and is hereby, granted leave to sit during the session of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. WALSH. I want to ask the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] a question. On what measures and for what purposes will the committee sit?

Mr. RAKER. On the bills and resolutions that are properly before it.

Mr. WALSH. Is it the intention of the committee to hold any sessions before action is had upon the suffrage resolution?

Mr. RAKER. We had a session this morning, commencing at 10 o'clock, and we adjourned until 3 o'clock this afternoon; and if we can get permission——

Mr. AUSTIN. Can the gentleman arrange it so that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] can be present at all the sittings? [Laughter.]

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. RAKER. I hope the gentleman will not object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects, and that is the end of it.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE—DEATH OF SENATOR NEWLANDS, OF NEVADA.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS, late a Senator from the State of Nevada.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

33. A letter from the Commissioner of the Federal Farm Loan Bureau, transmitting first annual report of the operations of the Federal Farm Loan Board (H. Doc. No. 714); to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed with illustrations.

34. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Interior submitting a proposed clause of legislation for inclusion in the urgent deficiency bill (H. Doc. No. 715); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

35. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of War submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation required by the Engineer Department of the Army for construction of seacoast batteries, Philippine Islands, for the fiscal year 1918 (H. Doc. No. 716); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

36. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting deficiency estimate of appropriation required by the United States Public Health Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918 (H. Doc. No. 717); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

37. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of War submitting supplemental estimate of appropriations required by the War Department for the service of the fiscal year 1918 (H. Doc. No. 718); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

38. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Assistant Secretary of Labor submitting supplemental estimates of appropriations required by the Department of Labor for the United States Employment Service for the fiscal year 1918 (H. Doc. No. 719); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

39. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriations urgently required for the service of the Treasury Department for the fiscal year 1918 (H. Doc. No. 720); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

40. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copies of communications from the Secretary of the Interior submitting supplemental estimates of appropriations for the service of the Interior Department for the fiscal year 1918 (H. SENATE.

FRIDAY, January 4, 1918.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come before Thee seeking Thy blessing for this day's service—a day laden with momentous issues and responsibilities that we dare not face alone. We ask Thy blessing upon us. We pray that Thou wilt bless our allies, who with us are lovers of peace, but who love justice and freedom more. We pray Thee to give success to their arms, and we pray that Thou wilt give unity of counsel to all who are gathered together in a mighty array of strength against an organization of ill will against the rest of the world. Give success, we pray Thee, to all our endeavors to establish again a brotherhood of nations in the earth. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ARMY QUARTERS (H. DOC. NO. 701).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, stating that, due to our entrance into the European war, it has been impracticable to spare from their duties the necessary officers to make the detailed plans and estimates called for by the act approved June 12, 1917, relative to the most desirable method for quartering officers and enlisted men of the Army, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

ACCOMMODATIONS FOR AIRCRAFT (H. DOC. NO. 725.)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, pursuant to law, certain information relating to the land, buildings, and other facilities now available or to be acquired for the accommodation of airships and other aerial machines to be used in connection with the sea-coast defense of the continental United States, the insular possessions, and the Panama Canal, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

TRAVEL OF EMPLOYEES OF WAR DEPARTMENT (H. DOC. NO. 712).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, pursuant to law, a statement showing the travel in detail of officers and employees of the War Department on official business from Washington to points outside of the District of Columbia, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

ALASKAN ENGINEERING COMMISSION (H. DOC. NO. 702).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, a statement relative to the increase in compensation paid employees of the Alaskan Engineering Commission, at Washington, D. C., and Seattle, Wash., which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

SNOW AND ICE IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA (S. DOC. NO. 158.)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, transmitting, in response to a resolution of December 17, 1917, information relative to what measures have been taken for cleaning ice and snow from the sidewalks in the city of Washington, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

NELSON ERICKSON V. THE UNITED STATES (S. DOC. NO. 157).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a certified copy of the findings of fact and conclusion filed by the court in the cause of Nelson Erickson v. The United States, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

DISPOSITION OF USELESS PAPERS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Civil Service Commission, transmitting, pursuant to law, schedules of useless papers and documents on the files of the commission and requesting action looking to their disposition. The communication and accompanying paper will be referred to the Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments, and the Chair appoints the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] the committee on the part of the Senate. The Secretary will notify the House of Representatives thereof.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. F. Turner, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 7697. An act to authorize the calling into the service of the United States the militia and other locally created armed forces in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 195. Joint resolution amending the act entitled "An act to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1917, so as to subject to the war-excess-profits tax the compensation of officers and employees under the United States, including Members of Congress.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution providing that the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Friday, the 4th day of January, 1918, at 12 o'clock and 30 minutes in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communication as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make to them, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. ELLSWORTH R. BATHRICK, late a Representative from the State of Ohio, and transmitted resolutions of the House thereon.

The message also announced that the House had passed resolutions relative to the death of Hon. FRANCIS GRIFFITH NEWLANDS, late a Senator from the State of Nevada.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a petition of Local Union No. 921, United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, of Portsmouth, N. H., praying for national woman suffrage, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SMOOT. I was requested by the American Bar Association, through its president, to present a petition addressed to the Congress of the United States asking that section 209 of the war-revenue act be repealed. The petition is signed by the president of the American Bar Association and all the members of the executive committee of the association. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

The undersigned, being the president and all of the members of the executive committee of the American Bar Association, respectfully call the attention of the Congress to the unfairness of the supertax on professional incomes imposed by section 209 of the war-revenue act approved October 3, 1917.

Much might be said in favor of a lower income tax on incomes from professions than upon incomes from investments, but there has been no disposition on the part of the American bar to object to the payment of the same income tax as is paid by others, or, indeed, to any plan of taxation under which lawyers are called upon to bear their fair share of the burden. It seems, however, very unjust that incomes from the practice of any profession, whether legal, medical, or otherwise, which are the result of personal effort and which provide not only for the current support of the professional man but also the savings for his old age, should be subject to a heavy supertax, so that the professional man who works for his income is in a much worse position than the idle man receiving his income from invested wealth.

Wherefore the undersigned respectfully urge that said section 209 of the war-revenue act be repealed.

IMPORTATION OF CHINESE FARMERS.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, on the 7th day of December last I introduced a resolution calling upon the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to make a careful investigation into the advisability of recommending legislation that will permit the importation of Chinese farmers into the United States under proper restrictions and regulations during the continuance of the war. Since the introduction of that resolution I have received many letters and newspaper articles in support of the proposed legislation.

The Pasadena (Cal.) Board of Trade passed a strong resolution in favor of the proposition, which was printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD under date of December 10, 1917. I now beg to submit for reference to the committee articles from the New York Evening Post and the New York Evening Sun and an editorial from the Pacific Rural Press entitled "The farmers find themselves"; also an article from the California Fruit News and a reprint from the Christian Work, being an article by Newell Dwight Hillis, D. D. From numerous communications that I have received on the subject I submit strong letters from Col. John P. Irish, of Oakland, Cal.; B. E. Schubert, of Greenwich, Conn.; and Mrs. Louise C. Maud, of Del Monte, Cal. Also three telegrams from California raisin growers of Maysville, Cal. I will ask that the telegram signed Lloyd H. Wilber and the letter of Col. Irish be printed in the RECORD and that they, with the newspaper articles, letters, and telegrams be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

It is stated, Mr. President, from what seems to be reliable authority, that there are now 17,200 Chinese farmers in the United States, distributed among 45 States, and so far as I know no harm has come from their employment. The urgent necessity for more labor on farms must be met in some way, and unless men are to be conscripted for the purpose some such remedy as I have proposed will have to be resorted to. It should be borne in mind that the proposition is not to import coolies, but genuine farmers, and that only during the continuance of the war, under strict regulations and restrictions. The Government is urging the farmers of the country to increase their crop acreage, but it will be utterly futile to do so unless labor can be found to harvest the crops, which at the present time is an absolute impossibility in many cases. I trust that the committee to whom the matter has been referred will give the subject early and unbiased consideration.

I submit the papers for reference to the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. They will be so referred, and the telegram and letter will be printed in the RECORD, at the request of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The telegram and letter referred to are as follows:

MAYSVILLE, CAL., December 19, 1917.

Senator GALLINGER,
Washington, D. C.:

Am a large California raisin grower, hiring 100 men harvest time. Am in favor of your bill on the importation of Chinese labor. Believe California Representatives and Senators should give this bill their heartiest indorsement. Impossible to harvest crop without foreign labor.

LLOYD H. WILBER, Sutter County, Cal.

OAKLAND, CAL., December 10, 1917.

Senator GALLINGER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I inclose a copy of the organ of the fruit industry of this State with report of the recent fruit growers' and farmers' convention held at Sacramento. To this I invite your attention, and also to my article on the farm-labor problem in the same issue. I inclose also editorial page of the Pacific Rural Press, the pioneer and the principal agricultural journal of this West coast.

I am a farmer and foresaw last spring the certainty of loss from the shortage of farm labor, and since then have had many opportunities, at meetings all over the State, to press this matter upon the serious attention of our people.

We salute you gratefully for bringing the matter to the attention of the Government.

The States of Washington and South Dakota have joined us in the demand for Chinese farm labor as a pressing war measure.

I will be glad to supply you with any helpful information and to put you in communication with the committee that was ordered by the Sacramento convention.

Very truly, JNO. P. IRISH.

HOARDING OF FOODSTUFFS.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, there continues to be a number of complaints and very widespread attention called to cases or alleged cases of hoarding of foodstuffs for purposes of speculation. I do not know what the food-control administration is doing under section 26 of the so-called food-control act providing for a Food Administrator that was approved August 10, 1917. I have had a good many inquiries as to the origin and the authorship of that provision. There seems to be considerable confusion in regard to it. I desire to call attention to the language of that provision as applicable to the situation which is complained of, and in this connection to state that it is a provision which I framed and introduced as a bill and reported from the Judiciary Committee. I ask that that bill and the report of the committee be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A bill (S. 315) to punish the storing of foodstuffs for the purpose of cornering the market, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That any person carrying on or employed in interstate or foreign trade in any article suitable for human food who, either in his individual capacity or as an officer, agent, or employee of a corporation, or member of a partnership, carrying on or employed in such trade, shall store any such article for the purpose of cornering the market or unreasonably affecting the market price thereof, or for the purpose of limiting the supply thereof to the public, whether temporarily or otherwise, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary for not less than six months nor more than three years.

[S. Rept. No. 47, 65th Cong., 1st sess.]

Mr. POINDEXTER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following report:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 315) to punish the storing of foodstuffs for the purpose of cornering the market, and for other purposes, having considered the same, report it back to the Committee on the Judiciary with the recommendation that the bill be favorably reported to the Senate, with amendments as follows:

Amend the title of the bill so as to read as follows:

"A bill to punish the storing of foodstuffs and other necessaries of life so as to affect the market price or limit the supply thereof, and for other purposes."

So that the bill as amended shall read as follows:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That any person carrying on or employed in commerce among the several States or with foreign nations or with or in the Territories or other possessions of the United States in any article suitable for human food, fuel, or other necessaries of life, who, either in his individual capacity or as an officer, agent, or employee of a corporation, or a member of a partnership, carrying on or employed in such trade, shall store, acquire, or hold, or who shall destroy or make away with any such article for the purpose of limiting the supply thereof to the public or enhancing the market price thereof in such commerce, whether temporarily or otherwise, shall be deemed guilty of a felony and be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary for not less than six months nor more than three years."

The subcommittee conferred with the assistant to the Attorney General, G. C. Todd, who, at the request of the subcommittee, prepared a statement upon the bill, as follows:

"Speculation in foodstuffs and other necessaries of life is generally thought to be one of the contributing causes of the present abnormally high prices. The object of this bill, shortly stated, is to prevent such speculation.

"The existing law is adequate to reach combinations or agreements the purpose or effect of which is to increase prices or curtail supplies. It also reaches a single person or corporation who monopolizes or attempts to monopolize trade or commerce in an article.

"It is doubtful, however, to say the least, whether the existing law covers the case of a dealer who, on his own initiative and without combination with others, purchases produce and withholds it from the market under circumstances which justify the inference that his purpose is to enhance prices, but whose purchases and holdings, taken alone, are not sufficient in quantity to make out a case of monopolizing or attempting to monopolize. While such a course of dealing on the part of a single trader may not be sufficient to affect the market price, when pursued by a large number of dealers acting on a common impulse the effect is the same as if these dealers had entered into a combination to enhance prices."

The purpose of the present bill is to provide a certain punishment for this class of cases, to which, as stated above, the existing law is at least of doubtful application. The subcommittee is aware, of course, that there may be difficulties in the enforcement of the law and as to proof in particular cases. If, however, the acts against which the bill is aimed are wrongful, difficulties of administration should not be allowed to stand in the way of its enactment.

It may be said to be a matter of common knowledge that speculators and dealers throughout the country are taking advantage of the present economic situation, the difficulties of transportation, and the state of war in which the country now is, to extort unreasonable profits from consumers in food, fuel, and other necessaries of life.

In the Washington (D. C.) Times of April 27, 1917, the following statement was published:

"A national convention of food consumers has been called to meet in Washington by J. W. Roberts, president of the National Food Consumers' Relief League of America.

"It is the announced purpose to make 'unscrupulous' dealers in food disclose their stocks, so the poor will not suffer and that those who are barely able to buy will not be mulcted.

"In his call to consumers to rally to Washington Mr. Roberts says:

"'At the earnest solicitation of those who wish cheaper food I, as president of the National Food Consumers' League of America, hereby issue a call for a nation-wide convention of delegates and consumers of food products to meet in the city of Washington, D. C., at high noon on Sunday, May 13, 1917, for the purpose of devising ways and means whereby the high cost of food may be materially reduced.

"'Every county in every State is entitled to five delegates; at least one should be sent.

"'We are face to face with the most gigantic undertaking of the present century. No other fact is half as momentous as the one of food. Speculators and unscrupulous men have taken advantage of a condition that existed only in the mind and cornered the food, to the hurt and detriment of the Nation. These men should be brought to terms. Millions of dollars' worth of food is hidden away in warehouses and cold storage, and other millions have been dumped into rivers in order that the high prices may be maintained, thus not only robbing those who can pay, but in this way starving many helpless women and children.'"

In the long period of exceeding prosperity which the country has generally enjoyed there was such abundance on all sides that the idea of actual want or shortage of the necessaries of life to those who were reasonably prudent and industrious received but little attention. It is true that abuses of speculation in staple articles of food or necessary supplies of fuel were flagrant in some cases and caused much dissatisfaction in the public mind. The evil, however, was not of such vital and widespread nature as to call for the revival and strict application of the old common law against such offenses. In the days when the common law was taking its form in England the people were poorer, modes of life were simpler, and any tampering with the necessary articles of life for the purpose of pure speculation, without the rendering of any necessary service in exchange for the profits obtained, was a matter of vital concern. The offenses of "forestalling" and "engrossing" were well-defined crimes, punishable at the common law along with monopoly, cheating, and other offenses against fair trade. Some of the acts which in the ancient common law constituted forestalling and engrossing are more or less obsolete or have lost their significance, but the general tenor and purport of the common law and many of the specific acts constituting forestalling and engrossing were identical with those punishable under the present bill.

In a paper prepared by the Library of Congress the following definitions are given:

Forestalling, commonly speaking, means to market before the public, or to anticipate or prevent the public market; but, legally understood, it has a greater signification, for it comprehends all unlawful endeavors to enhance the price of any commodity, and all practices which have an apparent tendency thereto, such as spreading false rumors; buying commodities in the market before the accustomed hour; buying and selling again the same articles in the same market; and other such criminal devices. It also comprehended the offenses of regrating and ingrossing; but the names regrator or ingrosser were not known before the reign of Henry III. (3 Inst., 195, 196; 1 Hawk. P. Cor., c. 80; Brown Indict., 40; Cromp., p. 20 b.)

No attempt of this kind can be looked upon in any other light than as an offense against the public, as it apparently tends to put a check upon trade, to the general inconvenience of the people, by putting it out of their power to supply themselves with any commodity, unless at an unreasonable expense, which often proves extremely oppressive to the poorer sort, and can not but give just cause of complaint even to the richest. (Hawkins, P. C., 234.)

If a person within the realm buys any merchandise in gross and sells the same again in gross, it is an offense of this nature, for by this means the price will be enhanced, because passing through several hands each will endeavor to make his profit by it (3 Inst., 196), and if such practices were allowable a rich man might ingross into his hands a whole commodity and then sell it again at what price he should think fit, which is of such dangerous consequences that the bare ingrossing of an entire commodity, with an intent to sell it again at an unreasonable price, is an offense indictable at the common law, whether any part thereof be sold by the ingrosser or not. (Cro. Car., 231, 232; Hawk., P. C.)

But any merchant, whether he be a subject or a foreigner, bringing victuals or any other merchandise into the realm may sell the same in gross, but the purchaser can not sell the same in gross, for then he is an ingrosser, according to the strict sense of the word, and may be indicted thereof at the common law. (3 Inst., 195. Hales, P. C., 152; resolved by all the judges, 39 and 40 Eliz.)

[Source: Illingworth, Wm. An inquiry into the laws, ancient and modern, respecting forestalling, regrating, and ingrossing. London, 1800. p. 14–15.]

Regrator. "Forestaller" is he that buyeth corne, cattell, or other merchandize whatscever is saleable, by the way as it commeth to markets, faires, or such like places to bee sold, to the intent that he may sell the same againe at a more high and deer price, in prejudice and hurt of the common wealth and people. (Termes de la Ley, Forestaller.)

"'Regrator' is he that hath corn, victuals, or other things sufficient for his owne necessary need, occupation, or spending and doth nevertheless, ingrosse and buy up into his hands more corne, victuals, or other such things to the intent to sell the same againe at a higher and deerer price in faires, markets, or other such like places, whereof see the stat. 5 E. 6, c. 14, for he shall be punished as a forestaller. (Termes de la Ley, Regrator).

"[Source: Stroud, F. The Judicial Dictionary, London, 1890, p. 664.]"

These offenses are particularly heinous in time of war and at a time when there is danger of a world-wide shortage of food and the possible famine of millions. Speculation and profiting by the necessities and hunger of the people in such a time can not be too severely punished. During the Revolution Washington gave vent to his indignation against forestallers and foregatherers and expressed the opinion that the penalty of death was not too extreme in such cases and under such conditions.

The present bill makes the offense a felony, punishable by imprisonment, and leaves no alternative penalty of fine or otherwise, but makes imprisonment "for not less than six months nor more than three years" mandatory upon conviction.

FARM CREDITS.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I present a proposed plan signed by Mr. David Lubin for a proposal for farm credits on open account. Mr. Lubin is the American delegate to the International Institute of Agriculture, with headquarters in Rome. He has been a pioneer for a long term in agricultural relief and has given this subject a very great deal of thought. He now proposes a plan for short-term personal credit or open-account credit for the benefit of farmers. I move that the matter be referred to the Committee on Printing with a view to having it printed as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That action will be taken.

ENGLISH RAILWAY OPERATION IN WAR TIME.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that if it is agreeable to the Senate at the close of the morning business and if it will not interfere with anyone who wishes to speak on the unfinished business, I should like to address the Senate briefly, for not more than 15 or 20 minutes, on the conduct of English railways in war times.

ADDRESS BY HON. JULIUS A. COLLER.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I desire to have printed as a Senate document a short address by State Senator Julius A. Coller, of Minnesota, delivered at Jordan, in that State, November 10, 1917, presenting a strong argument why German-Americans should support the Government in this war. I ask that the matter be referred to the Committee on Printing for action.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that action will be taken.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. GALLINGER:

A bill (S. 3308) granting to American women married to foreigners the right to retain their citizenship; to the Committee on the Judiciary; and

A bill (S. 3309) providing increased pensions for honorably discharged persons in the military or naval service of the United States during the Civil War; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 3310) to authorize the Secretary of State to procure a suitable portrait of Gen. George Washington and present the same to the Military College of the Argentine Republic.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It was suggested that the bill should go to the Committee on Military Affairs, but I believe that is not the committee to which such bills are usually referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It should go to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Library.

The motion was agreed to.

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 3311) to increase and expedite the supply of munitions of war; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. SMOOT submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $20,000 for survey and investigation of an irrigation project near Newcastle, Iron County, Utah, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CALDER submitted an amendment providing that the rate of postage on drop letters of the first class mailed in the city of New York for delivery within the confines of that city shall be 2 cents an ounce or fraction thereof, intended to be proposed by him to the Post Office appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

CLERKS OF DISTRICT COURTS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3079) fixing the salary of the clerks of the United States district courts; prescribing how and when they shall account for the fees collected; providing for the office expenses of such clerks, including salaries of deputy clerks and clerical assistants; and for the travel and subsistence expense of such clerks and their deputies when necessarily absent from their official residences, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—AMANDA B. BIRCH.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, it was Ordered, That the papers accompanying the bill S. 647, Sixty-fifth Congress, first session, granting a pension to Amanda B. Birch, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

JOINT MEETING OF THE TWO HOUSES.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives, which was read:

House concurrent resolution 31.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Friday, the 4th day of January, 1918, at 12 o'clock and 30 minutes in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communication as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make to them.

Mr. MARTIN. I move that the Senate concur in the resolution that has just been read.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

H. R. 7697. An act to authorize the calling into the service of the United States the militia and other locally created armed forces in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

H. J. Res. 195. Joint resolution amending the act entitled "An act to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1917, so as to subject to the war excess-profits tax the compensation of officers and employees under the United States, including Members of Congress, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed the following act and joint resolution:

On December 20, 1917:

S. 2334. An act to authorize absence by homestead settlers and entrymen, and for other purposes.

On December 26, 1917:

S. J. Res. 114. Joint resolution extending the commission provided for in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1917, with the same authorities, powers, and provisions until on or before March 1, 1918.

JOINT MEETING OF THE TWO HOUSES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour having arrived at which, in accordance with the concurrent resolution of the two Houses, the Senate is to proceed to the Hall of the House of Representatives, for the purpose of hearing such communication as the President of the United States may desire to make, the order will now be carried out.

Thereupon the Senate, preceded by its Sergeant at Arms and headed by the Vice President and the Secretary, proceeded to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

At 12 o'clock and 47 minutes p. m. the Senate returned to its Chamber, and the Vice President resumed the chair.

ADDRESS BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES. (H. Doc. 764).

The address of the President of the United States this day delivered at a joint session of the two Houses of Congress is as follows:

GENTLEMEN OF THE CONGRESS: I have asked the privilege of addressing you in order to report to you that on the twenty-eighth of December last, during the recess of the Congress, acting through the Secretary of War and under the authority conferred upon me by the act of Congress approved August 29, 1916, I took possession and assumed control of the railway lines of the country and the systems of water transportation under their control. This step seemed to be imperatively necessary in the interest of the public welfare, in the presence of the great tasks of war with which we are now dealing. As our own experience develops difficulties and makes it clear what they are, I have deemed it my duty to remove those difficulties wherever I have the legal power to do so. To assume control of the vast railway systems of the country is, I realize, a very great responsibility, but to fail to do so in the existing circumstances would have been a much greater. I assumed the less responsibility rather than the weightier.

I am sure that I am speaking the mind of all thoughtful Americans when I say that it is our duty as the representatives of the nation to do everything that it is necessary to do to secure the complete mobilization of the whole resources of America by as rapid and effective means as can be found. Transportation supplies all the arteries of mobilization. Unless it be under a single and unified direction, the whole process of the nation's action is embarrassed.

It was in the true spirit of America, and it was right, that we should first try to effect the necessary unification under the voluntary action of those who were in charge of the great railway properties; and we did try it. The directors of the railways responded to the need promptly and generously. The group of railway executives who were charged with the task of actual coordination and general direction performed their difficult duties with patriotic zeal and marked ability, as was to have been expected, and did, I believe, everything that it was possible for them to do in the circumstances. If I have taken the task out of their hands, it has not been because of any dereliction or failure on their part but only because there were some things which the Government can do and private management cannot. We shall continue to value most highly the advice and assistance of these gentlemen and I am sure we shall not find them withholding it.

It had become unmistakably plain that only under government administration can the entire equipment of the several systems of transportation be fully and unreservedly thrown into a common service without injurious discrimination against particular properties. Only under government administration can an absolutely unrestricted and unembarrassed common use be made of all tracks, terminals, terminal facilities and equipment of every kind. Only under that authority can new terminals be constructed and developed without regard to the requirements or limitations of particular roads. But under government administration all these things will be possible,—not instantly, but as fast as practical difficulties, which cannot be merely conjured away, give way before the new management.

The common administration will be carried out with as little disturbance of the present operating organizations and personnel of the railways as possible. Nothing will be altered or disturbed which it is not necessary to disturb. We are serving the public interest and safeguarding the public safety, but we are also regardful of the interest of those by whom these great properties are owned and glad to avail ourselves of the experience and trained ability of those who have been managing them. It is necessary that the transportation of troops and of war materials, of food and of fuel, and of everything that is necessary for the full mobilization of the energies and resources of the country, should be first considered, but it is clearly in the public interest also that the ordinary activities and the normal industrial and commercial life of the country should be interfered with and dislocated as little as possible, and the public may rest assured that the interest and convenience of the private shipper will be as carefully served and safeguarded as it is possible to serve and safeguard it in the present extraordinary circumstances.

While the present authority of the Executive suffices for all purposes of administration, and while of course all private interests must for the present give way to the public necessity, it is, I am sure you will agree with me, right and necessary that the owners and creditors of the railways, the holders of their stocks and bonds, should receive from the Government an unqualified guarantee that their properties will be maintained throughout the period of federal control in as good repair and as complete equipment as at present, and that the several roads will receive under federal management such compensation as is equitable and just alike to their owners and to the general public. I would suggest the average net railway operating income of the three years ending June 30, 1917. I earnestly recommend that these guarantees be given by appropriate legislation, and given as promptly as circumstances permit.

I need not point out the essential justice of such guarantees and their great influence and significance as elements in the present financial and industrial situation of the country. Indeed, one of the strong arguments for assuming control of the railroads at this time is the financial argument. It is necessary that the values of railway securities should be justly and fairly protected and that the large financial operations every year necessary in connection with the maintenance, operation and development of the roads should, during the period of the war, be wisely related to the financial operations of the Government. Our first duty is, of course, to conserve the common interest and the common safety and to make certain that nothing stands in the way of the successful prosecution of the great war for liberty and justice, but it is also an obligation of public conscience and of public honor that the private interests we disturb should be kept safe from unjust injury, and it is of the utmost consequence to the Government itself that all great financial operations should be stabilized and coordinated with the financial operations of the Government. No borrowing should run athwart the borrowing of the federal treasury, and no fundamental industrial values should anywhere be unnecessarily impaired. In the hands of many thousands of small investors in the country, as well as in national banks, in insurance companies, in saving banks, in trust companies, in financial agencies of every kind, railway securities, the sum total of which runs up to some ten or eleven thousand millions, constitute a vital part of the structure of credit, and the unquestioned solidity of that structure must be maintained.

The Secretary of War and I easily agreed that, in view of the many complex interests which must be safeguarded and harmonized, as well as because of his exceptional experience and ability in this new field of governmental action, the Honorable William G. McAdoo was the right man to assume direct administrative control of this new executive task. At our request, he consented to assume the authority and duties of organizer and Director General of the new Railway Administration. He has assumed those duties and his work is in active progress.

It is probably too much to expect that even under the unified railway administration which will now be possible sufficient economies can be effected in the operation of the railways to make it possible to add to their equipment and extend their operative facilities as much as the present extraordinary demands upon their use will render desirable without resorting to the national treasury for the funds. If it is not possible, it will, of course, be necessary to resort to the Congress for grants of money for that purpose. The Secretary of the Treasury will advise with your committees with regard to this very practical aspect of the matter. For the present, I suggest only the guarantees I have indicated and such appropriations as are necessary at the outset of this task. I take the liberty of expressing the hope that the Congress may grant these promptly and ungrudgingly. We are dealing with great matters and will, I am sure, deal with them greatly.

ENGLISH RAILWAY OPERATION IN WAR TIME.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I venture to address the Senate very briefly this morning on the subject of the operation of the English railways during war time. I do this because it is a matter of very lively interest now, and because I happen to have in my possession a manuscript, not yet printed, that deals with the matter authoritatively.

OUTLINE OF GOVERNMENT CONTROL.

By virtue of laws passed in 1871 and 1888, and under a program worked out long in advance, the railways of Great Britain came under Government control as soon as war was declared.

The machinery was set in motion August 4, 1914, by an order in council, under which Premier Asquith at once empowered the president of the board of trade to take possession of the entire railway system of England, Scotland, and Wales.

Direct control was exercised through a railway executive committee of 10, appointed by the Government from the general managers of certain important roads, one of whom was made acting chairman. The official chairman was the president of the board of trade, forming the connecting link with the English Government.

The staff of each railway remained undisturbed, receiving general directions through its regular officers from the railway executive committee.

INITIAL OPERATIONS.

Under detailed plans long in existence, the mobilization of the English Army and its transport to France were carried out under the president of the board of trade with great speed and efficiency. Traffic then settled down to conditions which were nearly normal for a period of about two years.

CRISIS IN 1916.

Meanwhile, however, the demands on the railways had largely increased, while the facilities for doing business had greatly lessened.

INCREASED DEMANDS.

Increased demand sprang from heavy war business, such as special troop trains; special freight trains and ambulance trains; enlarged use of coal, metals, and manufactured products; priority of shipments for Government and war supplies; and the curtailment of the usual sea transportation.

LESSENED FACILITIES.

Lessened facilities were due to wear and tear of rolling stock, roadbeds, and equipment, without adequate means for repair or replacement, and the enlistment of scores of thousands of the best railway men and officials.

Factories for making and repairing locomotives, cars, and rails had been diverted to the manufacture of munitions of war, while, in spite of efforts to check the enlistment of railway men after the first rush to France, about 10 per cent of the entire railway staffs had joined the colors in October, 1914. This percentage is now well over 25.

ENLISTMENT OF RAILWAY MEN.

The Army needs for more men, particularly for men to do railroad work overseas, have been so insistent that no effective exemption has been applied in the railway service, but recourse has been had instead to the reduction and simplification of work and to the employment of men not capable of bearing arms and of women. The employment of women as clerks, car cleaners, and the like, was natural enough, but it is startling to learn that women are now largely engaged as truckmen, machinists, and porters. There is no record that any women are employed as engineers, firemen, or section hands.

EMPLOYMENT OF WOMEN.

The number of women employed on English railways in July, 1914, was 15,000. It had increased to 100,000 in 1917.

POOLING OF CARS.

The shortage in rolling stock reached an acute stage in 1916. With most factories engaged in producing munitions, new engines and cars could not be supplied, while much equipment was on sidetracks for want of even slight repairs. Steps were taken, accordingly, to get more service out of such cars as were available.

The difficulties of pooling freight cars so that all might be constantly employed were greatly increased by the circumstance that 600,000 freight cars—about one-half the total number—were owned by private concerns. Much opposition arose to effective pooling.

Beginning, however, with cars owned by different railroads, the Government succeeded in preventing the transport of empty cars. Freight cars were kept in constant use, with little regard to their ownership by a particular railway. And, finally, in December, 1916, by order in council, the board of trade was empowered to make rules for taking possession of private freight cars for the general welfare, making necessary orders for conditions as to use and rental.

HANDLING OF FREIGHT.

By the same order the board was further empowered to provide for the prompt handling of freight by making it a criminal offense to fail to load or unload in accordance with the rules provided. Drastic steps had become essential in this regard. Requests and warnings were unheeded; demurrage charges had little effect.

One authority stated that "there was no shortage of railway wagons, but only of empty wagons." To meet this need it was finally provided in March, 1917, that a shipper might have two days for unloading at stations and private sidings and wharves and four days at ports. If the consignee fails to comply with this schedule, the railway may unload and store the goods at the owner's risk and expense, retaining a lien for all charges. The owner may also be fined and imprisoned for his dereliction. He has committed an offense against the defense of the realm act.

REDUCTION OF SERVICE.

Passenger traffic was also brought into line. Many passenger trains were canceled. Express service was slowed down. Reservation of seats and compartments was discontinued. Sleeping and dining car service was curtailed. More stops of express trains were ordered. Excursion and cheap tickets were abolished. Traffic was diverted for reasons of economy. The amount of luggage was cut down, as well as service of porters and baggagemen.

ADVANCE IN PASSENGER RATES.

And finally, January 1, 1917, passenger rates were advanced 50 per cent, excepting traders' tickets, workmen's and zone tickets. This increase was not to raise more revenue, but to discourage travel.

The thoroughness of Government control of English railways is thus apparent. There remains to be considered the matter of wages and strikes.

STRIKES NOT PROHIBITED.

There is not now, nor has there been, in England legislation prohibiting strikes on railways. Matters of wages, hours of service, and conditions of labor have been left to agreements and regulations between the railway companies and the men.

AGREEMENT FOR CONCILIATION.

Before the pending war there was an agreement between the men and their employers that disputes should be settled by conciliation and arbitration. This agreement was secured in November, 1907, through the efforts of the board of trade. It involved about 97 per cent of the railway workers of the United Kingdom.

The conciliation boards embraced representatives of the companies and the men. In case of disagreement the question went to an arbitrator for decision. If the two sides could not agree on an arbitrator, he was to be appointed by the speaker of the House of Commons and the master of the rolls.

The agreement did not work well. There was a strike in August, 1911, involving over 200,000 men. An investigation by a royal commission followed, which culminated in certain changes incorporated in a new agreement which was in existence in August, 1914.

NO RECOGNITION OF UNIONS.

Unions of railway men were not formally recognized under this agreement, largely because the existing unions did not represent a majority of railway employees when the agreement was adopted. This deficiency was overcome, however, in 1914 by the National Union of Railway Men, organized in 1913 and passing the majority mark—300,000—in 1914.

In November, 1913, the unions gave notice that the agreement for conciliation would expire November 6, 1914. When the war broke out in August, 1914, negotiations were pending for a new agreement for conciliation.

GENERAL ATTITUDE OF UNION LABOR.

August 24, 1914, the national committees of organized labor met to discuss labor problems. It is interesting to note that their chief concern related to nonemployment, or unemployment. Resolutions were adopted calling upon the Government to help in matters of short time and benefits. These resolutions were sympathetically received, and in October, 1914, they were favorably acted upon by the cabinet through the board of trade.

CONCILIATION AGREEMENT CONTINUED.

On October 1, 1914, a special agreement was made between the railways and the railway men's unions, providing that the old agreement for conciliation should be continued, subject to termination by the men on six weeks' notice—that is, the trade-unions practically agreed to subordinate the interests of organized labor to the demands of a nation at war. Important demands pending when war was declared, and waived by the agreement of October 1, 1914, were:

1. The eight-hour day.
2. An advance of 5s. per week.
3. A guaranteed day and a guaranteed week, exclusive of Sunday duty.

FIRST AGREEMENT FOR WAR BONUS.

February 13, 1915, an agreement was reached through negotiation by the railway companies and the men's representatives, under which the principal roads agreed to pay a war bonus to men of 18 years or over, as follows: Three shillings a week to men whose standard rate of wages is under 30s. and 2s. to those whose standard rate of wages is 30s. or more. The agreement provided for all men "engaged in the manipulation of traffic," whether members of unions or not.

It was definitely understood that the war bonus was not an ordinary advance in wages, but was to terminate at the end of the war. Twenty-five per cent of the increased expense was to fall on the companies and 75 per cent be charged to operating expenses, and thus fall on the Government. For the Government had undertaken to pay to the stockholders the same sum each year as the prewar earnings in 1913.

In June, 1915, a bonus of 1s. 6d. was provided for employees under 18 years of age.

INCREASED COST OF LIVING.

Because of increased cost of living the war bonus has been increased several times through negotiations between the unions and the railway executive committee, with the approval of the Government.

SECOND GENERAL INCREASE.

On October 16, 1915, the bonus was increased for all men above 18 to 5s. per week, for men under 18 to 2s. 6d. At that time the men agreed not to make any further demand for increases. But this agreement was waived by the railway companies in September, 1916, largely upon the ground that the Government had not kept the cost of living at a reasonable figure, and a new agreement was made, increasing the bonus to 10s. per week for men 18 years and over, and to 5s. for men under 18. The president of the board of trade conceded that the cost of living had increased since July, 1914, 25 per cent in July, 1915; 30 per cent in September, 1915; 35 per cent in December, 1915; 40 per cent in March, 1916; and 45 to 50 per cent in June, 1916.

At the rate of the bonus of September, 1916, the increased cost to the Government is $70,000,000 annually, only 6¼ per cent falling upon the stockholders of the railways.

It was soon after agreed that men in railway shops should receive a bonus of 5s. a week, boys similarly employed, 2s. 6d.; women, 3s.; and girls, 1s. 6d.

THIRD GENERAL INCREASE.

In April, 1917, a third general increase was granted, so that the bonuses totaled as follows:

In traffic departments.		s.	d.
Men, 18 years and over	per week	15	0
Boys, under 18	do	7	6
Women, 18 years and over	do	5	6
Girls, under 18	do	3	0
In shops.
Men, 19 years and over	per week	10	0
Boys, under 19	do	5	0
Women, 18 years and over	do	2	6
Girls, under 18	do	1	3

TOTAL EXPENSE TO GOVERNMENT.

The total war bonus to railway employees is estimated at present rates to amount to $90,000,000 annually, all but 4¾ per cent borne by the Government.

DILUTION OF LABOR.

From the beginning of the war the unions have insisted that women employed to fill the places of men should be paid the minimum rate for men in similar positions. In August, 1915, this demand was met by the railway companies, together with an agreement that the employment of women should not prejudice the reemployment of men at the close of the war nor the general question of the employment of women.

GENERAL ATTITUDE OF EMPLOYEES.

The unions of railway men, through their executive committees, have acted throughout the war in a patriotic and reasonable manner, basing their claims to advances in wages or bonuses on the increased cost of living, and not on their power to prevent the operation of railroads. They have realized that a strike would be a strike against the Nation, not against the companies. They have in this way obtained a very substantial advance in wages, at the same time retaining the good will of the public generally.

MUTUAL CONCILIATION.

There have been no railway strikes in England since the war began. The conduct of the railways and the conduct of the men has been in the public interest, with every indication of conciliation and good feeling on both sides. This desirable condition can be attributed to but one cause—that is, the feeling of the men that their sacrifices are made for the public welfare and not to swell the profits of their employers. That this is a sound deduction is plain when we consider the hundreds of strikes in private plants where profits are not controlled.

AUTHORITY FOR FOREGOING.

This sketch of English railways in war time is given to place the Senate and the country in possession of the main facts in the case. It represents no original research of mine. It is hardly more than a summary of one of the volumes of the British Industrial Experience During the War, presented by me to the Senate June 29, 1917, and ordered printed by the Senate September 11, 1917.

This manuscript was prepared and edited by Robert and Katherine Barrett, distinguished citizens of New Hampshire, who worked in collaboration with John F. Bass, the noted war correspondent, and his brother, Robert P. Bass, formerly governor of New Hampshire. The entire work was done without expense to the Government. I regret that the volume has not yet been printed, so that it could be available to the Senate in the present emergency.

The volume on Railroad Transportation, which forms the basis of my remarks, was prepared by Mr. Leland Olds under the direction of Mr. W. Jett Lauck and the editors in chief.

Mr. WATSON. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question. I was out of the Chamber a part of the time, and unfortunately I did not hear all the Senator's remarks. I should like to ask the Senator whether he incorporated in his statement the number of miles of railroad to which he has alluded and to which this system refers?

Mr. HOLLIS. I did not. I am not able to give it.

Mr. WATSON. And the number of employees.

Mr. HOLLIS. I am not able to give that, but I can state that it is approximately 600,000, of whom 100,000 are now women.

Mr. WATSON. There are 600,000 employees?

Mr. HOLLIS. There were approximately 600,000 when the war started. Twenty-five per cent of those have gone to the colors. That would leave 450,000. One hundred thousand women have been added and the rest have been taken from men who were not capable of bearing arms.

Mr. WATSON. Does the Senator know how many miles of railroad were operated?

Mr. HOLLIS. I can not give that.

Mr. NORRIS. May I ask the Senator a question before he takes his seat?

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Can the Senator state what compensation the Government of England is paying to the railroads, or what it has agreed to pay?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes; the war bonus to employees runs from 1 shilling for girls to 15 shillings for men.

Mr. NORRIS. I heard that statement; but that is not the question. I want to know what is the compensation paid to the owners of the stock of the railroads.

Mr. HOLLIS. I stated that the owners are receiving the same earnings that they received in the year 1913.

Mr. NORRIS. They took that one year?

Mr. HOLLIS. That one year.

Mr. NORRIS. That was the last full year before the beginning of the war?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes; that is correct.

COUNCIL OF NATIONAL DEFENSE (S. DOC. NO. 156).

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BECKHAM in the chair) laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress approved August 29, 1916, establishing the Council of National Defense and providing for the appointment of an Advisory Commission to the council, I transmit herewith the first annual report of the council, the Advisory Commission, and the subordinate agencies of both bodies for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1917.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, 4 January, 1918.

CUSTOMS-COLLECTION DISTRICTS (H. DOC. NO. 753).

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The sundry civil act approved August 1, 1914, contained the following provision, viz:

"The President is authorized from time to time, as the exigencies of the service may require, to rearrange, by consolidation or otherwise, the several customs-collection districts and to discontinue ports of entry by abolishing the same or establishing others in their stead: Provided, That the whole number of customs-collection districts, ports of entry, or either of them, shall at no time be made to exceed those now established and authorized except as the same may hereafter be provided by law: Provided further, That hereafter the collector of customs of each customs-collection district shall be officially designated by the number of the district for which he is appointed and not by the name of the port where the headquarters are situated, and the President is authorized from time to time to change the location of the headquarters in any customs-collection district as the needs of the service may require: And provided further, That the President shall, at the beginning of each regular session, submit to Congress a statement of all acts, if any, done hereunder and the reasons therefor."

Pursuant to the requirement of the third proviso to the said provision, I have to state that by Executive order dated January 3, 1917, the port of entry at Ludington, Michigan, in customs-collection district No. 38, of which Detroit is the headquarters port, was abolished for the reason that the volume and character of the business at Ludington did not warrant its continuance as a port.

By Executive order dated January 23, 1917, the port of entry at Corry, Pennsylvania, in customs-collection district No. 41, of which Cleveland, Ohio, is the headquarters port, was abolished for the reason that the volume of business at Corry did not warrant its continuance as a port.

By Executive order dated June 6, 1917, effective on and after July 1, 1917, the port of entry at Lubec, Maine, in customs-collection district No. 1, of which Portland is the headquarters port, was abolished as a separate port and consolidated with Eastport, Maine, for the reason that the business theretofore transacted at Lubec could as well be conducted at Eastport.

By Executive order dated September 7, 1917, effective October 1, 1917, customs-collection district No. 23, of which Laredo was the headquarters port, and district No. 25, of which Eagle Pass, Texas, was the headquarters port, were abolished and a new district No. 23 created with headquarters at San Antonio, Texas.

Districts Nos. 22, of which Galveston is the headquarters port, and No. 24, of which El Paso is the headquarters port, were enlarged. These changes were made in order to insure better administration of the customs laws and to lessen the expenses.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, 4 January, 1918.

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I desire to ask that the Committee on Military Affairs may be allowed to sit during the sessions of the Senate. They are now engaged in holding hearings and it is quite inconvenient to proceed with these hearings without obtaining this permission from the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Oregon will be complied with.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in connection with the request made by the Senator from Oregon, I am going to venture to express the hope, inasmuch as there are several committees of investigation conducting inquiries that are of great importance, that the Senate may adjourn over until Monday at the conclusion of to-day's business. Of course, if the unfinished business is to be taken up and discussed to-day, the suggested adjournment ought not to be taken, but I have been informed that the unfinished business will probably go over until Monday.

Mr. MARTIN. I am trying to find the Vice President now to test the accuracy of it, but it has been suggested that the Serbian mission are to be received in the Senate to-morrow. If that is the case, we shall have to adjourn until to-morrow.

Mr. GALLINGER. I had overlooked that fact, and hence the Senate should be in session to-morrow.

Mr. BORAH. Do I understand that a motion is about to be made to adjourn until to-morrow?

Mr. MARTIN. No motion has been made so far as I know. The leasing bill, which the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] has in charge, will have to be taken up by the Senate to see if anyone wants to proceed to discuss it. If the Senate is not occupied with that, I see no reason why we should not adjourn until to-morrow or until Monday if the Serbians are not to be received in the Senate to-morrow. I have just learned that there are other reasons besides receiving the Serbians for a session to-morrow, so that when the Senate adjourns it will have to adjourn until to-morrow.

Mr. BORAH. I understand we have agreed to vote upon the leasing bill on Monday. I am of the opinion that it will take all the time from now until then to get at some of the facts with reference to that bill which are developing interestingly. I certainly do not want the Senate to adjourn until at least we have started in to develop the situation.

Mr. MARTIN. There is no desire to adjourn as long as anyone wants to proceed with the leasing bill. Since I addressed the inquiry to the Chair a few moments ago I have ascertained that it has been arranged that the Serbian mission will be received in the Senate to-morrow at 12.30 o'clock. So we shall have to adjourn until the usual hour, 12 o'clock, to-morrow.

STANDARDIZATION OF WAGES.

Mr. KING. I offer a resolution and ask that it may be read and lie upon the table. I desire to submit a few remarks in support of the resolution before I move its reference to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 174), as follows:

Whereas the several departments, boards, agencies, and contractors having in charge the construction of ships, cantonments, munitions, and other work having relation to the war are separately entering the labor market and are competing against each other in the wages offered for the employment of the laborers severally required by them in the prosecution of Government work, as a result of which employees are constantly quitting one branch of work to take up employment for higher wages in another, this breaking the continuity of Government construction and subjecting the same to recurring interruption with each increase of wages offered in such competition; and

Whereas the competition between departments and agencies of the Government for the employment of labor for necessary war construction has caused a condition wherein the cost of Government work is constantly mounting to the detriment of the Government, to the impairment of its revenues, and the increase of its funded debt; and

Whereas it is claimed that efforts are being made and plans contemplated by some who benefit by such condition to maintain and make permanent the same, to prevent proper and legitimate increase in the output of labor to meet the present emergency, and by conspiracy and otherwise to prevent any correction of such conditions by the establishment of normal wage rates or by the procurement of other labor at fair and just wage rates to meet the needs and requirements of the Government; and

Whereas it is claimed and reported that the competition of separate agencies of the Government for the procurement and employment of labor has unsettled conditions of labor and wage rates generally throughout the country; that great inequality exists in the matter of wages in the different parts of the country in the same trade and craft; that the labor situation is demoralized; that strikes are stimulated; and that industry is being dislocated and disturbed by constantly changing wage rates, unsettled condition of employment, mounting costs, enhanced prices of commodoties, and fluctuating conditions in exchange and commerce, operating together in a vicious system of recurring expansion, all of which renders unstable the industrial processes and enterprises of the country: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Education and Labor be, and it is hereby, directed to inquire into the subject of wages having to do directly or indirectly with Government work; to report upon the advisability of establishing standards of wages for laborers employed in such work; and to further report upon the possibility and expediency of legislation looking to the standardization of wages and the stabilization of industry and labor conditions in the country during the pendency of the war.

Mr. KING. I ask that the resolution may lie upon the table for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will lie on the table and be printed.

HEADS OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. HARDWICK. I offer a resolution, which I ask to have read and that it may go over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 175), as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to inform the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interest, by what warrant or authority of law the several heads of the executive departments hold their offices.

Mr. HARDWICK. At a later date I intend to address the Senate on the resolution. In the meantime I ask that it may lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. For the present the resolution will lie on the table and be printed.

MINING OF COAL, ETC., ON THE PUBLIC DOMAIN.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 2812, the unfinished business, be laid before the Senate and proceeded with.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2812) to encourage and promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, potassium, and sodium on the public domain.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, what is the status of the measure? Is there any pending amendment before the Senate? I understood that the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] offered an amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not think there is a pending amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Idaho that I did offer an amendment on page 15 of the bill by striking out from line 6, beginning with the word "if," after the word "discovery," down to and including the word "claim," in line 11. I withdrew that amendment until it was decided as to just what amendment would be made in section 2 of the bill.

Mr. BORAH. Has section 2 been disposed of?

Mr. SMOOT. No; not yet. I will state to the Senator that on page 15 there was one amendment that I offered which was only a minor one, striking out the word "such," in line 2, and inserting the word "a." Of course, that was only a verbal amendment. The other amendment I withdrew until the final disposition of the amendment proposed to section 2.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if the committee amendments have all been disposed of?

Mr. PITTMAN. I think they have all been disposed of.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I want to direct attention to sections 16 and 17 of the bill, rather with a view of getting an understanding as to what the committee understands those provisions to mean. Some of the provisions are a little difficult for me to understand by reason of the fact, perhaps, that I am not entirely familiar with the actual physical facts which the provisions are sought to cover. Section 16 reads:

SEC. 16. That upon relinquishment to the United States within 90 days from the date of this act or within 90 days after final denial or withdrawal of application for patent, of any claim or subdivision thereof asserted under the mining laws prior to July 3, 1910, to any unpatented oil or gas lands included in any order of withdrawal, the claimant or his successor in interest shall be entitled to a lease for each asserted mineral location of 100 acres or less or any subdivision thereof upon which such claim is based and upon which said claimant, his predecessors in interest, or those claiming through or under him, have, prior to the date of this act, drilled one or more producing oil or gas wells—

As I understand it, that provision is to the effect that the question of title may turn, and does turn, exclusively upon the fact of having drilled one or more producing oil or gas wells upon the property.

Mr. PITTMAN. And having asserted title; I mean having initiated the claim prior to the withdrawal under the act of Congress.

Mr. BORAH. What does the word "asserted" there mean? Does it mean a mere oral contention upon the part of some one, or does it mean that the party shall have complied with the laws of the land or the statutes with reference to making mineral locations?

Mr. PITTMAN. The committee thought that the words "under the mining laws" qualified the word "asserted," and meant that the claim had been located, as we say in the West, in accordance with the mining laws.

Mr. BORAH. The word "asserted," it seems to me, is a rather uncertain and wide-ranging term.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will suggest to the Senator from Idaho that the reason the word "asserted" was used was because the Department of Justice strenuously objected to the word "initiated," which had been used in other acts prior to this proposed act.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly; but if we use the word "asserted," there is no limitation, there is no definition, there is no guide as to what it really means. It is a word that has never been used in the mining laws; there is no precedent for it. I can understand a man sitting in a well-furnished and properly heated room thousands of miles away and asserting that he has a mining claim or a location in Wyoming; and I think he would be perfectly safe under this law in not going any further than to merely assert that he has a mining claim.

I think the use of that word is unfortunate, because it leaves room for all kinds of latitudinous construction. However, I call attention to the further fact—the claimant or his successor in interest shall be entitled to a lease for each asserted mineral location of 160 acres or less or any subdivision thereof upon which such claim is based and upon which said claimant, his predecessors in interest, or those claiming through or under him, have, prior to the date of this act, drilled one or more producing oil or gas wells—

There is no limitation upon the amount of land which the party may claim, provided he has asserted title to it and has followed it up by drilling a well.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho permit an interruption?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I desire to ask a question for my own guidance. Like the Senator from Idaho, I do not like that language; I do not know why, but I can not get at the exact meaning of the word; but does it not mean in the ultimate that anybody asserting a claim—and that is done by merely saying "I have a claim"—no matter if he got it, as they originally have in many of these cases from gentlemen who are in the meat business in Chicago—a dummy entry—if on any 160 acres of land, the Standard Oil Co. or any other company, or you or I, have actually drilled a well and found oil, no matter how fraudulent the inception of our claim was, if we assert we have it and have found oil we get title under this bill?

Mr. BORAH. I think that is true.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. And it ought not to be.

Mr. BORAH. I think that is probably the construction of the language.

Mr. President, suppose we should find this condition of affairs to have existed in the oil regions of Wyoming: Suppose that it should be shown upon the facts that independent locators had gone into that territory, had located oil wells, and had initiated such proceedings as were required by law in order to finally ripen their claim into a title, and that thereafter other people had come in and had forcibly driven them out, or had through legal processes stayed their proceedings and stopped their work, and had themselves actually taken physical possession and drilled wells upon that territory, then we would adjudicate the title in favor of the jumper, adjudicate the title in favor of the ones who had defied the law as against the man who had in good faith initiated his title. As I understand the situation, that is the state of facts that exists in Wyoming; and I ask the Senator in charge of the bill to consider the proposition that with the broad language of the mere assertion of title, the physical possession, and the sinking of a well, a party may acquire an unlimited amount of acreage by mere physical force or by fraud. I am sure the Senator in charge of the bill does not intend anything of that kind, but I can see no other construction to it.

I want also to say, Mr. President, that I am reliably informed that this particular section was drawn to cover a particular condition of affairs. The physical facts are about as I have stated them.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not know whether the Senator means to intimate that this was drawn for the purpose of aiding any particular person in any contest.

Mr. BORAH. No; what I mean to say is that there is a certain state of facts existing, a certain physical condition obtaining, and that it was an effort to cover that physical condition; in other words, that the committee were not drawing a general law but were drawing a law which was proposed to apply to a particular state of facts. That is what I understand.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, in order that there may be no mistake about the particular state of facts, and that it may be clear that this proposed law has nothing to do with the state of facts to which the Senator has referred in Wyoming, I want to say that the state of facts is this: If we refer to a location of a mining claim as a foundation of this preferential right, then there must be a discovery, for, as the Senator from Idaho knows—and it is not necessary for me to refer to it—a discovery is essential to a valid mining location. There were very few discoveries made prior to the withdrawals; but believing that the first withdrawal was void and contrary to law, and being so advised by their attorneys, a great many people continued to sink oil wells. They had initiated a right by location, as we understand it in the West, and we have been using the term "initiated" all along; but, unfortunately, the Department of Justice in the prosecution of a number of cases has construed the word "initiated" to embrace discovery.

Then they held—and I think some of the lower courts have held with them—that a right is not initiated to a mining claim until discovery is made. Consequently, if we use the word "initiated" in the sense used by the Department of Justice, there will be no remedy to anyone, no matter how just his cause may be. That is the reason we tried to get away from the word "initiated."

What we really mean is this: If one in good faith has located a mining claim prior to the withdrawal under the congressional act of July 3, 1910, has done everything except make a discovery, and then, subsequent to the withdrawal, proceeded, undisturbed by the Government, and found oil, then that person will not have the land, but upon surrendering all claim of title will have a preference right to lease under the terms of the bill. That is what we mean.

Mr. BORAH. Well, Mr. President, I did not mean to be understood as intimating that the Senator or any member of the committee was seeking to draw a bill for the purpose of doing an injustice to anyone. What I meant to say, and what I did say, was that, as I understand, sections 16 and 17 were put into this bill by reason of a certain state of physical facts which exist in the Western States, and in Wyoming particularly, and that it was supposed, of course, that they were covering a situation in justice to all parties. What I am contending is that, instead of covering it in justice to all parties, it is calculated to work a great injustice, and I think that the use of the word "asserted," a term unknown to the mining laws of the country, without limitation or any established definition in the courts, is unfortunate. I suggest, in view of the fact that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] has come in, who is very familiar with the mining laws and conditions in the West, that if we leave in the word "asserted" and leave in the provision with reference to drilling, to wit, "drilled one or more producing oil or gas wells," we will leave the law in such condition that anyone who has made a mere naked, general assertion to a claim, whether it be bona fide, whether it has been in compliance with the law, whether it has been according to established precedents in initiating mining claims, or whether it be anything else than a mere naked, general assertion, and has followed it up by the drilling of a well, regardless of how he got upon the land, whether it was through ousting some one else or by force and fraud, will be given a preference right to an unlimited amount of acreage. There is no other construction to be placed upon it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator to what page and line of the bill he refers?

Mr. BORAH. I was dealing with section 16 and referring particularly to that portion of it which begins in line 17. I will read the entire section again:

SEC. 16. That upon relinquishment to the United States within 90 days from the date of this act or within 90 days after final denial or withdrawal of application for patent, of any claim or subdivision thereof asserted under the mining laws prior to July 3, 1910, to any unpatented oil or gas lands included in any order of withdrawal, the claimant or his successor in interest shall be entitled to a lease for each asserted mineral location—

I venture to say that the Senator never, in all his wide range of experience in the West, has heard that word used in connection with acquiring title to the public domain.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to the Senator that I am not familiar with that provision. It was not part of the amendment which I offered.

Mr. BORAH. I know that.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I offered an amendment with relation to coal lands. We considered this provision, however, and I do not know that the phraseology was criticized at that time.

Mr. BORAH. Then it goes on to say—for each asserted mineral location of 160 acres or less or any subdivision thereof upon which such claim is based and upon which said claimant, his predecessors in interest, or those claiming through or under him, have, prior to the date of this act, drilled one or more producing oil or gas wells, such lease to be upon a royalty—

And so forth.

There is no limit, I maintain, to the amount of acreage to which he is entitled in the way of preference if he has succeeded in getting upon the ground and sinking a well.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. All of this land is withdrawn land; none of it is subject to location now.

Mr. BORAH. I understand that.

Mr. PITTMAN. All of it, if it is utilized at all, must be utilized under the provisions of this bill. It will be leased to somebody. The committee thought that it was not only in the interest of the Government to lease it to the man who actually had a well on it and was operating it, but that a man who had expended the amount of money necessary to test the ground and see if there was oil there was entitled to a lease in preference to somebody who had spent nothing. That was the theory the committee had.

Mr. BORAH. Ordinarily that would be true; but, as I understand the facts, Mr. President, they are something like these, that a number of independent locators went into the territory prior to the withdrawal orders on the part of ex-President Taft; that they had made locations; that is, they had done what was necessary to be done in compliance with the mineral laws up to that time; that when the withdrawal came along they in a certain sense respected the withdrawal; that, on the other hand, another company, entirely disrespecting and disregarding the withdrawal, entered upon this territory, took possession of it under actions of injunction and otherwise, obtained actual physical possession, ousted the independent oil locators who had done their part in so far as they could, sunk wells, and that the effect of this bill is to give them the preference right to that which they had acquired in defiance of the notice of the Government—because I do not contend that it was actually a valid withdrawal—and under the cover of the right which they secured for a time under temporary injunctions and also in some instances by actual force.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, the Senator is mistaken about that. If he will continue reading the following section will correct his error.

Mr. BORAH. Am I mistaken as to the facts which I have stated?

Mr. PITTMAN. I think so. Let me see if the Senator is mistaken; I hope he is. Listen to this language:

And any person who at the time of any withdrawal order heretofore made was such bona fide occupant or claimant of oil or gas bearing lands within such withdrawn area, other than lands reserved for the use of the Navy, and who has performed all acts necessary to a valid mining location thereof, except to make a discovery, if the claim was initiated within less than five years prior to the withdrawal, and such claimant had performed a reasonable amount of work preparatory and essential to the sinking of a well or wells, and who because of and in obedience to such order desisted from the prosecution of work for the development of such claim, shall have a preference right to lease the same under the provisions of this act.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, that would be all right if it were not for the fact that this five years just about divides the line between those who got in afterwards and the fellows who got in first.

Mr. PITTMAN. Then, as I understand, the only objection the Senator has is to the five-year period.

Mr. BORAH. No. I think myself that there could be a provision put in there which would remedy the situation; but I will tell the Senator what I object to. I feel certain that the Senator would have the same opinion if he understood the facts as I understand them. I may be in error about the facts, but I object to the Congress legislating out men who went there in good faith and respected the notice of the Governme: ', and who were afterwards ousted in one way or another, and legislating in those who went there in violation of the Government's notice, who have taken possession either by writs of injunction or otherwise, and who have actually ousted those who went there in the first instance in good faith.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, the committee has exactly the same view as the Senator from Idaho, and it attempted in the section I have just read to give a preference right to those who obeyed the order, whether it was legal or not.

As to the five years, the committee thought there ought to be some time fixed within which there should be a location made. In other words, the Senator from Idaho would not want some one to come in and say: "Fifty years ago I made a location on this tract of land, and I did $100 worth of work every year." Fifty years is carrying it back too far. Thirty years is carrying it back too far. It ought to be within a time when people would know the facts or could ascertain the facts.

We took up this matter with some of the gentlemen from Wyoming, because we wanted to get at that fact. We first agreed that three years would include all bona fide claims that were located in that withdrawn area prior to the withdrawal of 1909. It developed later on that possibly it did not include all. Consequently, on the floor here the other day, we accepted an amendment making it five years instead of three years.

There is not any disposition to foreclose bona fide locators who obeyed the law, whether that law is legal or not. That is what the committee has tried to do, and there is no doubt in my mind that this bill does give a prior right to the very people the Senator from Idaho is discussing, provided their locations were initiated within five years prior to 1910. If that time is not long enough, if Senators have facts to show that there are bona fide locations that were made more than five years before, of course that is another question.

Mr. BORAH. I can only say that I have this state of facts: I have facts given to me by men who live there, who are upon the ground, and who are claiming to be entirely familiar with all the facts with reference to the development of these oil fields in Wyoming.

Mr. PITTMAN. How many years does the Senator think would be sufficient to cover it?

Mr. BORAH. I would not want to say without further consultation with those parties.

Mr. PITTMAN. I have no doubt that if the parties with whom the Senator has talked have an idea that this limitation does not include all of them, the committee would be very glad to accept any amendment of that kind. It certainly thought that the five years would cover every case.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator understands that I am not attacking the committee. I assumed that the committee was trying to get at the same thing that I wish.

Mr. PITTMAN. Exactly; the committee was trying to do that.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think the length of time is of so much importance in this measure as the effect that section 16 will have upon the oil lands in Wyoming; nor is the time altogether a remedy for the evils that will follow the passage of this bill, if I am correctly informed as to conditions in Wyoming. In other words, if section 16 passes as it is now written, the Standard Oil Co. will control at least four-fifths of all the oil in Wyoming, or at least 20,000 acres of oil land in that State. That does not come from the five-year or the three-year limit. It comes from the fact that the restrictions of section 33 are not applicable to the persons whose titles are validated under this section.

In other words, in section 33 of the bill we undertake to place certain restrictions upon validating title to any person making the entry, but that section does not apply to section 16 of the bill, and therefore all of the asserted mining locations made under this section, providing the parties have drilled wells, go to the parties who assert a claim to the lands, no matter how many acres so located or, in other words, there is no limit of area provided for. That being the case, I am informed by men who live in Wyoming and have been in the oil fields from the very beginning, and own claims there now themselves, that if section 16 passes as it is written the Standard Oil Co. can operate four-fifths of all the oil lands in Wyoming.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Idaho yielded to me.

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. I have received what is called a brief on this bill, written by some lawyer in Oklahoma, which states the facts that the Senator from Utah has just stated. I do not know who this lawyer is or where he got his facts, and I do not take for granted statements of that kind or character.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator wishes, I can put into the RECORD a dozen letters from men who live in Wyoming.

Mr. PITTMAN. I want to state that I realize that there is litigation going on in Wyoming over oil claims. There is similar litigation in California; and this committee for four years has been trying, as the Senator from Utah knows, to get a bill that will satisfy everybody. I do not think it is possible. Nobody in my State is interested in this remedial legislation, and personally I very often feel tempted to fight against any remedial legislation, and strike it all out, and let it go to the courts; but we ought to try to do something fundamentally just, and that is what this committee is trying to do.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Nevada has made a suggestion that appeals very much and very strongly to me. I will say to the Senator that I received a brief on this subject, I presume the one to which he refers, since I came into the Senate Chamber; but the gentlemen from whom I received my facts are residents of the State of Wyoming, and I have every reason to believe that they are entirely responsible in what they say. If I were called upon, however, to draw and insert in this bill a provision which would do justice to all parties and not do injustice to any one, I could not do it upon the state of facts that has been given to me. I could only approximate it, perhaps. The only way to settle these controversies is by the institutions and tribunals which are created for that purpose, where the bona fides and the good faith of these parties can be determined.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. Unfortunately that can not be done always by the courts. The courts have recognized time and again, in deciding against claimants, that they had a moral equity but no legal equity. They have held that these men, being advised by their attorneys that the Taft withdrawal order was void and that the lower courts had sustained that opinion, might be expected, as sensible men of good judgment, to go ahead and spend all this money in the development of oil lands, but that as a matter of fact, not having made a discovery before the Taft withdrawal, although they had commenced work prior to that time, their claims were void because a discovery was necessary before the withdrawal.

Those men, the courts themselves have stated, have some excuse. Why, I am satisfied that such an able attorney as the Senator from Idaho possibly has advised his clients, or at least his friends, that in his opinion the order was void.

Mr. BORAH. I have so stated on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. PITTMAN. I know it was the consensus of opinion of the ablest mining attorneys throughout the western country. On the faith of that opinion men expended their money. They discovered oil that was not known to exist before. They enriched this whole country at their individual expense, and yet legally they have no rights at all. They are out. Now, the Government is probably going to decide on a leasing policy. If it does decide on a leasing policy the question is, If you are going to lease to A or to B on the same terms, and B has discovered the very thing you are going to lease and has expended hundreds of thousands of dollars in discovering it, is it not justice in some way to compensate that man for that work?

That is the equitable idea involved in the whole matter. I realize that there is a whole lot of trouble involved in this remedial legislation, and I very frequently feel, as does the Senator from Idaho, like giving up trying to do justice in regard to passed acts and simply passing a law for the future.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Idaho if I may ask the Senator from Nevada a question?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I am seeking light.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator from Nevada if the wording of section 16 is not virtually the wording that was agreed to by the committee when the question of relief for the California oil industry was under consideration—that is, the locations that were made in naval reserve No. 2?

Mr. PITTMAN. I think that matter was the matter under discussion at the time that wording was adopted. I admit that the committee has had very little discussion with regard to the Wyoming situation. In fact, I know nothing about it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if the Senator from Idaho will excuse me——

Mr. BORAH. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand that section 16 provides the relief the California people desired; it covers their case exactly; every locator stands upon the same basis. But, unfortunately, the oil people of Wyoming feel that the wording of this section will be a death blow to many of the locators of oil claims in that State; not that individual locators in Wyoming will receive a lease under this section, but they will have to depend upon the Standard Oil Co. for the refining of their product. The information that comes to me may be wrong, but, as I state, I have received at least a dozen letters, and I think more, from citizens of Wyoming, men whom I know, men who have located oil claims, who have lived in Wyoming, who have worked the oil fields of Wyoming, who are interested in Wyoming and in the development of the oil in the State, and they tell me that the statement I have made in relation to the effect of section 16 is correct. Personally I do not know whether it is or not; but I do know that if such were the case the Senator from Nevada would want an amendment to section 16 that would prevent it. I know him well enough to know that.

Mr. PITTMAN. With the courtesy of the Senator from Idaho, I will state that there is no question about that, so far as I am concerned, or any other member of the committee.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit a suggestion, I do not know the facts well enough to cast an intelligent vote on this bill. Like the Senator from Idaho, I am seeking light. While I am a member of the Committee on Public Lands, my duties at the time this particular measure was before it held me elsewhere.

If it is true that the condition in those segregated lands known as the naval reserve in California, about which all of us heard so much before the committee, is so different from the condition in Wyoming, I wonder if it would not be possible to let section 16, if that meets the California conditions perfectly, apply to the California conditions, and see if out of the real facts surrounding the Wyoming situation we may not, in the discussion of this bill, develop such facts as to make the law apply satisfactorily to those people?

As the Senator says—I have no hesitation in referring to anything written to me—I have one leter from Cheyenne, Wyo., signed by Mr. Robert G. Porter, secretary of the Rocky Mountain Division of the Roxana Petroleum Co. of Oklahoma, in which he says that this provision hands over absolutely to the Standard Oil Co. the greater proportion of the oil fields of Wyoming. I do not know anything about it. I know that no member of the Committee on Public Lands wants to hand over to the Standard Oil Co. anything except what it deserves. If it does not deserve it, no member of the committee would think for a moment of permitting this bill to have that effect.

I was only suggesting here to those better acquainted with the facts than I am whether we might not meet the California situation with section 16, if it fits it, and if the Wyoming situation is so entirely different, whether we might not apply a proper remedy to the conditions in Wyoming.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator that Arizona needs as much relief as California does. I will say to the Senator from Nevada that I received this morning a letter from Wyoming, stating that a committee is on the way, and expects to be here to-morrow, to present the Wyoming oil locators' side of this controversy. I judge from the letter that they have suggestions to offer so as to cover the Wyoming situation. As the bill will not pass until Monday, anyhow, I certainly shall take time, if they come to my office, to listen to what they have to say as to suggested amendments to this section.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I think this committee for four years has sought light. We have had about 25 or 30 hearings during that time on this subject. The doors have always been open. This is about the fourth bill we have had. We have had remedial legislation in all of them. I am always willing to listen, as the Senator from Utah is, and I will listen again; and while I have received some protests against this, so far as Wyoming is concerned, I have received no suggestions as to amendments from any of the Wyoming people. I do know that there are two sides to the thing in Wyoming, as there are everywhere else. In fact, there were some people who came here and wanted us to put in the bill the decision of one of the lower courts, and say that that should be the law, to avoid the necessity of an appeal. I might say that that did not appeal to any member of the committee. It was not even suggested.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. But I think the letter I have received might give the Senator some light, for it closes by saying:

In view of these facts—

That is, that the Standard Oil Co. was going to get all the valuable oil lands in Wyoming—

In view of these facts, which this company is ready to substantiate, I urge you to support such amendment of the bill as will give non-Standard Oil companies an even chance, and, failing in having such an amendment passed, to oppose the passage of the bill.

Mr. PITTMAN. Has the Senator from Arizona an amendment with him that will give non-Standard Oil companies an equal chance?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That was all the suggestion made to me. They did not suggest what amendment should be made.

Mr. BORAH. Of course these people assumed that we, being here in the business of legislation, know the kind of an amendment that will give them relief.

Mr. PITTMAN. There are very few special pleaders here.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator in charge of the bill that if the statement of facts which has been given to me this morning by residents of Wyoming—men who are here now and ready to be heard and anxious to be heard, and will have their amendments ready as soon as they can have time to present them to some one who may see fit to present them here—if the state of facts which they have given to me is correct, we are legislating out a great number of bona fide locators, and it so happens that those men whom we are legislating out are non-Standard Oil men. If, on the other hand, the bill goes through as it is, it will give peculiar and particular protection to the Midwest Refining Co., which, as I am informed, is a subsidiary of the Standard Oil Co., and will protect their property without any further litigation at all.

I need not say that I know that if the committee had those facts the committee would not indorse this measure. I think it is up to us to get those facts and have them here before we pass the bill. The men are here on the ground ready to give the facts, and I would be greatly disappointed if they did not give the facts in such a way as to impress those in charge of the bill that there should be a radical amendment to sections 16 and 17 and also section 39.

Mr. PITTMAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho if he has any suggestion to make with regard to amending the paragraph that I read, giving priority to bona fide locators prior to withdrawal who hac desisted from further work during the withdrawal by reason of such withdrawal?

Mr. BORAH. On page 15?

Mr. PITTMAN. On page 15. Have you any suggestion to make as to an amendment to that proviso, which was intended to take care of what the Senator now has in mind?

Mr. BORAH. The only suggestion I have to make at the present time in regard to it, as I carry the facts given to me, is as to the term of years. I would not want to commit myself, because I am proceeding upon a state of facts given to me within the last two hours and I am of the opinion that that could be remedied by a change of the year.

Mr. PITTMAN. That was the object of that provision. It was to protect bona fide locators who made their locations prior to the withdrawal of 1909, but who made no discovery, and who desisted from work leading to a discovery by reason of such order. It was intended to protect the very class of locators the Senator has in mind. As I said, five years was put on here in the Senate the other day. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] offered the amendment for five years after talking with Mr. Mitchell, one of the Wyoming locators, who is complaining that he may lose rights under section 15. I assumed the matter was in a shape satisfactory to him.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I could not suggest the actual number of years at this time, but I will be able to do so before the bill is taken up to-morrow morning. I frankly concede that I am proceeding upon a state of facts which I have not had time to investigate thoroughly or to master thoroughly, but I thought it worth while to call it to the attention of the Senator, and I shall later undertake to give the facts as they were related to me by this committee.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to ask the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] a question. He has entered the Chamber. Do I understand that the Senator from California desires a reconsideration of the amendment in section 16, which struck out, on line 15, the words "or within naval petroleum reserve No. 2," and on page 13, beginning with line 15, "Provided further," and also the next proviso down to and including the word "Wyoming," in line 24? I will say to the Senator those were the amendments offered by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON].

Mr. PHELAN. I have no reason for any change of the view that I expressed prior to the recess, that whereas I was opposed to the elimination of those words which would bar the owners in naval reserve No. 2 from the benefit of the act, still it seemed to be conceded by all interested in the passage of a bill for the development of the resources outside of the naval reserve that they could afford to wait, and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], who is not present, promised at the beginning of this session to propose his amendment. I do not believe he has prepared his amendment. I spoke to him yesterday. When he proposes the amendment, I think it is going to take the form of a separate bill, and that would be a wise and proper time for me to express my views on behalf of those who are interested in the State of California. But as the bill stands now amended, with the elimination of those provisions, I am ready to support it. There is no opposition from California. They only want a larger area included, so far as I understand the situation.

Mr. SMOOT. The only reason why I asked the Senator the question was this, that the provisions of section 16 were written to take care of the oil locations in naval reserve No. 2 in California. The wording of it was drawn in such a way that it covered all such cases. The provision affecting naval reserve No. 2 is stricken out, and the only question in my mind now is whether the wording of section 16 will cover the Wyoming locations. Many locators are fearful it will not. That is why I asked the Senator the question as to what attitude he was going to take in relation to this amendment.

Mr. PHELAN. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] is in charge of the bill and can answer the question.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, section 16 does not relate wholly to naval reserve No. 2, and never did relate wholly to naval reserve No. 2. It related to all withdrawn land, and there are ten times as many withdrawn lands in California outside of the naval reserve as there are inside of the naval reserve.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator misunderstood me or else I made a statement I should not have made. What I intended to say was that the wording of section 16 was peculiarly fitted to the oil location in naval reserve No. 2, located in California. In other words, the California people who were interested in procuring relief legislation drew section 16 as it is now worded with a view of taking care of those who had locations within that reserve. Now, the Wyoming fields are somewhat different, so I am informed by the men who made the locations in those fields, and the wording of section 16 does not bring the relief to them that they desire.

Mr. PITTMAN. The wording of the section is not peculiar to naval reserve No. 2 or any other reserve. It was not even peculiar to California. Let me explain. Oil claims have heretofore been acquired under the placer mining act. Locators would mark out the boundaries on the surface of the ground and then sink a well until they discovered oil. It generally took them several months after the claim was located on the ground before they discovered oil. It was not a valid location until they did discover oil. There was a period of several months between the time the claim was marked on the ground and the time they discovered oil.

Now, what happened? Prior to 1909, under the mining act, men who located placer-mining claims in California commenced to sink for oil. President Taft, by the advice of the Department of the Interior, issued an order withdrawing all those lands from prospecting and location under the placer-mining act. Now, what position did that leave those locators in? It left them in a position where they had lawfully commenced work prior to withdrawal and they were lawfully working at the time of the withdrawal, but after the withdrawal, not having yet made a discovery, although they may have expended $50,000 in their work, all their work was for naught, and their right terminated.

Now, what was the result? They questioned the right of the President of the United States to dispose of the public lands without authority of Congress. As I said before, the ablest attorneys of this country gave it as their opinion that the President had no such power. In fact, the lower courts in deciding the question decided that the President had no such power. Then after those decisions and upon the advice of those able attorneys, and upon the advice given publicly on the floor of this body by Senators of the United States, they continued their work. Some of them have expended as high as $3,000,000, the testimony before the Public Lands Committee shows, on that character of land. But that character of land is not embraced in this oil naval reserve alone. Cases of that character existed all over California and all over Wyoming, I have been informed. That is what I mean when I say that the section is not peculiar to the naval reserve; it is only peculiar to that state of facts.

What was the result? The result was that the Pickett Act came on in 1910 to remedy that very condition, and the Pickett Act said what? It said that notwithstanding the withdrawal of Mr. Taft any association of persons who were actually developing oil claims at the time the act was passed should have a right to continue that development, and when they struck oil they might get not a preferential lease but that they would receive a patent to every 160 acres that they got oil upon, no matter how many of such tracts they had so located and developed. That was the mature, deliberate act of Congress in 1910. Congress did that because it felt that these oil prospectors had been done an injustice by Mr. Taft in the withdrawal order.

Then, why has not the Pickett Act satisfied conditions? Here is the reason: Because the Department of Justice in its efforts to take these oil lands away from the men who had discovered the oil has forced on the lower courts a construction of that act which takes out of it all the remedy that Congress intended to give them.

Now, how did they do it? They did it in this way: The act states that the work shall be prosecuted with due diligence to discovery. What did they hold "due diligence" to mean? They held that due diligence was practically continuous work without regard to the conditions that might surround such work. They went so far as to hold that.

Mr. BORAH. What court held that? The lower court? It never went up?

Mr. PITTMAN. No; the lower court held it. I am talking about the lower court. I am glad that the circuit court of appeals has reversed all that the lower court held in construing due diligence to mean continuous work. That is practically what they held. Not only that, but they went further. The court held, under the instruction of the Department of Justice, that the work had to be actual drilling work; that if a man was not actually drilling for oil on the day the act was passed he did not come under the remedy.

They went further than that. They held that he might be laying a water line for many miles to bring in the water that was essential to drilling operations, and yet such act on his part would not constitute due diligence in the prosecution of that work leading to a discovery. In other words, the Department of Justice so construed the Pickett Act as to take out of it any and all remedies, and the lower court sustained it.

Now, then, what was the result? We start in to pass an act that will open up the 8,000,000 acres of oil lands in this country and the 44,000,000 acres of coal lands.

Mr. TOWNSEND. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. PITTMAN. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Was not the case the Senator refers to appealed? Has not the superior court passed upon that very proposition?

Mr. PITTMAN. It has in another case. In the case I have in mind it has not, but it has passed on the same question in two other cases that went up from naval reserve No. 2. There the circuit court of appeals reversed the lower court and discharged the receiver. It set aside the strict construction that was put on it by the Department of Justice and by the lower court and gave it a reasonable, intelligent construction, such as was intended by Congress.

But we found ourselves in this position: We were ready to legislate with regard to these withdrawn areas. We were going to go in and do it by a leasing bill. We were going to lease some of this very land that somebody else had developed and which subsequent acts of Congress have attempted to grant to them. It was urged before the committee that it would be unfair to lease to an absolute stranger a piece of land that some one else in good faith had demonstrated to be oil land at the expense of many thousands of dollars. The committee took that view of it. The chaotic condition that existed with regard to all this development, the doubt with regard to Mr. Taft's power to make the withdrawals, the second authorization by Congress in 1910, the passage of the Pickett Act in 1910, attempting absolutely to exclude the men who were prospectors there from the operation of the withdrawal, the action of the court in setting aside the pure intent of Congress led our committee to say that in leasing this land we should give a preference right to the man who in good faith had asserted the right under the mining laws of the United States prior to the withdrawal and who had continued until he got oil.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. KELLOGG. I understand it to be the fact, and I would like to have the Senator correct me if it is not, that the Supreme Court of the United States afterwards held that the President had an implied power to withdraw the land.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is correct.

Mr. KELLOGG. That question is settled?

Mr. PITTMAN. That is settled.

Mr. KELLOGG. But the court has not passed yet upon the right of claimants who in good faith prosecuted their claims and performed work prior to the withdrawal except in the cases under the Pickett Act in California? Is that correct?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes; that is, under the Pickett Act. That situation, as I said, led the committee to diverge from its main purpose, which was to pass an act to open up coal and oil lands that had been withdrawn. It was hard to resist the appeals of hundreds of men who had put everything on earth they had in the development of these oil lands when by the passage of this act, without remedy, they would be ruined.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator is describing a condition which is sought to be remedied, but, as I said a few moments ago, my opinion is that a state of facts exists which the bill as drawn does not include—that of the men who went there in good faith and expended their means while some others came in who had not expended their means in the development of this territory. In other words, the pioneer in these oil fields is not being protected under this bill sufficiently. Now, the man who is being protected is the man who came after the pioneer had been discouraged and who, with his assistants, got the pioneer out of the district. He is the man who is now being protected under the bill.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, there are two classes of pioneers. There is one pioneer who did not have the means to sink an oil well, and there is another pioneer who did have the means to sink an oil well. The committee believed that both of them should be protected. One of them should be protected because his condition should not be taken advantage of as long as he was doing all that the law required him to do at the time of the withdrawal, and the other should be protected because he did all he could do under the law and actually discovered oil.

Now, this is the first bill I know of, and there have been three of this character in Congress, that has had a provision in it protecting the man who actually obeyed the withdrawal order of 1909. I believe that that was brought about largely through the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK]. In fact, I know it was brought about through the junior Senator from Wyoming. He urged before the committee the very thing that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] is now urging, the protection of the pioneer. He urged that there was a class of locators out there who had not asked the advice of attorneys with regard to the withdrawal order of Mr. Taft, but who had obeyed that withdrawal order implicitly, and by reason of such obedience should be recognized when the leasing bill was passed as preferential lessees. Therefore we put into this act what I have before read and which I wish to read once more in conclusion. It is brief and I think it covers it:

> And any person who at the time of any withdrawal order heretofore made was such bona fide occupant or claimant of oil or gas bearing lands within such withdrawn areas, other than lands reserved for the use of the Navy, and who has performed all acts necessary to a valid mining location thereof, except to make a discovery, if the claim was initiated within less than five years prior to the withdrawal, and such claimant had performed a reasonable amount of work preparatory and essential to the sinking of a well or wells, and who because of and in obedience to such order desisted from the prosecution of work for the development of such claim, shall have a preference right to lease the same under the provisions of this act.

Mr. STERLING. I note the Senator read "five years prior to the withdrawal" instead of three years.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will state to the Senator from South Dakota that he was not here at the time that amendment was adopted. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] offered that as an amendment and, as I have stated before, the amendment was passed because it was doubted whether three years would include all of the locations that were made in good faith prior to the withdrawal. The Senator from Idaho is informed that five years will not protect all those whom we seek by this provision to protect and he is going to investigate and inform us as to the facts. That is all I desire to say on the subject.

Mr. STERLING. I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho whether there is any objection to any other part of section 17 as it appears on page 15 other than the time limit there fixed? Outside of the time limit does it not cover all imaginable cases that would arise in his State or in the State of Wyoming or in any other State, for that matter?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I could not answer that question, so far as I am individually concerned. Reading the amendment over, without any knowledge of the facts and the ground, I should not have raised any objection to it at present. But as I said a moment ago, a committee came to my office this morning from Wyoming and from the West giving me a state of facts which I obtained only a few moments before I came into the Chamber. I am not able to state just what that state of facts will show or to what extent, if any, there should be an amendment in addition to the change of the years. I do know there will be a desire to change the number of years. I do not know whether there will be a request for any further change in that section or not.

Mr. KENDRICK obtained the floor.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If the Senator from Wyoming will yield to me, I am compelled to leave the Chamber to go to a committee meeting. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if he expects to dispose of it this afternoon?

Mr. PITTMAN. I will state to the Senator from Mississippi that I do not believe we will reach a vote to-day.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is a unanimous-consent agreement to vote upon it on Monday.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I was requested to ascertain that fact from the Senator in charge of the bill. I should like to know so I can leave the Chamber.

Mr. PITTMAN. There will be no vote on the bill to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unanimous-consent agreement states that not later than 5 o'clock on Monday the final vote shall be taken. The Senator from Wyoming will proceed.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] asked a question as to whether or not the bill is satisfactory to the people of Wyoming. In answer to that I will say that the people of my State are anxious to have a leasing bill of some kind.

The bill has two features, one of a remedial nature and another providing for the leasing of public lands that have not heretofore been located. We are greatly concerned in the remedial legislation. We are just as much concerned in having some kind of constructive legislation that will bring order out of chaos at this time.

The presence in my State, well known for many, many years, of great bodies of oil, and the absence of any market for the same created there something of a peculiar condition. As far back as 30 years ago there were filings made upon these oil fields, and I have no doubt most of those filings were made in good faith, but the absence of a market, the lack of opportunity to secure results from the drilling of oil wells or the opening up of oil fields, discouraged the people, many of whom abandoned their filings and went away.

In some cases, no doubt, as may be proven, many of these original locators are still on the ground and have been trying to the best of their ability to go on with their development.

When section 17 was incorporated in the bill we asked to have it adopted without limitation as to time, but a protest against this lack of limitation made a change seem desirable. It was pointed out that since some of the original filings dated back, as I have said, for many years, and since some of them had been abandoned, the land involved may have been taken up by other persons, who had gone in upon it in good faith and who had undertaken development. This condition seemed to make it necessary to adopt some sort of a time limitation. But, as the Senator from Idaho has said, I am not sure that five years is sufficient to cover all legitimate and bona fide claims. A little inquiry into that on the part of those who are contending that it is not may, however, clear up that particular situation.

Section 16 originally applied to a naval reserve, but since the naval reserve has been eliminated I see no reason why any protection afforded under that paragraph is not to be found under section 17. But, however that may be, I have no objection particularly to this section. There are people in my State who object to it, and there are people who favor it; but, as I have understood this section, its purpose has been to safeguard only the rights of those who have actually brought in producing oil wells.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wyoming yield to me?

Mr. KENDRICK. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator claim that there is a limitation upon the amount of acreage that an individual may lease under section 16?

Mr. KENDRICK. I have taken no thought of that, Mr. President. I was referring only to limitation of time.

Mr. SMOOT. Limitation of time is not the objection to section 16, but that there is no limitation whatever placed upon the acreage. If the locations have been made as provided for in section 16, or if the restrictions of section 33 apply to section 16, then I would say there would be no special objection to it; but as that section now reads, and as the bill is before the Senate, in my opinion there is no restriction whatever as to the number of acres that an individual may lease under the provisions of this bill if the locations are made according to the bill itself, whereas as to anyone locating lands hereafter the restriction is to 2,580 acres, which is the maximum amount; but under section 16 one individual, if the location were made before the withdrawal order, could lease all of the lands so located and thus, I am informed, have a virtual monopoly of the oil lands of that State. That is the objection to section 16.

Mr. KENDRICK. Well, Mr. President, so far as I can understand the meaning of the bill, no measure that we could pass here would invalidate any legal right that any locator had already established, and it might well be that section 33, to which the Senator refers, might exclude application to rights protected under section 17, because those rights have already been established.

The remedial part of this bill is intended to prevent, as I have stated before on this floor, a situation under which by this measure we might take away from citizens of my State rights that they have secured under existing laws. That we do not want to do.

There are other features of the bill that seem to me to be possible of correction, and all within the limits of the time allowed us. I believe there is a real ambiguity in the paragraph providing for a limitation of holdings. If so, it should be corrected by amendment.

Another feature of the bill which seems now to have a doubtful meaning relates to the resale and disposition of oil, which might create just the condition in my State that it is now intended to avoid—of monopoly. As an illustration, it prevents any interest being held by a producer of oil in any selling or negotiating agency whatever. In Wyoming, with an immense production of oil, there is only one refinery, and if that provision remains in the bill it might establish a condition under which no other refinery could be built.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. KENDRICK. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no amendment drawn to section 15, nor has one been presented to that section, which would be satisfactory to the Wyoming people who are in Washington and those who will arrive in Washington to-morrow, as I am informed; but it does seem to me that we ought, in section 16, at least to put a limitation upon the lands that can be leased. As it is to-day, suppose one individual, or one acting for a corporation, I will say, had 9,000 or 10,000 acres of oil land in the State of Wyoming. That individual, under the provisions of the bill, would have oil lands enough to erect a refinery, whereas if he only had 2,580 acres, which are provided as the maximum under the leasing system, he could not afford to go to the expense of refining the oil produced from that amount of oil land. The result, therefore, will be, if section 16 remains as it is, that the Standard Oil Co. will control the price of all the oil produced in Wyoming, because of the fact that they will be about the only ones who can afford to erect a refinery.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. And the pipe lines.

Mr. SMOOT. There is, I believe, only one small pipe line in Wyoming, outside of those that are controlled now by that corporation. I know the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] does not want that to apply to his State, and I know that he would not be in favor of such legislation. I am also quite certain, from the information that I have received, that that will be the case unless we amend section 16 of the bill.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, I am strongly opposed to monopoly, especially in Wyoming. I know the situation and I know the extreme difficulty of avoiding it. Acting for two years as chairman of our State land board, I was convinced that it is practically an impossibility to avoid having oil holdings gravitate toward big companies; and I believe that this committee has labored diligently to try to avoid that very situation. If there is an error in that particular section that grants any rights that have not been heretofore held and enjoyed, I myself think that the same limitation certainly should be placed on those holdings that apply in other paragraphs of the bill. However, I had the impression as I read the bill that it referred only to those who already held rights and could not be limited.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wyoming permit an interruption?

Mr. KENDRICK. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, when this bill was being considered a few days ago I made a suggestion that I, as then informed, should probably vote against the bill. If I should do that, it would be the first time during my service here that I voted against any bill that western Senators wanted, for I have always been in sympathy with the West, and I have had little sympathy for the wholesale method that has been adopted in creating so-called forest reserves throughout the western country. I want to see that section of our country developed in every proper way. After having made that statement my attention was called to the bill by a Senator, showing me that, in addition to the leasing system, sales were allowed and that it was a different bill from the one that was here a year ago, which I took occasion to oppose. After looking the bill over with that Senator I concluded to do what I seldom do in the Senate, and that is to frankly announce that I had changed my mind and would vote for the bill; but in this morning's mail I received a communication, at which I casually glanced and am not prepared to state definitely what is in it, but one point made was that this legislation would permit the Standard Oil Co. to get a monopoly of the oil in those States that it is supposed will be benefited by this legislation.

I am not in the habit of getting frightened at the words "Standard Oil," but if there is any ground for that charge—and I shall examine the letter or document that came to me more particularly when I go to my committee room—why, of course, I would not vote for the bill, and I do not believe the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] would vote for it if that is a fact. I think it ought to be cleared up, whether there is any ground for that charge, which is made by some one who claims to know a good deal about the matter. I would be glad, indeed, to have the Senator from Wyoming give his opinion on the point whether we are apparently legislating for the people, but are, as a matter of fact, legislating for a great corporation. My vote, while it may not be of any consequence, would be largely governed by the answer that I may receive to that question.

I thank the Senator for yielding to me.

Mr. KENDRICK. In answering the Senator's question I will say to him that if this measure is intended to provide particular legislation for any company or corporation, I am not advised of it any further than that one operator claims that another is getting an advantage. I have asked for specific information on all these points, but have been unable to obtain anything of a definite nature to show that there is any privilege granted by this bill that should not be granted, or that it is designed to favor any association, organization, or corporation. All of the changes that I have asked for in the bill have been in the way of remedial legislation for the sole and only purpose of protecting rights already established in good faith. I understand from my short experience here the difficulties that have been encountered by the committee in trying to get final action on this measure. I am anxious, because of the importance to my State of having a definite policy adopted, and to see all differences adjusted. Thousands of people in my State are locating oil lands every day, and the complications grow worse instead of better.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. KENDRICK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KELLOGG. I should like to ask a question, and preliminary to the question I should like to make a brief statement.

I am not familiar with the hearings which took place prior to April 2, 1917, but I do not remember any testimony of witnesses appearing before the committee which gave the committee any information as to particular holdings of any corporation or individuals in the State of Wyoming. Within the last few days, however, I have received communications which would indicate a state of facts such as suggested by the Senator from Utah, that one corporation did own a vast quantity of locations. So far as I know, that state of facts did not appear to the committee. Is there any objection, so far as the Senator from Wyoming is concerned, to applying to section 16 the same limitation as to acreage which is applied to other locations?

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, in answer to that question I will say to the Senator that I would be glad to have such restrictions incorporated in the section so far as they would not disturb vested and established rights.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Wyoming before he takes his seat, or of the Senator who has the bill in charge, a question with regard to section 2 along the same line as the question suggested by the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. As I read section 2 it gives to an association or a corporation rights that it does not give to individuals, so far as the purchase of coal land is concerned.

Mr. PITTMAN. That has been amended.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The word "citizen" has been inserted, so as to read "That any citizen or association," and so forth.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Very well. I did not know it had been amended. The bill on my desk does not show the amendment, but I am glad to get the information.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to have printed in the RECORD, so that they may be there for the consideration of those who are not able to get the bill, sections 16, 17, and 33.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator mean as they appear in the bill as it came from the committee or as at present amended?

Mr. BORAH. As amended at the present time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the sections suggested, as amended, will be printed in the RECORD.

The sections referred to are as follows:

SEC. 16. That upon relinquishment to the United States within 90 days from the date of this act or within 90 days after final denial or withdrawal of application for patent, of any claim or subdivision thereof asserted under the mining laws prior to July 3, 1910, to any unpatented oil or gas lands included in any order of withdrawal, the claimant or his successor in interest shall be entitled to a lease for each asserted mineral location of 160 acres or less or any subdivision thereof upon which such claim is based and upon which said claimant, his predecessors in interest, or those claiming through or under him, have, prior to the date of this act, drilled one or more producing oil or gas wells, such lease to be upon a royalty of one-eighth of the production of oil or gas produced and saved therefrom after first deducting from the gross production such oil or gas as may be used in development and operating such land, and otherwise on the same terms and conditions as other oil and gas leases granted under the provisions of this act: Provided, however, That no claimant who has been guilty of fraud in the location of any oil claim or gas-bearing lands shall be entitled to any of the benefits of this section, nor shall his assignee be entitled thereto unless he affirmatively shows that prior to the passage of this act he purchased such lands in good faith, for a valuable consideration and without actual knowledge of such fraud: Provided further, That upon the issuance of said lease and prior to the delivery thereof the applicant therefor shall pay to the United States for one-eighth of the oil or gas produced and saved from the lands included in said claim at the current field price at the time of production, which shall be in full satisfaction for all oil or gas extracted from said land prior to said lease: And provided further, That none of the provisions of this section or of this act shall be applicable to or affect lands or minerals included within the limits of any naval petroleum reserve: Provided further, That the provisions of this section shall be applicable in all cases provided for herein, including cases where court actions have been heretofore commenced or may hereafter be commenced by the United States Government affecting the title to such lands or the product thereof: Provided, further, That any bona fide occupant or claimant of oil or gas bearing lands in the Territory of Alaska, who prior to withdrawal had complied with the requirements of the mining laws, except as to discovery of oil or gas in wells, and who prior to withdrawal expended not less than $1,000 in permanent improvements on or for each location, shall be entitled to the benefits of this section.

SEC. 17. That the rights of any person who on the 1st day of August, 1917, was, and ever since has been, a bona fide occupant, or claimant of oil or gas bearing lands open to appropriation as such under existing law, and who has performed all acts necessary to a valid mining location thereof except to make a discovery, and who on and prior to said date was preparing to develop such lands, and to discover oil or gas therein, and who shall thereafter continue in the diligent prosecution of work leading to the discovery of oil or gas, shall not be affected or impaired by this act so long as such occupant or claimant shall continue in the diligent prosecution of said work. Such occupant or claimant so continuing shall be entitled to develop and prosecute his claim for patent and to have the same as provided by existing law for such locations not exceeding in the aggregate 2,560 acres.

And any person who at the time of any withdrawal order heretofore made was a bona fide occupant or claimant of oil or gas bearing lands within such withdrawn area, other than lands reserved for the use of the Navy, and who has performed all acts necessary to a valid mining location thereof, except to make a discovery, if the claim was initiated within less than five years prior to the withdrawal, and such claimant had performed a reasonable amount of work preparatory and essential to the sinking of a well or wells, and who because of and in obedience to such order desisted from the prosecution of work for the development of such claim, shall have a preference right to lease the same under the provisions of this act: Provided, That such preference shall not extend to any lands included in any locations determined to be valid and entitled to proceed to patent under the mining laws existing at or prior to the passage of this act: Provided further, That if any claimant is given a preference right to lease lands upon which wells have been sunk to oil by other parties, the Secretary of the Interior may in his discretion require such lessee to pay to the party or parties who sunk such well or wells, or to the United States, the reasonable cost of such well or wells.

SEC. 33. That no person, association, or corporation, except as herein provided, shall be permitted to take or hold any interest, as a stockholder or otherwise, in leases of any one of the deposits herein named and described, during the life of such leases covering in the aggregate an area greater than 2,560 acres, and any interest held in violation of this provision shall be forfeited to the United States by appropriate proceedings instituted by the Attorney General for that purpose in any court of competent jurisdiction, except that any such ownership or interest hereby forbidden, which may be acquired by descent, will, judgment, or decree, may be held for two years and not longer after its acquisition.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to make a single observation before I sit down. I find that a good many provisions in this bill are intended to prevent monopoly in production, in the ownership of the soil, and in lease holdings, in the first instance, but I do not find any sufficient safeguards against complete monopoly in refining. While there are provisions in the bill which, if they would operate upon entirely unoccupied territory, would have that tendency, yet, by reason of the peculiar facts which exist in the particular territory, they will not have that tendency or will not have the effect, in my judgment, of limiting monopoly with reference to refining. I think that there ought to be some such amendment as I shall propose later, and which I hope the committee will accept.

Mr. PITTMAN. I think that section 34 was intended by the committee to apply to refiners. This is the language used in that section:

SEC. 34. That no person, association, or corporation holding a lease under the provisions of this act shall, except as herein provided, hold any interest, direct or indirect, in any agency, corporate or otherwise, engaged in the resale of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, potassium, or sodium purchased from such lessee, or enter into any arrangement, agreement, or other device to enhance the price of such minerals or products, and any violation of the provisions of this section shall be ground for the forfeiture of the lease or interest held.

I think the committee had in mind at the time that the word "agency" covered a refinery. However, I will say that the suggestion of the Senator from Idaho has considerable merit, for I doubt whether it does include refineries. At this point let me ask the Senator from Idaho, while he is considering his amendment on that particular subject, to be also considering a provision for permitting independent oil operators to unite for the purpose of putting up their own refineries.

Mr. BORAH. I think that kind of a provision ought to be in the bill, because its absence is one reason why the refining may be merged into a complete monopoly. The holdings upon the part of the independent owners are such that they can not, unless they are permitted to join together, put up refineries, but they would necessarily have to sell out or surrender to those who could put them up.

Mr. PITTMAN. The object of the committee was this: It desired to prevent the control of oil fields through a refinery; in other words, it desired to prevent corporations owning the oil really owning the refineries—to prevent a combination through the refineries. The provisions that are in the bill now are the same provisions that were in previous bills; the committee merely redrafted the bill and put them in; in other words, the provisions attempting to provide against monopoly which are now in the bill were in the bill that passed the Senate at one time, and they were in the bill that twice passed the House of Representatives.

While this question has been once or twice called to the attention of the committee, they seemed to think it was of more importance to prevent a combination of oil operators in a refinery than to permit them to organize a refinery, but I will call the attention of the Senator from Idaho and of other Senators to the fact that in the bill we passed recently, in fact, at the last session, providing for the development of potash, we expressly provided that the lessees under the act might unite in establishing a refinery, provided that no lessee should have to exceed a 10 per cent interest in such refinery. I simply lay that down here as a suggestion for Senators who are particularly looking into the Wyoming situation.

As the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] has said, the committee had no hearings on the Wyoming situation. I do not think the committee are advised about the details of the situation in Wyoming; they were simply advised over a period of four years with regard to general conditions; and, as I have before said, we attempted to legislate to meet those general conditions.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I see in a brief which has been sent to me, signed by Mr. Benjamin F. Rice, to whom the Senator alluded some time ago in the debate, on page 11, after citing section 34, the following observation:

From a practical standpoint, under the provisions of this section 34, the successful prospecter on the public domain may not install a pipe line or refinery. This provision says that no person holding a lease under the provisions of the act may have any interest in any agency engaged in the resale of oil.

Every pipe line in the United States which is a public carrier buys oil at the field of production and sells it at the refinery.

Practically every refiner in the United States buys oil at the field of production, refines it, and sells it.

The refinery and the pipe line are both, to an extent sufficient to bring them under the terms of this act, agencies engaged in the resale of oil.

Whether that is a proper interpretation of the effect of that section I do not know. If it is, it stands in the way of any sort of competition against the Standard Oil Co. or any other great corporation or monopoly, if you please, in these fields.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the other day in discussing this measure I called attention to the position taken by the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] with respect to section 16, as I recall. As I understood the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], an amendment has been accepted which eliminates in part, at least, this section or certain provisions of it from the bill. I ask the Senator from Nevada if that is correct, if the committee did accept certain suggestions made by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], the result of which was to eliminate from this section certain provisions in it with respect to the reserves?

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator from Virginia moved to strike out in line 15 the words "or with naval petroleum reserve No. 2," and the motion was carried. That simply excludes the naval reserve from the operation of the act.

Mr. KING. That is naval reserve No. 2?

Mr. PITTMAN. Naval reserve No. 1 and naval reserve No. 3 had already been excluded, so that means that all naval reserves are excluded from the effects of this bill.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I do not yield the floor. I yield for a question.

Mr. KELLOGG. I wish the Senator would state that again. We could not hear it.

Mr. PITTMAN. Before the holidays the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] moved to strike out, on page 12, the words "within naval petroleum reserve numbered 2." The motion was carried. The effect of it, as I say, is to exclude all naval reserves from the operation of this act.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am not quite clear yet what the effect of this legislation is or what is designed by the committee with respect to those locations that have been made upon lands that have been withdrawn and characterized as "naval reserves"; but as I understand the situation in brief it is this: Under the provisions of this bill, persons who have made valid locations upon certain oil lands—if not valid before the passage of the Pickett Act, at least were rendered valid by the provisions of that act—are practically compelled to abandon or renounce their claims and to accept leases from the Government covering a portion only of such claims.

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not see how Congress could, by any act, accomplish that, and certainly it is not the desire of the committee. How can Congress take away any valid and existing right of a locator?

Mr. KING. That is exactly what I should like to know.

Mr. PITTMAN. Nor does the bill attempt to do so. The bill simply gives to a locator the privilege of surrendering his claim of title in lieu of a lease; and the reason for that is this: The committee believes that there are a great many claims that are legal which it is afraid will be held illegal under the rulings of the court and the prejudice against such locations. Therefore we have opened a door to partially save these people who, in the opinion of some of them, have been mistreated and will continue to be mistreated. We simply say to them: "You must surrender your claim of title and accept a lease if you are afraid to fight it out."

Mr. KING. But that extends only to those claims that are outside of the naval reserves?

Mr. PITTMAN. Oh, yes; undoubtedly. As far as the naval reserves are concerned, they are just in the position that they were before the passage of the bill.

Mr. KING. Permit me to inquire of the distinguished Senator from Nevada what is the purpose of the committee in dealing with those who are within the naval reserves? Is it to remit them to the courts or to subject them to the provisions of the bill threatened by the Senator from Virginia, which, he says, has for its object the condemnation of their holdings?

Mr. PITTMAN. I think they will be very largely remitted either to the mercy of the courts or to the Senator from Virginia in the first place, and to Congress in the second place.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator think that while Congress is dealing with the subject of oil lands in a broad and comprehensive way, as this bill seeks to deal with them, that the rights of individuals upon the reserves, so called, ought to be determined and dealt with, so far as they can be by legislation, at the same time?

Mr. PITTMAN. I think so, and I have thought so for four years; and a great majority of our committee have for four years believed that the palpable injustice that had been done the people in this naval reserve, as well as outside, should be remedied at the same time that any general legislation was passed dealing with the whole subject. We have tried to do it; but, as has been stated here on the floor, we who are interested in opening up the 8,000,000 acres of oil land and the 44,000,000 acres of coal land have been forced to the conclusion, after four years' time, that we can not pass an act that has that in it. That is a humiliating admission, but it is the fact nevertheless; and we had to determine whether we preferred no legislation or legislation dealing with all the lands outside of the reserves.

Mind you, there are ten times as many sufferers outside of the reserves as there are in the naval reserves. We could do nothing for those in the reserves, and the question is whether we should do nothing for those outside of the reserves by attempting to pass a law with this provision in it. That is the position we are in, and it is a matter for each Senator to determine in his own mind what to do.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I expressed the other day my condemnation of the policy of certain executive branches of the Government that has dealt with the public lands embraced within this bill and the method which has been pursued with respect to these oil lands. It seems to me that Congress can not maintain its self-respect if it permits executive subordinates of the Government to dictate the character of legislation which shall be enacted. The statement of the distinguished Senator from Nevada amounts to a confession that the Navy Department and Interior Department and other agencies of the Government has so dominated the legislative branch of the Government that we can not deal justly with claimants upon the public domain and that we can not deal with this subject in a just and fair manner.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Because we can not get enough votes.

Mr. PITTMAN and Mr. KELLOGG addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield; and, if so, to whom?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. I ought to say that it is not by reason of any influence of the Department of the Interior that it has become necessary to strike this out, but by reason of the influence of other departments of the Government. The Department of the Interior was perfectly satisfied with treating individuals and citizens inside the naval reserves the same as it treated citizens outside of the naval reserves.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. KELLOGG. I was under the impression that the Secretary of the Interior had recommended and was in favor of including the naval reserves in the bill. That was my understanding. Is that correct?

Mr. KING. I am very glad to know, Mr. President, that the Secretary of the Interior has taken the position just suggested by the two Senators. I have followed with a great deal of interest the administrative work of the present Secretary of the Interior. He has given to the great questions committed to his care the most earnest and conscientious consideration, and has treated the problems so important to our Nation and which demand solution at the hands of the Government in a broad and comprehensive manner. I think it may be truthfully stated that no Secretary of the Interior has been better equipped for the discharge of the high duties of that position than Secretary Lane, and none have had a keener appreciation of the importance of the work committed to this department. I have not always agreed with the policies of the present Secretary of the Interior or with the administrative work of many of the subordinates in this branch of the Government service.

There has been too much paternalism to meet my views, and some officials have been too persistent to augment the powers of the Federal Government. I have felt that the States more and more are becoming atrophied and that the executive branches of the Government have too often attempted to superimpose the Federal Government upon the State governments. I have not been in sympathy with some of the policies of the Interior Department which I think have unquestionably retarded the development of the West and precluded the opening of agricultural lands and the mineral wealth of our Nation. I understand that the Secretary of the Interior approves, in the main, of the provisions of this bill. I have heretofore stated that I disapprove of this bill and the policy which it seeks to inaugurate. I can not be reconciled to Federal landlordism and to the obnoxious paternal features found within sections of this measure. I can not assent to a policy that repeals the wise and beneficent system under which our Nation has prospered and sterile regions under the flag have grown into prosperous and splendid Commonwealths.

But I did not rise for the purpose of animadverting upon the change in policy proposed by this bill and the sweeping away of the entire mineral-land system which has met with the general approval of the people of the West. I only rise for the purpose of calling attention to a few of the provisions in the pending measure and to seek from those having charge of the bill information as to the scope and meaning of the same. But, to recur to what I was stating a few moments ago, it occurs to me that some of the executive branches of the Government are either chloroforming Congress or terrifying the National Legislature so that its Members are unable to enact the legislation which the majority of the Members believe to be fair and just. If we are chloroformed, I express the hope that some wise physician with healing and neutralizing potions will administer to our infirmities and relieve us from the narcotizing effects of the poison, which has been so copiously administered. If we are terrified, then I venture the hope that some brave and valiant leader shall appear in our midst and inspire Congress with that spirit of duty that will enable it to perform its constitutional functions and by the assertion of some little wisdom attain the heights reached as the result of honorable service.

I can not comprehend the attitude of those who assert that the approval of some department is indispensable to the enactment of legislation.

While the recommendations of executive officers are desirable, the responsibility of legislation rests upon the Congress and it would be a base betrayal of the interests of the people if the legislative branch of the Government should shirk its responsibility and content itself with registering the edicts of the executive branch and constitute itself a mere echo of the wishes of the bureaus and departments of the Government.

I feel that we shall be dealing unjustly with those who have valuable locations within the naval reserves if we do not at this time and in this bill deal with the entire question. It would be a cowardly evasion of our responsibilities if, because some officials of the Navy Department or any other branch of the Government demand that we should abstain from legislating upon any question that was committed to our power, we conform our conduct to that view. If a given law is required by expediency and in the interest of justice, and it is within the power of Congress to enact the same, it should be passed regardless of the hostility upon the part of any bureau or any executive branch of the Government.

I have carefully read the splendid report submitted by the Senator from Nevada accompanying this bill. It is a severe and scathing arraignment of certain executive departments of the Government. In this report this language is employed:

> The Navy Department has objected every time that such provision has been included in similar bills, and the controversy that was thus precipitated, as inconsequential as it was to the Government, has always prevented the passage of such bills. Although there are over 30,000 acres in naval reserve No. 2, only 7,680 are affected by such provision. Notwithstanding the insignificance of the dispute over this small tract of land, it is the opinion of the committee that the bill can not be passed without just settlement or compromise of such differences. * * *
> AS TO RESERVE NO. 2.
> In this oil reserve there are 7,680 acres of unpatented land that is affected by section 16 of this bill. Upon all of this land mining locations were made for oil prior to the first withdrawal by President Taft in 1909. On all of this land producing oil wells have been sunk by such claimants or their successors in interest, and all deraign their title from locations made prior to any withdrawal. On all of the claims in this said 7,680 acres of land producing oil wells had been developed prior to the reservation of said land for naval purposes in 1912.
> Of the 7,680 acres, 2,080 acres have been clear listed for patent by the Department of the Interior; that is, the Department of the Interior, after a thorough investigation and trial, has finally held that such claimants have complied with the law entitling them to United States patent from the Government. Notwithstanding this determination by the Department of the Interior, which has sole jurisdiction in the matter, the Department of Justice, at the request of the Navy Department, is still seeking to prevent the Department of the Interior from issuing patent in accordance with its decree. This case is known as the Honolulu Oil Co. case. The Attorney General, in testifying before the Public Lands Committee of the Senate on February 16, 1916, said:
> "In response to these assertions I have this to say: First. These suits were instituted—all of them, I believe—with the approval of the Interior Department, whose liberal view of the Pickett Act is reflected in its decision of the Honolulu Consolidated Oil Co.'s case.
> "Second. The Honolulu case, I understand, is regarded by the Interior Department and by the attorneys of my department as a case supported by a state of facts far more favorable to the claimants than exist in any of the cases in suit."
> The Attorney General in the foregoing statement was referring to the cases involving section 28 and section 2 as cases less favorable to the claimants than the Honolulu case. In fact, the testimony of the various witnesses of the Department of Justice, made before the various committees, clearly indicated that the Government not only considered such cases the weakest as far as the claimants were concerned, but held them up as examples of the fraud attempted to be perpetrated upon the Government. And yet these were the cases that the Circuit Court of Appeals has just decided so emphatically in favor of the claimants, a portion of the opinion of which is hereinbefore cited. These are the cases which involved the so-called "dummy entries" or "fraudulent entries" known as the McNamara and McLeod locations. The Government set up in such cases the fraud and attempted to prove it. The Government was not even able to produce sufficient evidence of fraud to justify the circuit court of appeals in retaining a receiver for the property. In other words, the Government could not even make out a prima facie case of fraud. What did the court say with regard to the allegation of fraud? The court in its opinion with regard to this issue says:
>
> "Not only has no attack, so far as appears, been made by the Government on the register's final certificate of entry, but there is in these cases not the slightest showing of any fraud or lack of good faith at any time on the part of the appellants or of any of their predecessors in interest. True, the bills of the Government, which were verified by an agent upon information and belief, alleged that the location notices under which the appellants' claim were posted by 'mere dummies' to enable 'Defendant McLeod or some one else' to obtain the land; but that allegation was put in issue by positive denial under oath, and there was no undertaking whatever to sustain the charge."
> This was the prize case of the Department of Justice in the naval reserve. It was the alleged facts in this case that gave grounds to the Department of Justice for most violent charges of fraud and corruption in the location of oil claims throughout the United States, charges that have been reiterated and published with the knowledge, and if not with the encouragement, certainly without the opposition of the Department of Justice. It has been the prejudice aroused by the pictures of fraud against the Government, painted in connection with the facts in this case, that have largely tended to prevent calm and intelligent consideration of legislation necessary to the development of the oil resources of this country.
> Both the district court and the circuit court of appeals have decided against the Government with regard to the 640 acres included in section 2 in said naval reserve No. 2. First, on June 7, 1917, the United States District Court for the Southern District of California, Judge Bean presiding, upon a trial upon the merits, in a case wherein the Government was plaintiff and the claimants of the land defendants, held that while the claimants had not made discovery prior to the withdrawal order of 1910 at said time, they were in the diligent prosecution of work leading to a discovery, and subsequent to said date did discover oil, and therefore said claimants came within the remedial provisions of the Pickett Act and were entitled to patent for the land.
> Prior, however, to such decision Judge Bean had appointed a receiver in the case, and from the decision appointing such receiver an appeal had been taken to the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals. On the 20th day of August, 1917, the said circuit court of appeals in reviewing such appeal found as a fact that the claimants had complied with the law entitling them to the property and the receiver was discharged.
>
> How can the Government hope to win the Honolulu Oil Co. case, which is admittedly the strongest case for the claimants, in the face of the decisions which have just been rendered and which are referred to in this report? The Government has not so far won a single case in oil reserve No. 2. The result of this litigation so far, which has covered a period of three or four years, is that the Government has expended large sums of money, is bankrupting men who have spent millions of dollars in a legitimate belief that they were entitled to develop unknown supplies of oil, and is retarding the production of oil in the known oil fields, that is so critically needed by the Government at the present time.
>
> The chances of recovery by the Government are, to say the least, not encouraging. It is a condition in which an individual, being in the place of the Government, would be most apt to seek a favorable compromise. The committee has long sincerely and industriously sought such a compromise. The committee simply proposes that this land, which has already been developed by the claimants and the development of which must continue by reason of the geological and physical conditions, be leased by the Government to the claimants under the general provisions of the bill upon the payment by the lessee to the Government of a royalty of one-eighth of the oil. The language of the compromise provision contained in section 16 was prepared and submitted by the Interior Department at the request of a joint committee composed of members of the Public Lands Committee of the Senate and the Public Lands Committee of the House.
> A compromise of this nature was authorized and directed by the Congress of the United States by an act approved August 24, 1914. By such act the Secretary of the Interior was expressly authorized to execute leases to applicants for patent for oil lands within withdrawn areas, both inside and outside of naval reserves, pending the determination of the application for such patents. The only distinction with regard to leases in naval reserves is that the royalty shall be placed in a naval fund. The Secretary of the Interior obeyed the instructions of the act with regard to such claims within reserved areas and executed leases, except to naval reserves. He declined to execute such leases within naval reserves, in obedience to the act, solely by reason of the request of the Navy Department that no such leases be executed. In discussing the intent of Congress in the passage of this act, the Attorney General, in testifying before the Public Lands Committee of the Senate on June 27, 1917, said:
>
> "The ATTORNEY GENERAL. Under the act of 1914 he was given power to lease. I want to say right in this connection that my theory in regard to these leases was expressed by your chairman in some remarks in committee recently with regard to the act of 1914, to the effect that by that leasing system it was intended to provide a cheaper way of taking the place of receiverships; and the general idea of that provision of the act of 1914 is that pending disposition of applications for patents the Commissioner of the Land Office or the Secretary of the Interior may issue these leases. That he has done very extensively. I understand he has issued a circular inviting them all to come in.
> "The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. PITTMAN). Not inside of the naval reserve?
> "The ATTORNEY GENERAL. Outside.
> "The ACTING CHAIRMAN. They are pursuing the practice of operating wells inside of the reserve by receivership and declining to let them be operated under the act of 1914 by contract.
>
> "The ATTORNEY GENERAL. I know he made no leases inside the reserve. I understand the Secretary of the Navy seriously objected to it. As far as my department is concerned, when he issues leases and fails to pass on application for patents, my hands are tied. There is nothing I can do in any way. It depends upon the Commissioner of the Land Office how many suits I can bring.
> "The ACTING CHAIRMAN. The testimony in the hearing before the committee shows that the Land Office Department intended to execute these contracts inside of the reserve as well as outside of the reserve and on the withdrawn area on the same terms and conditions, but that the Secretary of the Navy requested him not to do that. It is by reason of that request that he failed to execute the act of 1914, which, as I have stated, was intended to take the place of the receiverships.

Instead of following the act and allowing a claimant to work a well that he had sunk, they have taken the wells away from him and put them into the hands of a receiver.

"The ATTORNEY GENERAL. I can not agree with you that the act to which you refer is mandatory and requires him to issue leases. It merely gives him the power. When the Secretary of the Navy protested he merely did not use the power which he had."

The Commissioner of the General Land Office recognized, as must every lawyer, that such discretion was not arbitrary but was a sound judicial discretion, and testified that the only reason that he did not let leases within the naval reserves as he did outside of the reserves and within other withdrawn areas was because of the protest of the Secretary of the Navy. The Secretary of the Navy, in making such protest, knew that he was violating the expressed intent of Congress, because he appeared before the Public Lands Committee of the House and sought to have naval reserves excluded from the operation of such act, and his request was expressly denied by such committee and by Congress. Instead of obeying the mandates of such act, the Department of Justice, on behalf of the Navy, had these wells on these claims, which had been sunk at the expense of many thousands of dollars, and in some cases millions of dollars, taken out of the hands of the claimants and operated under the supervision of a receiver. The appointment of some of these receivers, in fact, in the very strongest cases that the Government claims to have, have been discharged by the circuit court of appeals, as is disclosed in the opinion hereinbefore cited.

It will be observed that in this report attention is called to the fact that the Navy Department interfered with the Secretary of the Interior in the performance of duties devolving upon that official by act of Congress. The report, as will be observed, states that the Secretary of the Navy knew that he was violating the expressed intent of Congress, and that instead of obeying the mandates of law the Department of Justice, on behalf of the Navy, instituted suit and took property out of the hands of men who had spent millions in acquiring it.

It is against these acts that I protest. I know but little concerning the oil lands in California, but this report and the bill accompanying the same present a situation which, in my opinion, calls for different and additional legislation to that provided in the measure under consideration. No matter what the motives of the executive branches of the Government may have been, the facts stated in the report and in the decisions of the courts clearly demonstrate that the rights of individuals have been disregarded and the loss of Congress flagrantly put aside by those who have sworn to uphold the law.

My distinguished colleague [Mr. SMOOT] stated the other day that there were certain forces which had been at work for years to prevent the opening up of public lands and to hold in reserves and from public entry millions of acres of public domain. This conservation craze which affected so many people, and which manifested itself in hysterical utterances, often resulted in hysterical legislation and executive orders and pronouncements.

Doubtless it was inspired by the best of motives, but many of those crying for conservation lacked an appreciation of the practical questions involved and a proper understanding of the physical and other conditions prevailing in our country. Conservation is one thing, and foolish and hysterical undertakings are another thing. There is a conservation of the resources of country, and there is a pseudo conservation which paralyzes the development of the country and locks up resources demanded by a growing and expanding country. It is not too much to say that the organization referred to by my colleague has attempted to strangle legislation that sought to deal justly and fairly with those who had oil locations upon public domain. No doubt these forces just referred to have contributed to defeat legislation so earnestly desired by the people of the West, and have compelled the Public Lands Committee to submit this bill as the very essence of righteousness which their merciful natures will permit the Nation to enjoy. Apparently we are denied the right to enact legislation that we believe to be right. The Secretary of the Navy has threatened that there shall be no legislation that will protect the rights of those having valid locations within certain naval reserves. Apparently we are powerless to enact any legislation that has not the approval of certain executive branches of the Government. As I understand, many of the locations within these reserves have been attached by the Government, but the courts have sustained the validity of such locations.

In the report submitted from the Senator from Nevada, reference is made to a decision by the circuit court of appeals (ninth circuit). The case is The Consolidated Mutual Oil Co. against The United States, and was decided October 8, 1917.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. The locators referred to in that decision are not the ones that need remedial legislation. The circuit court of appeals has reversed the lower court, discharged the receiver, and turned over large quantities of money to these locators, and the chances are that the circuit court of appeals will be sustained if the matter is taken to the Supreme Court. They need no remedy. They would not take advantage of this remedy if they had an opportunity. They would not be foolish enough to surrender their claim to the land and accept a lease now, after having fought it so far. The remedy is for the benefit of those people who have morally conformed to all the requirements of law, but who technically are held deficient in their titles. Those are the people that we are trying to help—the persons who believed that the Taft order of withdrawal was illegal and who worked under the advice of their attorneys and under the rulings of the lower courts, and the people who believed they were complying with the Pickett Act and have been held by the lower courts not to have complied with it. It is those people that we are attempting to help.

The argument that was made in that report was not for the purpose of showing that those people needed help, but it was for the purpose of showing that the Navy Department is foolish in opposing this provision. It was for the purpose of showing that the Navy Department is not subserving the best interests of the Government in opposing this legislation. The Navy Department will not get any of that land. The courts have held that it belongs to individuals, when if the Navy Department had not opposed this very provision two years ago the Navy Department to-day would have been the owner of the very land which is now declared to be these individuals' land, and would have been drawing a one-eighth royalty in oil all of this time. The Navy Department would have had oil on hand to-day with which to run the vessels of the Navy, instead of seeking everywhere for it at the highest kind of prices. The report was drawn for the purpose of showing that the Navy Department was foolish, knew nothing about the situation, was trying to make a permanent reservoir where there were two hundred and odd wells tapping it, and refusing to accept one-eighth of the oil out of it, when the courts were holding that the department could not get anything out of it. That was the object of that.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. SWANSON. The Attorney General has informed me that the statement as to the decision in that report is erroneous. The Senator from Nevada, when he included it, made a mistake as to what the decision of the court was. The Attorney General has had prepared and sent to me a list of the number of suits brought, the number that the Government has gained, the number of suits in which receivers have been appointed, and a full recital of the decisions made in all these cases.

The case to which the Senator alludes is a case, as I understand from the Attorney General, in which an application was made for the appointment of a receiver to take charge of the oil wells and operate them. The lower court granted the appointment of a receiver without taking proof, holding that having sworn to this, though it was denied, proof was not necessary. The circuit court held that the allegations of the bill being denied, the burden of proof was upon the complainants to prove their case, and reversed the decision as to the appointment of a receiver, but did not decide the case on its merits.

As I understand, the case is in the lower courts now on the merits as to whether these dummy entries are legal. I am informed that the district judge, though not deciding on that case, but on another case in which this question was involved, decided it in favor of the Government, holding that they had not prosecuted the work sufficiently under the Pickett Act, but, alluding to these dummy entries, saying it was not necessary to decide that question. From the intimations contained in the opinion, however, they were satisfied that the court would hold that these dummy entries were not legal, and that they would not be sustained.

As I understood from the Attorney General, these cases have been decided upon a technicality, and not upon the merits. Besides that, I am informed that they have additional evidence showing facts in these cases which they are satisfied will nullify the claims made by these parties.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. KING. I do.

Mr. PITTMAN. I think it is unfortunate that the Senator from Virginia, who is such an excellent lawyer, should be so ill advised by the Attorney General, and I regret that the Attorney General, who has the reputation of being a good lawyer, is so poorly advised by his clerks. It shows how unfortunate the executive officers of our Government are with regard to legislative matters. I have no doubt that we shall have other advice coming from the same source in regard to proposed amendments to this bill.

If the accuracy of the subsequent suggestions is to be measured by the present suggestion of the Senator from Virginia it will certainly subject them to some doubt. The Senator from Nevada, in preparing the report at the request of the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate, only saw fit to use the language of the court, and I would suggest that hereafter the Senator from Virginia have the Attorney General send up the language of the court.

Mr. SWANSON. I have it. It was brought to me just a few seconds ago.

Mr. PITTMAN. One moment. I will ask the Senator from Utah to read the decision which we were discussing. He has it right there.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. PHELAN. I desire to ask the Senator from Virginia a question, as he seems to be so well informed on the subject of the litigation originating in the office of the Attorney General. The question is whether the Department of Justice has won for the Government any case whatever in naval reserve No. 2?

Mr. SWANSON. Here is a summary sent to me regarding the suits. I will read it if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. PHELAN. The Senator is not informed though, at this moment?

Mr. SWANSON. Yes; I have the report right here now.

The general trend of the report under consideration would convey the impression that the Government has lamentably failed in maintaining its prosecutions against the claimants of these withdrawn lands. The facts are as follows:

Suits instituted.	Suits.	Acres.
In California, in naval reserves	32	8,177
In California, outside naval reserves	23	4,598
Total in California	55	12,775
In Wyoming, outside naval reserves	3	560
Total in California and Wyoming	58	*13,335

Receiverships.	Cases.
Receiver in charge	21
Receiver denied (no producing well)	1
Receiver discharged (insufficient showing)	3
Application pending (Honolulu case)	1
Bond in lieu of receiver	1
Total number of applications	27
Stipulation to impound net proceeds	1

Decisions on merits.	Cases.
For the Government (Supreme Court)	1
For the Government (district court)	11
Against the Government (circuit court of appeals)	1
Against the Government (district court)	1
Total	14

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Are those final decisions?

Mr. SWANSON. They are not final; no. They are none of them final, because they go to the Supreme Court.

You will, of course, observe that while the merits are not gone into in applications for receiverships, the Government is required to make out a prima facie case before the receiver is appointed.

As this letter does not cover all objections to which the report is subject, I will ask you not to insert it in the record. I have not the slightest objection, however, to your using the facts herein stated.

Now, here is the opinion in this case of which complaint was made.

Mr. KING. Is the Senator referring now to the decision in the case of Consolidated Mutual Oil Co. against The United States?

Mr. SWANSON. I have no more suits. I will see if I have that case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah is recognized in his own right.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have not before me the memorandum from which the Senator from Virginia has just been reading, but as I understand his statement, the Government has "lamentably" failed—to use the expression in the memorandum—in supporting its contention with respect to the invalidity of the oil locations within these reserves.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, I have the Consolidated case here. I will read what it says:

While the report does not mention the decision of the circuit court of appeals from which the quotation is taken, I will state that it is in two cases under the title "Consolidated Mutual Oil Co. v. United States," decided August 20, 1917. (245 Fed., 521.)

In these cases a temporary receiver was appointed by Judge Dooling pending final determination on the merits, the condition of the pleadings being as stated in the excerpt from the opinion above quoted. The application for the appointment of a receiver was submitted on the allegations of the Government's bill and the sworn denial of the defendant. Judge Dooling held that this was sufficient and did not require the Government to produce any evidence as to the actual fraud charged, and no evidence was, in fact, introduced. An appeal was taken to the circuit court of appeals from the action of Judge Dooling in appointing a receiver, and by a divided court (Judge Gilbert dissenting) it was held that the receivership should not have been granted without the Government going into proof of the fraud, and that phase of the case was reversed and remanded.

Meanwhile, the merits of the case had come up before Judge Bean, who dismissed the bills without consideration of the merits, on the ground that they should have been brought in the form of ancillary bills instead of bills to recover the lands. (242 Fed., 746.) On motion for rehearing the dismissal was "without prejudice" to the institution of other suits by the Government in accordance with his view that the bills should be ancillary.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. What is the Senator reading from?

Mr. SWANSON. I am reading from a letter of the Attorney General.

Mr. PITTMAN. Oh! That is some more advice from the Attorney General?

Mr. SWANSON. The Attorney General was authorized by the Secretary of the Navy, under an act of Congress, to defend these lands from being improperly taken from the Government; and the only criticism that can be made of these two officials, if any, is that they have been too zealous. In this day and time it is a meritorious thing to be zealous in defending the interests and rights of the Government.

In regard to the McMurtry and McLeod locations, the Attorney General says:

It will be seen from this that the merits of the question in regard to the fraud charged by the Government as to the McMurtry and McLeod locations were neither considered nor determined in these cases, in either the court of appeals or the district court.

Now comes a most pertinent fact that is not disclosed in the report submitted by Senator PITTMAN, which is, that at the same time Judge Bean disposed of the cases above referred to, he decided the case of United States v. Thirty-two Oil Co. (242 Fed., 730), and that this case involved the McMurtry and McLeod locations. In the Thirty-two Oil Co. case there was no question of jurisdiction as in the Consolidated Mutual Oil Co. case, but the decision was on the merits and for the Government, on the ground that defendants had not diligently prosecuted discovery work as required by the Pickett Act, the so-called "group-development theory" of operation being rejected. The court in its opinion, appearing on page 733 of Two Hundred and Forty-second Federal Reporter, said as to the McMurtry and McLeod locations:

"It is claimed by the Government that the paper locations by McMurtry in 1907 and 1909 were not made by him for the benefit of the alleged locators, but for himself and others, and were therefore a fraud on the mining law and void. I am disposed to believe there is merit in this contention. Indeed, there can be no question from the evidence but what the alleged locations made in 1909 were not for the use and benefit of the named locators, but to enable McMurtry to consumate and carry out the previous contract made by him with McLeod and others for the disposition of the property as heretofore stated. But I do not deem it necessary to put the case on that ground. If the defendants have any right to the property as against the plaintiff, it is conferred by the Pickett Act, and the facts do not bring them within the remedial provisions of that law."

From this it will be clearly seen what the court's view was as to the fraud charged by the Government against these locations.

I should like to say in this connection that I have not examined it particularly, so as to speak of my knowledge, but I am informed that these locations were made by petitions obtained, some of them, in the stockyards in Chicago, and then the locations were made in their name, involving millions and millions of dollars of these oil lands. The Government afterwards went to the stockyards and asked these parties if they knew anything about the locations, and I am informed that some of them said that they thought they were signing petitions required by the election law, and they knew nothing about it—that their names were used for these parties to locate lands in the oil reserves.

The Government, as far as its Navy Department is concerned, has never asked to take from or to add one right that these parties have under the Pickett Act. The Navy Department has asked for no legislation to change the law. These people came here and had the Pickett Act passed to give relief, and it gave no more than they are entitled to under the mining law, as I understand it. They accepted that. The Government stands on that. It does not desire to change it. Every right under the Pickett law these people will have. Now an effort is made to change that law to make good these fraudulent entries, as we conceive them to be, to eliminate the necessity of the continuous prosecution of the work. It is the change of the law and the change of title, giving these people what they are not entitled to, that the Navy Department has always opposed and objected to.

They think everything anyone is entitled to under the Pickett law, under the law passed as a compromise, accepted by Congress and these parties, they ought to have, but they can see no reason why the law should be changed to benefit a few people when they have not changed it to benefit thousands and thousands of miners and operators in other cases.

Now, as to the other purpose of the Navy Department, I desire to make this distinction. The Senator from Nevada [Mr.

PITTMAN] has usually antagonized these bills, because he has taken the ground the Navy contended, that these lands were being exhausted, and consequently if the Government withdraws its title it would lose all interest. The mines can not be closed up, it is true. These oil wells can not be closed up. Water will seep in these and destroy them. There are about 250 wells open. We tried to get a compromise at one time to let the people have the wells that were open, but that attempted compromise fell through.

Now, the Government comes in and says it desires to condemn this land, to let this naval reserve be set aside absolutely and entirely for the purposes of the Navy, treating everybody equitably and legally in regard to what they have, not adding to their right or subtracting from their right, under the law, and let the Government continue to run these wells and use the oil for the Navy, the Navy to dispose of it; but it does not desire any more wells opened in this naval reserve, because the ships of the Navy now being built are to be operated by oil, and if anything should occur in ten, twenty, or a hundred years, having great battleships, we should not leave it to conjecture, but give the Navy Department a right to condemn these lands and hold them as a reserve for the Navy.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator for a few questions, but not for a speech in reply to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not wish to make any speech in reply. I do not know enough about the subject.

I should like to ask the Senator from Virginia if it is not a fact that the oil now in stock in this country is not decreasing with alarming rapidity, and whether the Navy Department is doing anything to procure from its reserves a supply of oil for the Navy? I think I asked the Secretary of the Navy if any possible emergency in this country greater than the one now facing the American people was liable to happen in 15 or 20 years. I should like to know from the acting chairman of the Naval Committee whether the Government is taking any steps to procure oil from the naval reserves in this country?

Mr. SWANSON. These two hundred and fifty-odd wells that were open are still being used, and all the oil is extracted from them that it is possible to extract. The Navy Department has not authority, and Congress has not given it authority, to operate, sell, refine, or to seize these lands with a view of operation. The purpose now of the Navy Department, as I understand it in my conversation with the Secretary of the Navy, is that he desires, even where people have title, where patents have been issued to some people in this naval reserve and some patents to railroads, that the reserve should be set aside for the Navy. He desires to have the power to condemn this land and let the wells, machinery, and everything belong to the Government precisely as we condemn other property for public use. At the same time he wishes to have authority to open wells, to get oil, to refine oil, and to conserve it for what is conceived to be the best interest of the Navy now and the best interest of the Navy for the future.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. KELLOGG. I should like to know if the Secretary of the Navy or the acting chairman of the Naval Committee has asked that legislation of Congress, because it does seem to be of vital importance that we should know whether we are going to get an oil supply during this war.

Mr. SWANSON. I will say to the Senator that the Attorney General and the Secretary of the Navy and myself on the 1st of January had a conference in regard to preparing a bill to carry out these purposes. The bill was prepared. The bill gives authority to the President, like the other measures that have been passed. I did not feel that I ought to be called on to introduce a bill giving authority to the President to fix prices, to settle suits, to isolate this as a naval reserve, until I had consulted the President. I never like to ask the Secretary of the Navy to be given authority until I see whether it is agreeable, or the Attorney General or any other department of our Government. I have not had an opportunity to see the President to ascertain if it would be agreeable to him to have the authority conferred on him in regard to these naval lands such as was given to commandeer steel, iron, and other products necessary for the Navy and to condemn private lands for public use. I hope to be able to see the President in a few days, and to see the Secretary of the Interior and the gentlemen who are interested in this matter and see if we can not perfect legislation.

I have my views, and I should like to get the views of others before I introduce a bill, which I hope to introduce Monday or Tuesday—possibly to-morrow—in which this authority is given.

I will say for myself that I think the law in this case should be the same as it is in all other similar cases. These people should not be deprived of any right that other people are given, and they should not be given any greater right than is given any other people. I believe when the Government condemns this land it ought to treat these people precisely as justly as it treats all the parties who have rights when the Government exercises the right of eminent domain.

Mr. KELLOGG. I will say to the Senator from Virginia——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. KELLOGG. I beg the Senator's pardon for taking his time.

Mr. KING. I am very glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. KELLOGG. I will say to the Senator from Virginia I was not asking the question bearing on any discussion as to the merits of litigation in the reserves, but there was testimony before the Public Lands Committee last spring, which was undisputed, showing the imperative necessity to procure a greater supply of oil in order to make this country safe, and there was testimony as to the danger of losing a supply of oil that the allied nations to-day are depending on. So far as I heard at that time no steps whatever were taken by the Government to procure oil for immediate use. I am very glad the Senator is taking steps to see that the naval reserves belonging to the Government can be utilized.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator from Utah will permit me, these wells, I understand from my information, which I suppose is the same as other Senators have received, are still running. There are more than 250 wells open and disposed of, but the Government desires to have an opportunity to open as it sees proper for the benefit of the Navy these reserves set aside for the Navy.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not care to enter upon a discussion of the wisdom or expediency of the legislation proposed by the Senator from Virginia. I know he has been zealous in the advocacy of those measures which have resulted in bringing our Navy to such a high state of efficiency. I congratulate him and the country for the splendid services rendered by him in behalf of this important branch of our national defense. And I wish to say, in passing, that I congratulate the country upon the most excellent work performed by the present Secretary of the Navy. When the history of his administration shall have been written I have no doubt but that it will be said of him that he was a strong and able public servant. Indeed, in my opinion, he is one of the greatest Secretaries of the Navy our country has ever had. However, this commendation, to which he is so justly entitled, does not excuse his department for the usurpations of which I am complaining. I can well understand the solicitude of the Navy Department which prompts those in control of the same to secure an adequate fuel supply for our ships. There may be some difference of opinion as to the best method of securing this supply. There will be many who will take the view that the Government can not successfully engage in the mining business; that it can secure the necessary oil for its use through private instrumentalities. We all know that the efforts of the Government to carry on business enterprises results in greatly increased costs. It has been stated by those having full opportunities to know the facts that the administration of the departments of the Government if in the hands of private persons would result in a saving of $300,000,000 per annum.

When the Government attempts to sink wells to prospect for oil, drill wells, lay pipe lines, construct receptacles for oil, erect refineries, and perform the necessary work incident to oil production, it will be found that the expenses will be staggering. I do not propose at this time to discuss the feasibility or the wisdom of the proposed policy to condemn oil lands owned and claimed by private individuals. I suggest to the distinguished Senator from Virginia that in executing a law of that character he and the Government will encounter many obstacles, difficulties, and complications not now anticipated. It has been stated by the Senator from Virginia, as I recall and by Government officials, that the lands which it is proposed to condemn are worth millions of dollars. In exercising the right of eminent domain the Government will discover difficulties in finding an acceptable basis for the ascertainment of the value of the property sought to be condemned. I suggest to the Navy Department and to the Senator from Virginia that careful consideration be given this proposed legislation before it is introduced and before it becomes a law.

It is not a sufficient answer to the objections which I am urging against this bill for the Senator from Virginia to aver that certain oil claims were fraudulently located. I have no knowledge of the matters to which he refers, other than as stated in the report accompanying this bill and in the decisions of the courts which I have recently examined. That there have been some entries made that were tainted with fraud and indeed were fraudulently made may be true. No one is seeking to defend any entry that is invalid or the claim of any individual or corporation that is founded in fraud. I know that the committee reporting this bill would as quickly condemn fraudulent entries as would the Senator from Virginia. It is apparent from an examination of the report and the bill under consideration that the committee have attempted to protect certain oil claims that were made in good faith and rest in sound morals.

But the point I am attempting to make is this, that the committee and the courts recognize that there are many valid oil locations; that the Interior Department has recognized their validity and has indicated "by clear listing" applications for patent; that the locators are entitled to muniments of title; but that, notwithstanding these facts, the Navy Department and the Department of Justice have brought numerous suits against these valid entrymen or their successors in interest to deprive them of their property and their rights; and Congress is now declining to assert its authority in the interest of justice and the protection of valid and legitimate claims.

I am protesting against the action of certain departments in their efforts to deprive individuals and corporations of property to which they are justly entitled.

I think the Senator from Virginia is mistaken when he alleges that the committee reporting the bill under consideration have attempted to give greater protection to oil locators than the present law affords them. The bill under consideration does not, as I understand it, attempt to validate invalid mining claims or to give them a different status from that which they now enjoy. I am sure the committee can be acquitted of any purpose to vitalize dead claims or to legitimatize acts which were fraudulent. I have not in anything I have said urged a recognition of fraudulent claims. I am simply protesting against unwarranted usurpation by the departments and the manifest impropriety of the Navy Department in interfering with the legitimate functions of the Interior Department.

Senators will recall that the Interior Department is charged with the administration of the public lands; that it has important functions to perform in the disposition of mineral as well as agricultural lands belonging to the Government.

Mr. SWANSON. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. KING. Yes; I yield to my friend from Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. Appropriations were made by Congress directing the Secretary of the Navy and the Attorney-General to defend the rights of the Government in these naval reserves. If they had not done that they would have been recreant in their duty. They have never insisted on any course except the course that the Interior Department should pass on the legal rights as they exist under existing law. We contend that section 16 changes existing law. We claim that it would validate a claim for entry provided the present claimant did not know it was a fraud. We have insisted that as the present law is, a man must buy land to make a proper and legal entry. It would be utterly impossible for the Government to prove in the cases of these dummy entries made by petitions circulated in the Chicago stockyards as to whether a party who signed knew it was a fraud or not. We want the law to stay as it is to-day. Let us administer justice and law as it is to-day, and do not change it. That is all the Navy Department and the Attorney-General have ever insisted upon. These cases that are contested courts are constituted to settle. They have never asked that these claims should be litigated anywhere except in the courts of the United States fixed by law to determine the rights between the Government and other parties.

Mr. KING. I do not think the Senator from Virginia in his last speech has enlightened us any or has added to the very clear statement which he made a few moments ago, and to the very lucid and forceful statement submitted by him when this measure was under consideration before the holiday recess. But certainly he has not justified the course of the Secretary of the Navy or the Attorney General in attempting to interfere with legislation by Congress in dealing with the public domain. It is that of which I complain. It is not the concern of the Attorney General or the Secretary of the Navy as to the character of legislation that shall be enacted by the Congress of the United States. The executive department has its sphere and the legislative branch of the Government has its legitimate sphere, and when the executive attempts to interfere with the legislative branch of the Government it is transcending its constitutional power.

I call the attention of my distinguished friend from Virginia to the fact that we have in the Interior Department a vigilant official. Perhaps no more vigilant official has ever occupied the position of Secretary of the Interior than Mr. Lane. Everyone knows, particularly those of us who live in the West, that the Interior Department very carefully guards the interests of the Federal Government. Indeed, many of us think that it so scrupulously and minutely examines legitimate claims by the people of the West when they assert their rights under the law that grave injustice is often done and the development of the West greatly retarded.

The Secretary of the Interior has at his command a large number of officials. There are various bureaus and departments charged with the responsibility of investigating every claim that is made for patent. If a mining location is made, whether it be upon oil lands or upon metalliferous lands, and patent is sought, it is investigated by the Department of the Interior, by the Geological Survey Bureau, by the Forest Reserve, and by a multitude of employees of the Government. And before patent is issued the application has to pass the scrutiny of a multitude of lynx-eyed employees of the Government.

Now, as I understand the situation, a portion of the lands within this naval reserve have been examined by the Interior Department, the validity of the claims have been attested in unmistakable language and by numerous officials of the Government, and it was determined that the locators were entitled to patent, evidencing their muniment of title from the Federal Government.

The proceedings of the Interior Department were in the nature of judicial acts, for in the performance of this work the function of the Interior Department is quasi judicial at least, and is exclusive. That is, its jurisdiction in the matter is exclusive. Yet in the face of its determination, after numerous claims had been "clear listed" and the Interior Department had adjudged that the locators were entitled to patent, the Secretary of the Navy and the Attorney General instituted suits in the courts of the United States for the purpose of thwarting the work of the Interior Department and of invalidating claims the validity of which had been thus solemnly determined.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, though I may be mistaken——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SWANSON. I might be mistaken, for I am not so well acquainted with mineral law as the Senator from Utah and other western Senators, but I understand that where an application for a patent is pending suit can not be instituted, but it must be prosecuted before the Secretary of the Interior, but the cases where application is not made for a patent have been the cases where suits can be brought. Is that true?

Mr. PITTMAN rose.

Mr.. KING. I yield to the Senator from Nevada, who has risen.

Mr. PITTMAN. The case referred to is the Honolulu Oil Co. case. The Department of the Interior held time and time again that the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior was exclusive, and that no court had jurisdiction pending application proceedings.

Mr. SWANSON. Pending application for patent.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Attorney General of the United States apparently took a different view of it, because he instituted a suit against the Honolulu Oil Co. while the patent proceedings were pending, even after it had been clear listed for patent, and in an attempt to get jurisdiction of that matter he persuaded the President of the United States to write a letter to the Secretary of the Interior, which is a matter of record, asking the Secretary of the Interior to desist from further proceedings in the matter; and the Secretary of the Interior wrote to the Attorney General, which is in evidence in the hearings before the committee, stating that he would desist. The Attorney General then asked the Secretary of the Interior to authorize him, the Attorney General, to conduct further hearings, and the Secretary of the Interior told the Attorney General he did not desire any further hearings or any further facts; that he was satisfied. Subsequent to that time, in another case where a patent application was pending, the district court of California held that the court had no jurisdiction because the jurisdiction of the Land Office had taken effect upon the application for patent. That is the situation.

Mr. SWANSON. As I understand it, if there was fraud afterwards discovered, even after a patent is granted, a suit can be instituted to vacate the patent.

Mr. PITTMAN. Oh, yes; undoubtedly.

Mr. SWANSON. I understand that in the Honolulu case, the Attorney General told me the other day when we were talking about it, they have additional evidence which they are satisfied will invalidate the matter. They have asked for a rehearing, I understand, before the land commissioner in California, and the proof in that case will be conclusive.

Mr. PITTMAN. What has that to do with it?

Mr. SWANSON. It has this to do with it: If the Honolulu people have gotten a million dollars' worth of land to which they were not entitled and which shows a conspiracy and a combination to deprive the Government of it, we ought to be pleased that we have an Attorney General and a Secretary of the Interior to show it.

If it is a fraudulent patent, obtained by misrepresentation of fact, whether they procure a patent or not they have a right to have it vacated. The Attorney General, I think, has asked that the Honolulu case shall be reopened on a recent disclosure of facts which shows a state of affairs that ought not to be tolerated in Congress or anywhere.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. I rose to discuss the question of law, and the Senator from Virginia is constantly getting away from that question. What I want to suggest is this, that although the Attorney General for a long time contended that the courts had concurrent jurisdiction with the Department of the Interior in matters determining applications for patents in disposing of public land, he has changed his mind on that subject since the decision of the district court of California has held that it has no jurisdiction in the suit he instituted. If he had any additional facts that were not submitted to the Department of the Interior, he knows where the Department of the Interior is located.

Mr. SWANSON. I may be mistaken; I am not positive; but I understand he asked to have this case reopened. In reply to the Senator from Utah that it was his impression that the Attorney General and the Secretary of the Navy are bringing suits where applications for patents were clear and repeated, I contend now that they can not file an application for a patent pending in the Interior Department, because, as I understand, as the Senator from Nevada has said, that the action of the Interior Department is conclusive of the fact, and that the only way they can do it is to disclose what was not disclosed before.

Mr. KING. As I said before, the Secretary of the Interior, after applications for patents had been made with respect to some of the lands to which reference has been made, ordered the necessary investigation, and after this investigation was made the Interior Department clear listed these lands; that is, determined that the locators and applicants for patents were entitled to patent from the Government; and after several thousand acres of these lands had been clear listed by the Interior Department, which was an indication that the applicants for patents were entitled to have them issued, the Attorney General, at the request of the Secretary of the Navy, instituted suit for the purpose of ousting the owners from possession and placing the property in the hands of receivers.

Now, it is of that that I complain. I think it is an unwarranted usurpation upon the part of certain executive officers of the Government. I think it is treating with contumely and reproach the Interior Department that is charged with the high responsibility of issuing patents and of making the necessary preliminary investigation to determine whether patents should issue.

Mr. President, the Senator from Virginia called attention a few moments ago to some memoranda which, as I understood, had been placed in his hands by the Attorney General. It is not clear to me from his hasty reading of the same what the result of the litigation was; but, as I gathered from his reading of the memoranda, the Government had not prevailed finally in a single suit which it had brought. At any rate, one of the cases to which the Senator referred, and which it seems to me is a type of much of the litigation, was the case of the Consolidated Mutual Oil Co. against the United States. The Senator from Nevada asks me to read the decision. In view of the limited time for debate upon this bill I will read only a portion of the opinion. But I desire to call the attention of the Senate, and particularly the attention of my distinguished friend from Virginia, to the syllabus of this case. That illustrates the point, and it seems to me clearly establishes the infirmity of his argument and the erroneous position which has been assumed by the Secretary of the Navy and by the Attorney General. The syllabus is as follows:

An oil placer-mining claim, located on surveyed land by an association of eight persons, pursuant to Revised Statutes, paragraphs 2329–2333 (Comp. St., 1916, pars. 4628–4632), and covering a quarter section, constitutes a single claim, and under act February 12, 1903, chapter 548, Thirty-second Statutes, 825 (Comp. St., 1916, par. 4636), development work done on any one of a group of such claims not exceeding five lying contiguous and owned by the same person or association inures to the benefit of all where it tends to their development. The President's proclamation of September 27, 1909, withdrawing certain oil lands from entry provides that "all locations or claims existing and valid on this date may proceed to entry in the usual manner after field investigation and examination," and act June 25, 1910, chapters 421–422, Thirty-sixth Statutes, 847 (Comp. St., 1916, par. 4524), provides that "the rights of any person who, at the date of any order of withdrawal heretofore or hereafter made, is a bona fide occupant or claimant of oil or gas bearing lands, and who at such date is in the diligent prosecution of work leading to the discovery of oil or gas, shall not be affected or impaired by such order so long as such occupant or claimant shall continue in diligent prosecution of said work." At the time of the withdrawal proclamation one of the defendants, who was the owner of four contiguous quarter section claims, was in possession of the same through his lessee, which was then diligently prosecuting the work of development, and had commenced a well on one claim and expended $20,000 in preparations for drilling on each claim. This work was continued, and oil was found in paying quantities. In 1914 defendant entered and paid for the land, and there was issued to him a final receipt.

The court upon this state of facts held:

(1) That the exception in the President's proclamation in favor of existing and valid locations did not apply to claims on which oil had been discovered and to which the claimants therefore had an indefeasible equitable title, but applied to all locations to which the claimants had some valid right; (2) that the work done inured to the benefit of all of defendant's claims, and that under the facts he acquired a valid title which could not be questioned by the United States.

The Senator from Virginia has referred to one of the defendants, McLeod. As I understand, the Senator contends that his information is to the effect that the validity of the McLeod entry was denied, and the court held his entry to be fraudulent. The information of the Senator is incorrect. This decision discusses the Executive proclamation of President Taft, issued September 27, 1909, withdrawing certain oil lands from all forms of location, settlement, entry, or disposal, under the mineral or nonmineral public land laws. The court also construes what is also known as the Pickett Act, passed June 25, 1910, and holds that where locators diligently prosecuted work upon their claims after the proclamation of withdrawal, and discovered oil, that the act of withdrawal did not affect the validity of their location. Indeed, the court expressly decides that in such circumstances the location would be valid. The court refers to the case of United States v. Grass Creek Oil & Gas Co. (236 Fed., 481), wherein this language is employed:

It is claimed that actual drilling operations were not commenced until July 1, 1914, on the northwest quarter, and on July 31, 1914, on the east half of the southwest quarter, and that until the actual drilling was begun there was no prosecution of work within the meaning of the act of Congress. We are of the opinion that this is too narrow a view to take of this statute. The enactment of this proviso by Congress could have had but one object in view, and that was to protect the rights of all persons who, at the date of an order of withdrawal, are occupying or claiming oil-bearing lands in good faith, for the purpose of acquiring them under the laws of the United States, and are diligently prosecuting the work leading to the discovery of oil. Before the enactment of this statute discovery of the mineral was essential to make a location.

As frequently—in fact, in most instances—prospecting was necessary in order to determine whether oil or gas are on the public lands, and large sums of money were necessarily expended to ascertain this fact, Congress by this proviso in the act of 1910 extended its protecting arm to those acting in good faith in an effort to ascertain whether there was oil or gas under them. In our opinion, when a citizen of the United States in good faith enters upon public land for the purpose of discovering oil or gas, takes possession of the land by placing a caretaker thereon while he is taking proper steps to obtain the material necessary for the work of constructing the camps, enters into contracts for drilling, acting as expeditiously as possible in erecting camps and preparing for the drilling, spends money and enters into contracts whereby he becomes liable for sums of money to prosecute the work leading to the discovery of oil or gas, and as soon as it is possible, by the exercise of proper diligence, begins the work of drilling and continues it diligently and expeditiously until oil is discovered in commercial quantities, he is within the protection of this proviso.

The court also considers the question mentioned by the Senator from Virginia concerning the transfer by locators of their claims to other persons, and in this connection uses this language:

Moreover, Congress by its act of March 2, 1911 (36 Stat., 1015, c. 201 [Comp. St., 1916, sec. 4637], gave statutory recognition of the right of transfer or assignment by the locator, under the mining laws, of any land containing oil or gas to any qualified person, persons, or corporation "prior to discovery of oil or gas therein," provided "that such lands were not at the time of inception of development on or under such claim withdrawn from mineral entry."

Further discussing the facts in the case and the law governing the same, the court in the Consolidated case, just referred to, proceeds as follows:

But, over and above what has been said, the records show that upon due application to the Land Office of the United States the appellant McLeod was permitted to enter the lands here in question, for which he paid to the Government $1,600, receiving therefor its register's final certificate of entry, issued October 31, 1914, which certificate it appears remains uncanceled, and concerning which the bills in these suits, filed, as above stated, October 25, 1915, are entirely silent. In speaking of a similar receipt issued to the Brick Co. in the case of El Paso Brick Co. v. McKnight (233 U. S., 257; 34 Sup. Ct., 498; 58 L. Ed., 943; L. R. A. 1915A, 1113) the Supreme Court said:

"The entry by the local land officer issuing the final receipt was in the nature of a judgment in rem (Wight v. Dubois [C. C.], 21 Fed., 693), and determined that the Brick Co.'s original locations were valid and that everything necessary to keep them in force, including the annual assessment work, had been done. It also adjudicated that no adverse claim existed and that the Brick Co. was entitled to a patent. From that date and until the entry was lawfully canceled the Brick Co. was in possession under an equitable title, and to be treated as 'though the patent had been delivered to' it. Dahl v. Raunheim (132 U. S., 260, 262 [10 Sup. Ct., 74; 33 L. Ed., 324]); and when McKnight instituted possessory proceedings against the Brick Co. the latter was entitled to a judgment in its favor when it produced that final receipt as proof that it was entitled to a patent and to the corresponding right of an owner.'

Not only has no attack, so far as appears, been made by the Government on the register's final certificate of entry, but there is in these cases not the slightest showing of any fraud or lack of good faith at any time on the part of the appellants or of any of their predecessors in interest. True, the bills of the Government, which were verified by an agent upon information and belief, alleged that the location notices under which the appellants claim were posted by "mere dummies" to enable "defendant McLeod or some one else" to obtain the land; but that allegation was put in issue by positive denial under oath and there was no undertaking whatever to sustain the charge. Among the affidavits filed in opposition to the appointment of receivers was one made by the president of the appellant company, stating as facts the following, which were uncontradicted:

"That the said Consolidated Mutual Oil Co. acquired and entered into possession of said properties in the month of February, 1914, and from that time forward this deponent has been the president of said corporation and has had active management of its affairs; * * *.

I commend this information to Senators who may not be familiar with the legislation relating to mineral lands. It is true, as stated by the Senator from Virginia, that Justice Gilbert dissented, but I submit that a careful examination of the majority and minority opinions will clearly demonstrate that the reason is with the majority of the court and that the minority opinion is unsound.

I might say in passing that the Supreme Court of the United States finally passed upon the act of the President in withdrawing these oil lands from entry. The majority opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States upheld the Executive proclamation. The minority opinion, in which three of the justices concurred, construes the question involved in a calm and judicial manner and reaches the conclusion that the President had no authority to withdraw the lands in question. The majority opinion proceeded upon the theory that for a century public lands had been withdrawn by Executive proclamation. The deduction seems to be that, though such acts were usurpations, time sanctified them and transmuted the wrong into a right.

It would seem that the right of disposal of the public lands of the United States belonged to Congress. Indeed, the Constitution of the United States commits to the National Legislature the power to dispose of and make all needful legislation concerning the public lands of the United States.

Mr. President, there can be no difference of opinion between the Senator from Virginia and myself with respect to entries upon these or any other public lands that were fraudulently made, but the question whether some of these entries were fraudulently made is not the paramount question involved in the consideration of this bill. Assuming that we are to overthrow the work of the fathers and destroy our mineral-land system and inaugurate a leasing policy, we are forced by the disclosures in connection with this bill to a consideration of certain methods pursued by the executive departments of the Government and are also called upon to determine the fair, just, and expedient method of dealing with the situation which confronts us. The Interior Department is charged with the responsibility of determining whether the locations are valid or invalid; it is its duty to issue patents if the locations are valid. It is the duty of the Interior Department to refuse consent to the institution of suits where its investigations have resulted in the conviction that the applicants for patents are entitled to the same. Those persons or corporations asserting rights within the lands in question should not be harassed by unjust and improvident litigation. It is apparent from the report made by the Senator from Nevada and from the decision of the court in the Consolidated Mutual Oil case that many of the suits brought by the Government will fail; that the receivers will be discharged; and that the courts will decree that the locations from which the present occupants have deraigned title were valid.

Before resuming my seat I want to call the attention of the acting chairman of the committee to a number of provisions of this bill in order that I may have "light," which so many of the Senators here seem to be seeking. Inviting attention to the second section of the bill, this language is found:

SEC. 2. That any association composed of persons severally qualified by law to enter coal lands, or any corporation incorporated under and by virtue of the laws of any State, or any municipality of any State, shall, upon application to the register of the proper land office, have the right to enter by legal subdivisions any quantity of vacant coal lands of the United States within any State of the Union not otherwise appropriated or reserved by competent authority.

Mr. President, as I read this section, I can not find any individual, association, or corporation has a clear and positive right to purchase coal lands. The concluding part of the section, it seems to me, reserves the right to the Secretary of the Interior to determine whether or not a purchase shall be made. As I understood the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH], he was persuaded to vote for this bill, though he had fundamental objections to it, because it gave the right to the public to purchase coal lands and was not solely and exclusively a leasing bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Utah to section 2 of the bill.

Mr. KING. I have been reading from section 2.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Beginning in line 10 that section reads:

Within any State of the Union not otherwise appropriated—

Describing the character of the entry—

by competent authority, not exceeding 2,560 acres—

The word "reserved" is stricken out on an amendment which was made at the suggestion of the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]— by competent authority, not exceeding 2,560 acres, upon payment to the receiver of not less than $10 per acre for such lands where the same shall be situate more than 15 miles from any completed railroad, and not less than $20 per acre for such lands as shall be within 15 miles of such railroad.

That is the law as it is to-day, almost word for word. The language continues:

And the Secretary of the Interior shall offer such coal lands and award the same through advertisement and competitive bidding, reserving the right to reject any and all bids which he may deem to be unfair.

It does seem to me that that being the provision and the initiation of the matter being dependent upon the citizen or association making the entry in the office of the land register, there can not be any doubt that if a person makes that entry it is bound to be submitted, and the price of land is to be determined at not less than $10 in one instance nor less than $20 an acre in another, dependent upon the distance from the railroad, and subject to the competitive bidding that will take place just exactly the same as is provided for competitive bidding on leases.

Mr. KING. In the first place, Mr. President, the elimination of the word "reserved" does not relieve the section from ambiguity. After eliminating the word "reserved," taking up the sentence in the middle, and not going to the beginning of it, we find these words:

Not otherwise appropriated by competent authority.

I am not clear what the meaning of that language is, but, as I read it, it means that if coal lands are within a reservation they have been "appropriated by competent authority." I know of no land that would answer to the words "otherwise appropriated by competent authority," except lands that are found within a reserve. If that be true, then this bill makes no provision for either the leasing or the purchase of any lands that are within reserves. If the words "not otherwise appropriated by competent authority" are broader than the word "reserved," then they are still more objectionable than they would be if you limit the meaning of the language to the word "reserved."

So, Mr. President, we start out with a proposition that no person can buy or lease lands that are within a reserve; that no person can buy or lease lands that have been "otherwise lawfully appropriated." It is obvious, under the decisions of the courts, that if the lands are within reserves they have been "lawfully appropriated"—that is, they have been withdrawn from entry, withdrawn from sale, they are not subject to location or subject to private entry.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have always felt that in drafting bills the very best course one could pursue would be to take a statute that has already been enacted and which had received the construction of the court as to its phraseology. Consequently, in drafting section 2 of this bill, I observed that rule, but I want to call attention to just exactly what is the law of 1873 in relation to coal land, which has been on the United States statute books ever since that time. It is the right of any entryman to enter coal lands. Here is the language, and every word of that act is still in force and permits a man to take up 160 acres of land.

Mr. KING. Before the Senator from Colorado reads the law to which he is just calling attention, I should like to ask him if it is not a fact that when that law was enacted there were few if any coal-land withdrawals?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Here is the situation: I will read the provision of the law. I do not know whether or not there had been withdrawals; but I think there had been, for the Supreme Court, in its decision, stated that it had been the custom of all Presidents to reserve land for certain purposes. Now, listen to the language of the act which has been on the statute books for years:

Every person above the age of 21 years, who is a citizen of the United States, or who has declared his intention to become such, or any association of persons severally qualified as above, shall, upon application to the register of the proper land office, have the right to enter, by legal subdivisions, any quantity of vacant coal lands of the United States not otherwise appropriated or reserved by competent authority.

Those are the exact words of the statute, and I put those precise words into section 2. Under the existing law there has been no trouble about taking up land. The difficulty arose in the policy which was attempted to be pursued about 15 years ago of forcing a leasing system, and while the land was reserved temporarily, as a matter of fact it was held permanently by reclassification, fixing the price on the land so high that nobody would take it up.

The senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] said that the word "reserved" would perhaps prevent location on any of the lands that had been reserved, and so we have stricken that out, leaving the language identical with the language under which we have operated now for 44 years. When we have a statute which has stood that long and there has been no attempt, except indirectly, to evade it, under which it has been made clear that the land could be taken up, and which has met the construction of the courts, it seems to me it is safer to adopt the language of the statute than to employ new verbiage.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado, who is an exceedingly able lawyer and is perhaps as familiar, if not more familiar, with Western conditions than any other man in the Senate or in public life, has not answered the criticism which I made. It is not a sufficient answer, when we are legislating now in respect to the coal lands of the United States for the purpose of opening them up either through sale or lease, to reply that there was a statute enacted many years ago which provided that coal lands should be subject to private entry unless they "were otherwise appropriated." The Senator knows that 45,000,000 or 50,000,000 or more acres of coal land in the Western States have been withdrawn from entry under Executive proclamation, and that such lands are not subject to entry.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, the Senator is right in saying that they were at one time reserves; but the wording of the act under which they were reserved provided that the President should have the authority temporarily to reserve them. Under that act the Interior Department about 15 years ago, realizing that it would look unseemly for reserves made under such a temporary authority to last for a great period of time, concluded that the only way they could produce the same effect would be by putting a price upon the lands at which nobody would buy them, but under which probably somebody might lease them. For that reason, I have no doubt that lands in the State of the Senator from Utah are valued probably from $50 to $400 an acre, which prevents their development, because nobody will give such a price for the land, and nobody can afford to do so and make money. So I say the lands are not in reserves now, because they have avoided keeping them in reserves, while at the same time producing the effect of keeping them in reserves. An individual can make an entry of any coal land in the United States to-day if he is willing to pay the price which has been fixed over and above the $10 and the $20 an acre, as provided in the act, and it has been done several times.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado, before he resumes his seat, if it is not a fact that there are still millions of acres of coal lands not classified and which are within reservations or withdrawals, resulting from Executive orders?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not know definitely; I think most of it is classified, especially most of it that is near railroads. It may be that in the interior of some of the Western States, where it has been difficult for surveyors to go and where the lands are not desirable, even at $10 an acre, because the transportation is not there to carry the coal to market, there is some coal land that has not been classified, but I think there is a sweeping order making all of those lands open to entry at the minimum price fixed in the statute.

Mr. KING. My understanding is somewhat different from that of the Senator from Colorado. I believe that there are still large areas of coal lands covered by Executive orders and which are therefore held not to be subject to private entry.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. I want to call attention to the amendment on page 30. The copy of the bill the Senator has may not show it, but it is an amendment which has been adopted by the Senate. On line 6, page 30, after the word "lands," the following language has been inserted: "Heretofore withdrawn from entry, except those reserved for the Navy, shall be subject to this act, and none of such lands," so as to read:

Provided, That coal, oil, gas, potassium, or sodium lands heretofore withdrawn from entry, except those reserved for the Navy, shall be subject to this act, and none of such lands shall hereafter be withdrawn from the operation of this act for a longer period than one year without the consent of Congress.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think that amendment, if I understand the Senator from Nevada, would meet the particular objection which I am now urging.

Mr. PITTMAN. That amendment has been adopted.

Mr. KING. I was unaware of that fact.

Mr. PITTMAN. It is in the general provisions of the bill.

Mr. KING. With that understanding, I shall not further discuss that feature of the section; but, answering further the position of the Senator from Colorado, I call attention to this langunge in section 2:

And the Secretary of the Interior shall offer such coal lands and award the same through advertisement and competitive bidding, reserving the right to reject any and all bids which he may deem unfair.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, is that not an absolute perpetual reservation, if the Secretary of the Interior sees fit to make it so by setting a price at which no one will take the land?

Mr. KING. That is exactly the point that I was about to make. It gives the Secretary of the Interior unlimited authority and power. He is to determine what is fair and what is unfair; no price is stated below which it would be unfair and no standard suggested by which to determine what price would be fair.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Or reasonable or unreasonable.

Mr. KING. One Secretary of the Interior might say that $100 per acre was a fair price, while another Secretary might say that a thousand dollars was a fair price. It is left entirely within the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior to award a lease or to award a sale.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I, of course, recognize the fact that it has never been considered wise to make every attempted sale binding and legal, because there may arise questions in connection with the manner in which the advertisements were published, or fraud may have been perpetrated in securing combinations among bidders, and in various other ways. There must be something left to the man who has this trust in charge so as to avoid fraud on the Government. That is the reason that provision was put in. It may be that some officer would violate his oath of office, and that some officer might say, "I will not sell these lands; it would be unfair to do so unless they bring $500 an acre"; but we have to impute good faith to the officers of the Government; we can not say that an officer is going to deprive a person of the right to buy this land when there is a fair competition, when there are a number of persons present, when everybody has an opportunity to bid, and where the advertisement has been sufficient.

Mr. KING. Let me ask the Senator from Colorado if it is not a fact that the Interior Department has now, as the Senator intimated a few moments ago, placed prices upon coal lands so high that their purchase has been made impossible?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not know whether it was the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of Agriculture, but under one or the other the matter was placed under the influence of the former Chief of the Forestry Bureau, and these high prices resulted, so that we have had, I think, only three or four thousand acres of coal lands taken up in a great number of years.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will permit me, the prices already fixed by the Government officials have been unfair, have they not, because they have prevented entry, purchase, and sale?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; but I understand that prices have been changed and that there have been reductions in a number of instances in the value placed upon coal land. It seems to me, in legislating here, it is necessary to leave some things to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior in order to prevent frauds on the Government. That is my idea.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Might it not be possible under this provision for some Secretary to say, "Any kind of transfer of coal lands to private individuals is absolutely a danger to the Government and to the interests of the common people, and therefore"——

Mr. KING. And that no bid is fair——

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. "And therefore I will set a price at which nobody can afford to take the lands"? It is just as reasonable to suppose that that condition may happen as it is to suppose that we will always have a reasonable Secretary who will fix a reasonable price.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I would rather, especially after the experience we have had, when no coal development has taken place, risk a decision as to what is fair and what is right to the Secretary of the Interior. He can, of course, relieve himself from any criticism by saying that he put the land up at public auction and it brought a price which persons were willing to pay for it. But it can readily be seen that severe criticism could be made of this bill if we did not have a clause in it of that kind. Men may combine and agree not to bid against each other in order to get the land at $20 or $10 an acre; it may be that some person might stand on the outside and divert the crowd and say, "Do not come in; it is all over; the land is all gone; go home." That would produce an unfair price. So frauds might be perpetrated; and if the Secretary of the Interior were compelled to issue a deed or patent to such lands it would be very unfair to the Government. For that reason this discretion is left to him; but it is not unlimited; it is placed in him to be exercised when he deems the price unfair.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, does that not bring the Senator back to the old position that he and I have held, as I understand, through the many years of our public life, that all this governmental control, all this leasing system, all this selling system, only militates against the development of the great resources of our western country? And does it not come at last to the point that whenever you hamper it by the suggestion just made, the open bid, and confer on the Secretary the right to say whether it is fair or not—and in the very nature of things he can not know any more about it than I can—you make the devolution of the public lands and the development of our country dependent on the mere whim of anybody, instead of letting things alone, like they used to be, when a man could go out and take possession of the public domain under honest laws and develop our country as for the last 50 years only it has been developed?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that I have always been opposed to the leasing system. I think it never will be productive of development in the West. I predicted that no lease would be taken out in Alaska, although we debated that question here for two weeks, and the prediction was freely made by Senators from the Western States that there would not be a lease taken out in Alaska. There has not been, and it is because capital will not invest money on a lease that may be forfeited. That is the reason, and it is conclusive.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Yes; that is true.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It seems to me it is for that reason that people are now beginning to realize that we will not have any development without permitting these sales; but you have got to have some safeguard in regard to the sales, and for that reason I think that this one, which gives the Secretary the power to say that a sale that is unfair shall not take place, is a proper expression to prevent frauds against the Government.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the answer of the Senator from Colorado merely illustrates the difficulty that we encounter in legislating along the lines presented in this bill. When we depart from the system which has been in vogue for many years, and to which the Senator from Arizona has just referred, and which has been productive of good, and has developed not only the West but the entire country, and inaugurate a leasing, paternalistic, bureaucratic system and policy, such as is provided in this measure, we are going to encounter more difficulties and complications than we could anticipate even if we had broader vision than my distinguished friend from Colorado.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I quite agree with the Senator from Utah that there will be great complications if it is attempted to force through this leasing system. I am satisfied of that, and I am satisfied that we will not get development under any such circumstances; but I am putting up the test that I am so confident that there will not be any leasing that I am willing to risk the question in order to get these lands developed. Here we have been in this condition for 15 years, without any development, and the result has been that it has caused a monopoly in the coal companies that already own fee simple title to their coal lands. That being the case, we have got to risk something, and we have got to risk the good faith of the people of the country to administer the act.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the honesty of the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Nevada having this bill in charge, their broad and ripe experience, their well-known devotion to the West, and the knowledge we all have that they would do nothing that they did not conceive to be best under all the circumstances, almost persuade me to vote for this bill; yet I find so many objections to it that notwithstanding my profound respect and affection for the Senators just mentioned I can not bring myself to support it.

I have said all that I care to say, Mr. President, about the particular point that engaged our attention a moment ago. I merely repeat that the provisions of this section make it impossible, as a right that can be enforced in the courts, for any man to locate upon and obtain title to coal lands. The Secretary of the Interior has the power and the authority to prevent the sale of any land; and if he conceives a bid which has been offered to be too low he will then refuse to sell, and no man can go into court and compel him to exercise that discretion and sell the land to him.

There is one other objection to this section, Mr. President, and that is this:

Even if it be conceded that there is a right which might be enforced in the courts to compel the giving of a deed upon the tender of the bid, the land is to be advertised for sale and subjected to a competitive bidding system. What is the result? Only the corporation or individual of wealth can purchase. The poor man or the man of limited means can not acquire coal lands. Thus monopoly is fostered. Moreover, the greater price paid for the land the higher the price demanded from the public for the coal sold. The more a person has to pay for the coal lands which he acquires from the Government, the more difficult it is to get capital with which to purchase, the more difficult it is for him to put the mine in operation, and the higher price he has to charge for coal.

I think the policy of the Government, for a number of years at least, has been not to make money out of the sale of the public lands. It is true that many years ago, particularly in the days of Henry Clay, one of the great political parties of our Nation promulgated a platform the particular feature of which was that the public lands should be sold and that the proceeds derived from the sale of the lands should be divided among the States.

It was anticipated that millions would be derived from the sale of the public domain and that the States and the Government would derive great financial returns therefrom. But the American people repudiated that view; the public lands were no longer regarded as a source of revenue, but the public were encouraged to occupy and develop them, practically without charge.

Now we are reversing the modern policy of handling the public domain, and apparently the purpose is to make revenue and profit out of the public domain. I think it is unwise. I think it is unfair. I think the policy will not be approved by the American people.

Mr. President, I can not conclude the criticisms that I desire to offer to this bill within the next few moments. I think the desire of a number of Senators is to go into executive session before adjournment. I shall therefore yield the floor, with the intention of resuming to-morrow.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, for the purpose of referring to the committees the nominations that have come in.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE BATHRICK, OF OHIO.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions from the House of Representatives on the death of Hon. ELLSWORTH R. BATHRICK, late a Representative from the State of Ohio, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. ELLSWORTH R. BATHRICK, late a Representative from the State of Ohio.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I offer the following resolutions and ask that they be read.

The resolutions were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Senate resolution 176.

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. ELLSWORTH R. BATHRICK, late a Representative from the State of Ohio.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives and to the family of the deceased.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Representative, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, January 5, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate January 4, 1918.

COLLECTORS OF CUSTOMS.

Presley Stockton Ray, of Louisville, Ky., to be collector of customs in customs collection district No. 42, with headquarters at Louisville, Ky., in place of Warner S. Kinkead, deceased.

Charles E. Hardy, of Nogales, Ariz., to be collector of customs for customs collection district No. 26, with headquarters at Nogales, Ariz. (Reappointment.)

COLLECTOR OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

Howard Hathaway, of Everett, Wash., to be collector of internal revenue for the district of Hawaii, in place of John F. Haley, deceased.

Mr. Hathaway is serving under a temporary commission issued during the recess of the Senate.

REGISTERS OF LAND OFFICE.

Mrs. Mary Wolfe Dargin, of Colorado, to be register of the land office at Denver, Colo., her term having expired December 21, 1917. (Reappointment.)

Alvah G. Swindlehurst, of Minnesota, to be register of the land office at Cass Lake, Minn. His present term expired December 21, 1917. (Reappointment.)

William F. Cummins, of Mississippi, to be register of the land office at Jackson, Miss. His present term expired December 22, 1917. (Reappointment.)

Alex Nisbet, of Wyoming, to be register of the land office at Evanston, Wyo., his present term expiring January 24, 1918. (Reappointment.)

RECEIVERS OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

Fred A. King, of Minnesota, to be receiver of public moneys at Cass Lake, Minn. His present term expired December 21, 1917. (Reappointment.)

H. Clay Sharkey, of Mississippi, to be receiver of public moneys at Jackson, Miss. His present term expired December 22, 1917. (Reappointment.)

George I. Smith, of Oregon, to be receiver of public moneys at Portland, Oreg., his present term expiring January 30, 1918. (Reappointment.)

Richard R. Turner, of Oregon, to be receiver of public moneys at Roseburg, Oreg., his present term expiring January 30, 1918. (Reappointment.)

James P. Folger, of Wyoming, to be receiver of public moneys at Evanston, Wyo., his present term expiring January 14, 1918. (Reappointment.)

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 4, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, our Heavenly Father, Source of all wisdom, power, and goodness, imbue us plenteously, we beseech Thee, with these inestimable gifts, that with clear conceptions of right and truth and justice and an inflexible will and pure motives we may fulfill the obligations resting upon us, now and always, in the Spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

JOINT SESSION OF THE TWO HOUSES.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Concurrent resolution 31.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives Friday, the 4th day of January, 1918, at 12 o'clock and 30 minutes in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communication as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make to them.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GILLETT. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman why this resolution was not brought up yesterday, as has always been the practice in the past? It makes this body look a little ridiculous to go through the form of deliberating after the stage has been all set. It looks as if we were 24 hours behind all the rest of the country in knowing what was going to happen right here.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will say to the gentleman that I had not received notice that the President desired to come here at this time until after the House had adjourned yesterday. If I had known it yesterday before the House adjourned, I should have submitted the resolution then.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the day before yesterday he called up the White House to ascertain when the President desired to address the Congress. At that time no one at the White House was able to give that information. Yesterday, after the House had adjourned, my secretary notified me that the White House had called up and said that 12.30 o'clock to-day would be suitable to the President, if it was satisfactory to the Congress. I replied, of course, that it was satisfactory to us. The White House did not know that the House would adjourn so quickly yesterday. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for indefinite leave of absence for my colleague, Mr. DRUKKER, on account of illness.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent for indefinite leave of absence for his colleague, Mr. DRUKKER, on account of illness. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXCESS-PROFITS TAX.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein a brief, concise, and, I think, very clear statement in regard to the 8 per cent extra tax that the Congress has been criticized about, prepared by my colleague, Judge RUCKER.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing therein a statement by Mr. RUCKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes on a matter pertaining to the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, on the day that the Congress adjourned, the House will remember, we were debating the question of the excess-profits taxation on earned income. In that debate the distinguished leader upon the other side, Mr. KITCHIN, used as an illustration, to aid his argument, the investment in certain cotton factories. In reply I took up the gentleman's illustration and attempted to show the fallacy of the argument. I find in the RECORD that the gentleman from North Carolina has cut out all of that illustration, and that leaves me in the position of replying to something that apparently did not occur.

Mr. KITCHIN. Why, there must be some mistake about that.

Mr. LENROOT. But I have the transcript of the gentleman's remarks in my hand, showing that that particular portion was stricken out by some one.

Mr. KITCHIN. Not by me. I do not recall it.

Mr. LENROOT. And rewritten.

Mr. KITCHIN rose.

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, I do not intend to make any request in respect to it, except to say that because of that I have been put in the unfair attitude of putting in the mouth of the gentleman something which, according to the RECORD, he did not say.

This is a transcript of the gentleman's remarks, which I hand to him. I have no request to make in connection with it, except to say that when a Member makes an argument, and that argument is replied to, it is an abuse of the right of revision to cut out from the transcript all reference to the argument that is replied to, and I hope it will not be repeated.

Mr. KITCHIN. Before the gentleman takes his seat I want to say that if what the gentleman refers to is stricken out, it was an oversight upon my part. I certainly did not intend to strike out anything the gentleman said.

Mr. LENROOT. My point is that the gentleman, or somebody in behalf of the gentleman, struck out the illustration that the gentleman used to support his argument, and I replied to that illustration.

Mr. KITCHIN. Having just looked over the notes of my remarks, which the gentleman has handed me, I wish to state that the gentleman is correct. I find—and the notes show it—that in hurriedly revising my remarks, seeing that I had practically made a repetition of the same proposition, I struck out one, which happened to be the one containing the cotton-mill illustration.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. KINKAID. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein a letter from a constituent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

RESIGNATION FROM A COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resignation from a committee:

Mr. SPEAKER: Having been appointed upon the recently created Suffrage Committee, I hereby resign from the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands.

Very respectfully, THOMAS L. BLANTON.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation is accepted.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. Cox was granted five days' leave of absence on account of death in the family.

FILING OF A PETITION.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask leave to file petition from quite a number of citizens of Texas against limiting the number of cars on trains.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can place that in the basket.

FEDERAL FARM-LOAN ACT.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, I move that we proceed with the regular order, which is the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7731) on the House Calendar, and, pending that motion, I would like to reach some agreement with gentlemen on the other side about the time of debate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Virginia that this bill is on the House Calendar. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, I observe the bill is on the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. GLASS. And I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Is the bill properly on the House Calendar?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know what is in the bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The bill authorizes the expenditure of $100,000,000 this year and another $100,000,000 next, and I think properly it ought to be on the Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Of course it ought.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it be transferred to the Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that this bill be transferred to the Union Calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. The Senate bill upon the same subject is before the House. Why will not the gentleman ask that the Senate bill be considered in lieu of the House bill?

Mr. GLASS. That is what I expect to do later.

Mr. LENROOT. That is all right.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hear none. The gentleman from Virginia moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration——

Mr. GLASS. Pending that motion, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that we may consider the Senate bill on the same subject in lieu of the House bill. The Senate bill is numbered 3235.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to consider Senate bill 3235, of the same tenor, in lieu of the House bill. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Virginia whether he proposes, after he gets unanimous consent to consider the Senate bill, to offer the House bill as an amendment to the Senate bill?

Mr. GLASS. That is my purpose, Mr. Speaker—later to move to strike out all after the enacting clause in the Senate bill and substitute the House bill.

Mr. GARNER. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Now, has the gentleman any request to make in reference to time?

Mr. GLASS. I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I object to that. I think that we had better go into Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia to resolve the House into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Those in favor will say "aye"——

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to reach some arrangement as to debate on the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman should have made that request before the vote to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. GLASS. Well, I distinctly stated that, pending the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole——

Mr. GARNER. It has been suggested——

Mr. GLASS. I did not understand that we had gone into the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The House voted upon going into the Committee of the Whole, but then the gentleman preferred the question about time and, as a matter of fact, the House has not actually gone into the Committee——

Mr. GARNER. That is what I was going to say.

The SPEAKER. As the Speaker has not appointed a Chairman, Mr. GARNER suggested that the negative vote was not put.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my motion to go into the Committee of the Whole.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolution:

House concurrent resolution 31.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives Friday, the 4th day of January, 1918, at 12 o'clock and 30 minutes in the afternoon for the purpose of receiving such communication as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make to them.

RECESS.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 12.27.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] asks unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 12.27. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Chair wants to announce that these three inner rows of seats are to be set aside for the Senate. The House will now stand in recess under the unanimous-consent agreement.

Accordingly, at 12 o'clock and 19 minutes the House stood in recess until 12 o'clock and 27 minutes.

At the expiration of the recess the House resumed its session and was called to order by the Speaker.

JOINT MEETING OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE.

At 12 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m. the Doorkeeper, J. J. Sinnott, announced the Vice President of the United States and the Members of the United States Senate.

The Members of the House rose.

The Senate, preceded by the Vice President and by their Secretary and Sergeant at Arms, entered the Chamber.

The Vice President took the chair at the right of the Speaker and the Members of the Senate took the seats reserved for them.

The SPEAKER. On the part of the House, the Chair appoints Messrs. KITCHIN, SHERLEY, SIMS, CARLIN, CANNON, ESCH, and AUSTIN as a committee to wait on the President and conduct him into the Hall.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On the part of the Senate, the Chair appoints Senators MARTIN, GALLINGER, OVERMAN, LODGE, SMOOT, POMERENE, and PHELAN.

At 12 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m. the President of the United States, escorted by the committee of Senators and Representatives, entered the Hall of the House and stood at the Clerk's desk, amid prolonged applause.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen of the Sixty-fifth Congress, I present the President of the United States. [Applause.]

ADDRESS OF THE PRESIDENT (H. DOC. 764).

The PRESIDENT. Mr. Speaker, Mr. President, and gentlemen of the Congress, I have asked the privilege of addressing you in order to report to you that on the twenty-eighth of December last, during the recess of the Congress, acting through the Secretary of War and under the authority conferred upon me by the act of Congress approved August 29, 1916, I took possession and assumed control of the railway lines of the country and the systems of water transportation under their control. [Applause.] This step seemed to be imperatively necessary in the interest of the public welfare, in the presence of the great tasks of war with which we are now dealing. As our own experience develops difficulties and makes it clear what they are, I have deemed it my duty to remove those difficulties wherever I have the legal power to do so. To assume control of the vast railway systems of the country is, I realize, a very great responsibility, but to fail to do so in the existing circumstances would have been a much greater. I assumed the less responsibility rather than the weightier.

I am sure that I am speaking the mind of all thoughtful Americans when I say that it is our duty as the representatives of the Nation to do everything that it is necessary to do to secure the complete mobilization of the whole resources of America by as rapid and effective means as can be found. Transportation supplies all the arteries of mobilization. Unless it be under a single and unified direction, the whole process of the Nation's action is embarrassed.

It was in the true spirit of America, and it was right, that we should first try to effect the necessary unification under the voluntary action of those who were in charge of the great railway properties; and we did try it. The directors of the railways responded to the need promptly and generously. The group of railway executives who were charged with the task of actual coordination and general direction performed their difficult duties with patriotic zeal and marked ability, as was to have been expected, and did, I believe, everything that it was possible for them to do in the circumstances. If I have taken the task out of their hands, it has not been because of any dereliction or failure on their part, but only because there were some things which the Government can do and private management can not. We shall continue to value most highly the advice and assistance of these gentlemen, and I am sure we shall not find them withholding it.

It had become unmistakably plain that only under Government administration can the entire equipment of the several systems of transportation be fully and unreservedly thrown into a common service without injurious discrimination against particular properties. Only under Government administration can an absolutely unrestricted and unembarrassed common use be made of all tracks, terminals, terminal facilities, and equipment of every kind. Only under that authority can new terminals be constructed and developed without regard to the requirements or limitations of particular roads. But under Government administration all these things will be possible—not instantly, but as fast as practical difficulties, which can not be merely conjured away, give way before the new management.

The common administration will be carried out with as little disturbance of the present operating organizations and personnel of the railways as possible. Nothing will be altered or disturbed which it is not necessary to disturb. We are serving the public interest and safeguarding the public safety, but we are also regardful of the interest of those by whom these great properties are owned and glad to avail ourselves of the experience and trained ability of those who have been managing them. It is necessary that the transportation of troops and of war materials, of food and of fuel, and of everything that is necessary for the full mobilization of the energies and resources of the country, should be first considered, but it is clearly in the public interest also that the ordinary activities and the normal industrial and commercial life of the country should be interfered with and dislocated as little as possible, and the public may rest assured that the interest and convenience of the private shipper will be as carefully served and safeguarded as it is possible to serve and safeguard it in the present extraordinary circumstances.

While the present authority of the Executive suffices for all purposes of administration, and while of course all private interests must for the present give way to the public necessity, it is, I am sure you will agree with me, right and necessary that the owners and creditors of the railways, the holders of their stocks and bonds, should receive from the Government an unqualified guarantee that their properties will be maintained throughout the period of Federal control in as good repair and as complete equipment as at present, and that the several roads will receive under Federal management such compensation as is equitable and just alike to their owners and to the general public. I would suggest the average net railway operating income of the three years ending June 30, 1917. I earnestly recommend that these guarantees be given by appropriate legislation, and given as promptly as circumstances permit.

I need not point out the essential justice of such guarantees and their great influence and significance as elements in the present financial and industrial situation of the country. Indeed, one of the strong arguments for assuming control of the railroads at this time is the financial argument. It is necessary that the values of railway securities should be justly and fairly protected and that the large financial operations every year necessary in connection with the maintenance, operation and development of the roads should, during the period of the war, be wisely related to the financial operations of the Government. Our first duty is, of course, to conserve the common interest and the common safety and to make certain that nothing stands in the way of the successful prosecution of the great war for liberty and justice, but it is also an obligation of public conscience and of public honor that the private interests we disturb should be kept safe from unjust injury, and it is of the utmost consequence to the Government itself that all great financial operations should be stabilized and coordinated with the financial operations of the Government. No borrowing should run athwart the borrowings of the Federal Treasury, and no fundamental industrial values should be anywhere unnecessarily impaired. In the hands of many thousands of small investors in the country, as well as in national banks, in insurace companies, in savings banks, in trust companies, in financial agencies of every kind, railway securities, the sum total of which runs up to some ten or eleven thousand millions, constitute a vital part of the structure of credit, and the unquestioned solidity of that structure must be maintained.

The Secretary of War and I easily agreed that, in view of the many complex interests which must be safeguarded and harmonized, as well as because of his exceptional experience and ability in this new field of governmental action, the Honorable William G. McAdoo was the right man to assume direct administrative control of this new executive task. [Applause.] At our request, he consented to assume the authority and duties of organizer and Director General of the new Railway Administration. He has assumed those duties and his work is in active progress.

It is probably too much to expect that even under the unified railway administration which will now be possible sufficient economies can be effected in the operation of the railways to make it possible to add to their equipment and extend their operative facilities as much as the present extraordinary demands upon their use will render desirable without resorting to the national treasury for the funds. If it is not possible, it will, of course, be necessary to resort to the Congress for grants of money for that purpose. The Secretary of the Treasury will advise with your committees with regard to this very practical aspect of the matter. For the present, I suggest only the guarantees I have indicated and such appropriations as are necessary at the outset of this task. I take the liberty of expressing the hope that the Congress may grant these promptly and ungrudgingly. We are dealing with great matters and will, I am sure, deal with them greatly. [Applause.]

At 12 o'clock and 33 minutes p. m. the President retired from the Hall of the House.

At 12 o'clock and 34 minutes p. m. the Speaker announced that the joint session had dissolved.

Thereupon the Vice President and Members of the Senate returned to their Chamber.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Sundry messages, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

On December 18, 1917:

H. J. Res. 193. Joint resolution authorizing the payment of salaries of officers and employees of Congress for December, 1917.

On December 20, 1917:

H. R. 6967. An act to increase the number of midshipmen at the United States Naval Academy; and

S. 2334. An act to authorize absence by homestead settlers and entrymen, and for other purposes.

On December 26, 1917:

S. J. Res. 114. Joint resolution extending the commission provided for in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1917, with the same authorities, powers, and provisions until on or before March 1, 1918.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 2918. An act providing that the forfeiture provisions of land laws shall not apply in the case of persons in the military and naval service during the present war; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 27. An act to encourage the reclamation of certain arid lands in the State of Nevada, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands.

S. 1766. An act to authorize the President to appoint Col. L. Mervin Maus to the grade of brigadier general in the United States Army and place him on the retired list; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 2493. An act to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes," approved December 29, 1916; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 730. An act granting certain coal lands to the town of Kaycee, Wyo.; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. J. Res. 117. Joint resolution amending the act of July 2, 1909, governing the holding of civil-service examinations; to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

S. 2852. An act to increase the limit of cost of the Federal building and site therefor at Moultrie, Ga.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech on the subject of relations of the railroads to the public and also of the States to the Federal Government, by Jeremiah S. Black.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

FEDERAL FARM LOANS.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 3235, and pending that motion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to reach some agreement with the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES] as to the time. I would suggest that an hour on a side be devoted to general debate. Is that agreeable to my colleague?

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, a good many on this side would like to be heard. I think that length of time would be rather short. I would suggest two hours on a side.

Mr. GLASS. I suggest to my colleague that the bill will be considered under the five-minute rule.

Mr. HAYES. I am well aware of that.

Mr. GLASS. And those who do not engage in general debate will have ample opportunity under the five-minute rule.

Mr. HAYES. But under the rules of the House it will be possible to shut gentlemen out. They can not get general debate under that head, unless the House so desires. If any considerable part of the House desire to shut it off, they can do so.

Mr. GLASS. Does the gentleman anticipate that after we have consumed two hours of general debate there will be much desire to speak under the five-minute rule?

Mr. HAYES. I do. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this is a very important matter, one rather extraordinary and revolutionary in character, and ought to be thoroughly discussed, and I think that two hours on a side is little enough.

Mr. GLASS. I will suggest to my colleague that when the House adjourned for the holidays we had under consideration and were prepared to vote on a rule that allowed only one hour of general debate, which I think was ample.

Mr. HAYES. But, as I have been informed, the House did not agree to that one hour, and the matter was left open.

Mr. GLASS. The House did not come to any decision on the matter at all.

Mr. GILLETT. May I make a suggestion?

Mr. GLASS. I will be glad to hear it.

Mr. GILLETT. When the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES] was not here, before the President's address, Members came to me who wished to discuss the bill, and I have here, which does not include the gentleman from California, a list of names of men who would like to consume 1 hour and 55 minutes. It seems to me that this is a question of such importance that there is no reason why it should not be debated as long as men really wish to discuss the question and throw light on it. Perhaps you on your side would not use up all of your time and could yield some to this side. The House is not pressed with business. There is no reason, it seems to me, why, on such an important matter, gentlemen should not be allowed time to debate fairly, as long as they are not trying to delay.

Mr. NORTON. I suggest that the debate be confined to the bill. With that understanding, I have no objection.

Mr. HAYES. I have no objection to that.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that this is a time or that this is a measure that should offer opportunity to people to talk just to be talking.

Mr. GILLETT. This is all on the bill.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, of course we have no desire to continue the discussion longer than is necessary, and if gentlemen do not care to speak the time can be shortened accordingly. But it seems to me that Members who desire to speak on this side should have an opportunity.

Mr. GLASS. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the general debate be confined to an hour and a half on each side.

Mr. HAYES. I wish the gentleman would give us two hours. We could consume two hours' time on the subject.

Mr. GILLETT. Could the gentleman give us 30 minutes of his time on this side?

Mr. GLASS. I have very few requests.

Mr. GILLETT. If the gentleman would give us thirty minutes of his time that would be satisfactory.

Mr. GLASS. I can not agree to that. I will give all that is not asked for on this side.

Mr. GILLETT. This is not against the bill, you understand.

Mr. GLASS. I understand that. I think more Members on that side want to speak for the bill than against it.

Mr. GILLETT. I think so.

Mr. GLASS. But that is not the question. I simply want to be rid of the proposition as soon as I can get rid of it. It is not a complex proposition. It is one easily understood, and to save my life how we could consume four hours in general debate is beyond my comprehension.

Mr. PLATT. But the gentleman will recollect that there is a whole lot back of it that ought to be brought out.

Mr. GLASS. I do not recollect anything of the sort. I do not know anything of the sort—that there is a whole lot back of it that ought to be brought out.

Mr. PLATT. I do not mean that in a depreciatory sense. I mean that in order to understand this thing thoroughly there are a good many things to be said.

Mr. GLASS. My observation is that a good many things are said that could be very easily dispensed with in all general debate.

Mr. PLATT. The discussion will be confined to the bill.

Mr. GLASS. Well, I suggest to my colleague that that side be given an hour and forty-five minutes and this side one hour and fifteen minutes.

Mr. GARNER. That ought to satisfy gentlemen on the other side.

Mr. GLASS. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that three hours of general debate be devoted to this bill, 1 hour and 45 minutes to be controlled by my colleague from California [Mr. HAYES] and 1 hour and 15 minutes to be controlled by myself, and that the general debate be confined to the subject of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7731.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to inquire if that includes debate on the amendments?

Mr. GLASS. No; that is general debate on the bill itself.

The SPEAKER. And, pending that motion, he asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to three hours and confined to the subject matter of the bill, an hour and three-quarters to be controlled by the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES] and an hour and fifteen minutes to be controlled by himself. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I believe the Speaker, through inadvertence, referred to the House bill rather than to the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. Yes; the Senate bill. I did not have it before me. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] will please take the chair.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 3235, with Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 3235) amending section 32, Federal farm loan act, approved July 17, 1916, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

An act (S. 3235) amending section 32, Federal farm-loan act, approved July 17, 1916.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Federal farm-loan act, approved July 17, 1916, is hereby amended by adding at the end of section 32 the following:

"The Secretary of the Treasury is further authorized, in his discretion, upon the request of the Federal Farm Loan Board, from time to time during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, to purchase, at par and accrued interest, with any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, from any Federal land bank, farm-loan bonds issued by such bank.

"Such purchases shall not exceed the sum of $100,000,000. Any Federal land bank may at any time repurchase, at par and accrued interest, for the purpose of redemption or resale, any bonds so purchased from it and held in the Treasury.

"The bonds of any Federal land bank so purchased by the Secretary of the Treasury, and held in the Treasury under the provisions of this amendment one year after the termination of the pending war, shall, upon 30 days' notice from the Secretary of the Treasury, be redeemed or repurchased by such bank at par and accrued interest.

"Until all bonds so purchased by the Secretary of the Treasury have been so redeemed or repurchased, no loans in addition to those now approved shall be made by Federal land banks except under special rules prescribed by the Federal Farm Loan Board limiting further loans from funds derived from the Treasury to those made for the sole purpose of increasing food products.

"The temporary organization of any Federal land bank as provided in section 4 of said Federal farm-loan act shall be continued so long as any farm-loan bonds purchased from it under the provisions of this amendment shall be held by the Treasury, and until the subscriptions to stock in such bank by national farm-loan associations shall equal the amount of stock held in such bank by the Government of the United States."

SEC. 2. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed, and this act shall take effect upon its passage. The right to amend, alter, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is recognized.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman from Virginia begins, will he explain which bill is being considered, whether the House or the Senate bill?

Mr. GLASS. It is the Senate bill 3235.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Copies of the Senate bill as it passed the Senate are not available. Will the gentleman kindly indicate what those amendments are so that we may have them before the committee in considering this bill? The Senate bill is not available. The amendments have not been printed. We are considering a bill which is not before the House.

Mr. BUTLER. None of us could obtain it; yet we agreed to consider it.

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman will look in the RECORD of December 18 he will find the amendments.

Mr. BUTLER. That RECORD is not in our files.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Chairman, answering the question of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], as I recall the amendments, one of them limits the total amount of bonds which the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to purchase to $100,000,000 instead of $200,000,000, as provided by the House bill, and limits the time to one year instead of two years, as provided by the House bill.

The second Senate amendment limits the application of the funds derived from the sale of these bonds to the "actual production of foodstuffs." That, in brief, is the substance of the two Senate amendments to the House bill.

Mr. Chairman, it is needless for me to say to the House that in ordinary circumstances I would oppose—utterly oppose—legislation of this description. I have always been against it. When the Federal reserve act was under consideration I opposed in principle this species of legislative enactment, and when the Federal land-bank measure was under consideration I bitterly resisted legislation of this nature. I think it usually may be regarded as unwise, and in most circumstances vicious.

But these are not ordinary times. Gen. Sherman's characterization of war as "hell" may be given a very broad application. War is not only "hell" in the sufferings and casualties and disasters of the battle field; it is not only "hell" in the heartbreaks and bereavements of the homes, but is "hell" everywhere. It disorganizes and disturbs every interest of a country; and because of that fact this matter is presented for the consideration of the House to-day.

The farm-loan system was established primarily not as a protégé of the Federal Government, but as a business institution, to afford the farming community of the United States what it had theretofore never had in the whole history of this country—ample and reasonable credit facilities. It is not necessary to draw the attention of the House to the fact that the national bank act, under which we operated for half a century, in its text and by the rulings of the Comptrollers of the Currency, as well as under the decisions of the courts, sedulously and persistently excluded the farm-land interests of the United States from the credit facilities which it afforded. No matter what his acreage or how rich and productive his farm, under the national bank act no American farmer was given one dollar of land-credit facilities; and it was to cure that exasperating situation that the Federal farm loan measure was conceived and put into effect by the Congress.

As I have said, it was never contemplated that the system should be a protégé of the Federal Government. Congress resolutely resisted the attempt to make the system a Federal dependent. It is only because these are extraordinary circumstances which confront us that the matter is presented to Congress—not of choice or cheerfully, but of necessity and reluctantly.

Briefly it may be stated that the Federal farm-loan system was in efficient and effective operation up to the 1st of November, 1917. The Federal Farm Loan Board experienced no trouble whatsoever in selling Federal farm land bank bonds. Indeed, if any error of administration was committed by the Farm Loan Board, it was on the side of excessive caution. Mistakes, if any there were, have not been due in any degree to improvidence or extravagance of any sort. The Farm Loan Commissioner told me three months ago that the banks were so flooded with applications for the purchase of farm-loan bonds that the board felt it necessary to admonish great care and deliberation.

From the 2d day of July, when these securities were first put on the market, up to the 1st of November, there were sold approximately $30,000,000 of 4½ per cent bonds at a premium of 1½. This achievement furnished good ground for the optimism of the Farm Loan Board and for the confident assumption that no trouble would be experienced. The sale of approximately $30,000,000 of these bonds was easily made notwithstanding the fact that the Government had floated its first liberty loan.

Approaching the 1st of November the Farm Loan Board found, according to the statement made to the House Committee on Banking and Currency, not so ready a sale for these bonds. They found it very difficult to place them, and the reason was perfectly apparent. It was because the Government had just put on its second liberty loan of $3,000,000,000, had conducted a Nation-wide campaign in behalf of that loan, and the loan itself had absorbed nearly all the ready-investment capital of the country. Now, there may be some criticism of the Farm Loan Board——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Just in connection with the matter that the gentleman has referred to, am I correctly informed, or is my recollection correct, that there was a criticism by the Secretary of the Treasury of the Farm Loan Board for undertaking to float their bonds at the time he was undertaking to float his liberty loan bonds?

Mr. GLASS. I am not definitely informed as to that; but if such was the case I can readily understand why. I think, had I been the Secretary of the Treasury, I should have objected to seeing a rival bond campaign inaugurated just at the moment when the Treasury Department was conducting a campaign for this liberty loan, so essential to the conduct of the war in all of its phases. Very likely that did happen. I am not informed on that point. But the Farm Loan Commissioner stated to the House Committee——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. If it did happen, do you not think the Secretary of the Treasury is showing considerable generosity by asking now that the money be taken out of the Treasury to take up these bonds that the Farm Loan Board failed to float in rivalry with the liberty-loan bonds?

Mr. GLASS. I do not participate in any criticism of the Secretary of the Treasury on that score, because, had I been the Secretary of the Treasury, I should have objected very seriously and vigorously to the inauguration of a rival bond campaign in the country when the Treasury was trying to raise the unprecedented sum of $3,000,000,000 to carry on the war. However, it was not necessary for the Secretary of the Treasury to make any objection, because the members of the Farm Loan Board definitely stated to the committee that they themselves felt that the patriotic thing to do in the circumstances was to desist, and not precipitate a competitive campaign for placing bonds at that time; and I think their view of the matter was both patriotic and reasonable.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the statement has been published in the press that the Farm Loan Board have made loans on securities of a reckless character as a corollary to the need of obtaining Government bonds to the extent of $200,000,000. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the committee whether his committee has made any investigation of the character of the loans made by the Farm Loan Board.

Mr. GLASS. The Banking and Currency Committee has made no such investigation, because it has had no definite or responsible suggestion to the effect that these loans have not been securely made. Since this bill was presented I have heard some such suggestions, and I have personally made inquiry as to the justness of the criticism. I have been assured by the Farm Loan Board generally and the Farm Loan Commissioner specifically that there have been approximately 15,000 loans made, and that soon after the system began operation private interests obviously inimical to the farm-loan system had instituted a very persistent examination of the loans made, but that as far as the investigations of the board have gone—and they have been very thorough, a member of the board having gone in person to review the findings—there had been not more than half a dozen instances in which criticisms were justified. For example, it was suggested that loans were being made on worthless lands in Colorado and Arizona. The investigation by the member of the board who was dispatched to make the inquiry developed the fact that the loans were made on the grazing value of the land alone.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLASS. I yield to the gentleman from North Dakota.

Mr. NORTON. In reply to the inquiry of the gentleman from Wisconsin, I will say that I take it that the Members from the different States where the system has been operating can speak for their respective States. When I take the floor I can give the gentleman all the information in regard to the working of the system in the State of North Dakota, which I have the honor to represent in part. I take it that the gentleman from Wisconsin is interested in the working of the system in his own State, and he can speak for that State.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLASS. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to ask whether the Committee on Banking and Currency has any information as to what percentage of the $105,000,000 of loans approved by the board has been for the refunding of existing mortgages and what percentage has been for new loans?

Mr. GLASS. My recollection is that the Farm Loan Commissioner has said that at least 90 per cent of loans made have involved the refunding of mortgages.

Mr. LENROOT. May I ask another question? Does not the gentleman think that that is a very important consideration in appropriating money out of the Treasury, whether it is for refunding existing loans giving the farmers a lower rate of interest payable out of the proceeds of liberty bonds where the people have made great sacrifices?

Mr. GLASS. I fail to see the distinction between making one farmer an original loan at a fair rate of interest and making another farmer a loan involving a refunding proposition which may prove the salvation of his farm and the continuance of its effective operation. The gentleman will understand that the Government can not make a farm loan except on a first mortgage. If the farmer has a thousand-dollar mortgage on his farm upon which he is paying 10 per cent interest and he finds it difficult to proceed at that extortionate rate of interest—because it is extortionate—and the Government can contribute to the efficiency of the farming operation by loaning that man $2,000 at 5 per cent, using $1,000 to refund his old loan and the other $1,000 for productive purposes, I see no objection to it.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. GLASS. I will, except that I proposed to talk for 15 minutes only, and I have talked already 18.

Mr. HARDY. I simply wanted to say that money to take up existing mortgages may be incident to the purchase by the farmer of tracts of land for which they give to the owner the first lien, and that is taken over.

Mr. GLASS. And it arises in many instances, if not in most instances, from the inability or unwillingness of those holding the mortgages to renew at a fair interest rate such as has been compelled by the establishment of this farm-loan system.

Mr. HARDY. A man may wish to purchase a tract of land for which he can not pay the whole purchase price, but he can make the purchase through the assistance that the Government gives.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLASS. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. I desire to ask a question in regard to the interpretation of the paragraph of the bill, if the gentleman cares to yield.

Mr. GLASS. I think that had better come when we consider the bill by sections under the five-minute rule.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman does not object, I want to call his attention to a view that occurred to me of a certain paragraph, and then we can discuss it later. The paragraph begins on line 8 and extends to line 13, page 2, of the bill. Is it the gentleman's understanding that that is a mandatory provision, or simply a suggestion and direction? The paragraph is as follows:

> The bonds of any Federal land bank so purchased by the Secretary of the Treasury, and held in the Treasury under the provisions of this amendment one year after the expiration of the pending war, shall, upon 30 days' notice from the Secretary of the Treasury, be redeemed or repurchased by such bank at par and accrued interest.

Mr. GLASS. That is a Senate amendment, and I regard it as a mandatory provision.

Mr. MONDELL. The House bill is not punctuated in the same way.

Mr. GLASS. The House bill gives the Secretary of the Treasury discretion.

Mr. MONDELL. The punctuation is different, and it strikes me as doubtful whether the language of the House bill, punctuated as it is, would bear the construction of being mandatory; that it would be only permissive.

Mr. GLASS. The House bill gives the land bank the option to redeem—that is, to repurchase—these bonds at any time and gives the Secretary of the Treasury the option 12 months after the termination of the war to require the land banks, upon suitable notice, to redeem the bonds.

Mr. MONDELL. My thought was that if it was mandatory it was an important paragraph, and if so intended the language should be made a little clearer either by changing the punctuation so as to have it correspond to the Senate bill, placing a comma after the word "shall," or transferring it from line 11 to line 10.

Mr. GLASS. I suggest to the gentleman that we will be glad to have any suggestion, when we come to the consideration of the bill in detail, that will clarify its meaning, but I think now I would like to proceed with my statement.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I understand that the Government has subscribed $9,000,000 for the stock of the reserved bank.

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The intention was that the stock should be taken by the public. Has the gentleman any information as to how much stock has been taken by the public?

Mr. GLASS. The gentleman is incorrect in his statement that the "intention was that the stock should be taken by the public." The expectation was that the Government would have to take it all; and, practically, the Government has taken it all.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. One hundred and eight thousand seven hundred and thirty dollars has been taken by the public.

Mr. GLASS. That is correct, and the Government has taken the balance of the $9,000,000. I may say to the gentleman from Indiana that the capital stock of these banks is merely nominal; it does not amount to a drop in the bucket. The expectation was that the banks would be financed out of the proceeds of the bonds sold.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Did I understand that there were only 15,000 loans made since the establishment of the system?

Mr. GLASS. Approximately 15,000; and out of the loans reviewed after it was ascertained that private interests hostile to the system were examining these loans, only half a dozen loans were reported to be subject to reasonable criticism.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I was only inquiring as to the number of loans made since the establishment of the system.

Mr. GLASS. Forty-six thousand have been passed on, my information is, and 15,000 have actually been made, totaling $30,000,000. Commitments have been made on loans aggregating $70,000,000 more, which the board thinks will be reduced to $50,000,000 by reason of the fact that some of the applications have been withdrawn and others will be withdrawn. There are pending and under immediate consideration, with partial approval, applications amounting to $65,000,000.

Mr. LONGWORTH. But so far only 46,000 individual farmers have received any benefit?

Mr. GLASS. That is my information.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Can the gentleman roughly state how many farmers there are in the country?

Mr. GLASS. I can not. I can state to the gentleman there have been applications aggregating approximately $219,000,000 from all sections of the country. In Ohio $763,000 have been applied for, and $415,000 in loans have been approved.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It would seem under the circumstances that this system had not been of practical benefit to a large percentage of the farming community.

Mr. GLASS. It has been of material benefit, and it is becoming more and more of benefit every day. The system is in its initial stages.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit an interruption there, I would like to suggest this thought, that it has reduced the interest rates nearly everywhere, and that of itself benefits those who do not get loans.

Mr. GLASS. It has reduced the interest rate to the farmer from one end of the country to the other.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLASS. As I stated, there have been applications for loans aggregating $219,000,000. Sixteen million dollars have been applied for in the State of California; $12,000,000 in the State of North Dakota——

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Can the gentleman inform me which State has been credited with having the greatest number of farm loans?

Mr. GLASS. I can briefly point out the distribution of loans. As I stated a moment ago, the State of California has applied——

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. I do not want the State of California.

Mr. GLASS. I did not understand that the gentleman was asking for any particular State.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. I simply asked which of the States has had issued the greatest number of bonds?

Mr. GLASS. If the gentleman will wait a moment, I shall try to answer him. The State of California has applied for $16,000,000 in loans, and has been granted $1,452,000. At the time this table was made, $4,958,000 of loans had been approved. The State of Kansas, I believe, has been granted more loans than any other State. Kansas applied for $7,826,000 in loans and has had approved $5,999,000, and has been actually loaned $3,594,000. Has the gentleman any particular State in mind?

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman inform me how many bonds have been issued in the State of Texas?

Mr. GLASS. Yes. The State of Texas has applied for $22,000,000 in loans, it has been granted $1,145,000 in loans, and has had approved in pending loans $11,488,000.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Can the gentleman inform me what proportion of those bonds were sold within the State of Texas?

Mr. GLASS. I can not.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. The point I desire to raise is that the rate of interest in Texas is much higher than in many of the other States, and the farm-loan bonds being of a lower rate of interest, whether that is one of the reasons the bonds would have to be sold in other States and that the Congress must call on the Government for the purchase of those bonds.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Virginia will yield, the gentleman from Pennsylvania has asked what State has issued the bonds. Is it not a fact that none of the States has issued the bonds, but that they are issued by the Federal loan bank?

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. I know that; but the mortgages are on the property in those States, and I want to know how many mortgage bonds have been issued in the State of Texas.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Chairman, I must decline to yield any further. I have been bombarded with questions, rendering it well-nigh impossible to make the concise statement that I desired to make.

The question is simple enough. If the Congress desires to say to the farming community of the United States, after having adopted a rural credit system which, for the first time in the history of the country, has enabled farmers to obtain loans at reasonable rates of interest and under satisfactory terms of payment—if the Congress wants to say now, when the system is caught in the vicissitudes of war, confronted by unprecedented difficulties which no man could have foreseen, that it shall suspend operations, it can make that decision by defeating this bill. The farm land banks are facing difficulties that are not properly related to the normal operation of the system—difficulties produced by a world war. If, because the system can not immediately surmount these extraordinary obstacles, Members are willing that the system shall suspend and its operations temporarily terminate, they may accomplish their purpose by rejecting this measure of relief.

In my own view, this ought not to be done. As previously stated, I am utterly opposed, in ordinary times, to this species of legislation; but in this unavoidable exigency, in these extraordinary times, I think it would be a great misfortune should Congress refuse to respond to the suggestion that temporary aid be extended to this system. Such refusal would mean something more than the mere suspension of a farm-loan system. It would mean, in my judgment, the embitterment of the entire farming community of the United States against the Government when the Government most needs the determined cooperation of all citizens. It would mean an impairment of our facilities for an immediate and efficient conduct of the war. Hence, temporarily putting aside my inherent objection to legislation of this sort, I very earnestly ask the House seriously to consider the grave consequence of withholding aid from this system at this critical time.

The reason that the banks are unable to sell bonds is, as I have indicated, that the investing public is holding off with the expectation that the interest rate must be increased or that the price of the bonds must be lowered. The contention of the Farm Loan Board is that if it is guaranteed reasonable assistance by the Government there will be a psychological change of attitude. The investing public, finding that the system may not be squeezed to death, that it will not be compelled from lack of funds to raise the interest rate or to lower the price of the bonds in the market, will, it is thought, immediately quicken its interest in bond buying. That the Farm Loan Board is measurably correct in its conjecture on this score I have not one particle of doubt. The symptoms are unmistakable. The only protest that I have had from outside sources against the proposed action by the Congress has invariably come from investment bankers, who, foreseeing that the farm-loan system is now, without any fault of its own, without sufficient funds, are trying to force it to raise the interest rates on bonds or to dispose of them at a lower market rate.

This is the whole question to be determined. There is nothing complicated about it. In brief, it is a question as to whether or not the Congress is willing that the system shall suspend by withholding this temporary relief. You will observe that the relief is absolutely temporary. It terminates at a fixed time and is for a limited amount. Otherwise I would not be here speaking for it. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I desire to ask the gentleman one question before he yields the floor.

Mr. GLASS. I yield for a question.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is there any authority contained under provisions of the bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to sell these bonds to private investors pending the period when he is holding them?

Mr. GLASS. No; there is not, for the simple reason that if the Secretary of the Treasury could sell them to private investors the Farm Loan Board and bankers could do that.

Mr. DILLON. Will the gentleman yield for one question, which is very brief? Are these bonds free from tax?

Mr. GLASS. Absolutely free from tax. They are the best investment that can be obtained in this country, 4½ per cent bonds with the moral support of the Government of the United States behind them, absolutely free from taxation. Before the second liberty loan was placed the applications for bonds were a great many more than the Farm Loan Board was willing to accept.

Mr. DILLON. Now, the Government bonds being taxed under the recent enactment and these not being taxed, how does the gentleman explain that they have been a failure upon the market?

Mr. GLASS. They have not been a failure upon the market, because in four months' time $30,000,000 of them were disposed of at a premium of 1½. In that time $130,000,000 could have been disposed of had not the Farm Loan Board been excessively cautious. But for the intervention of this second liberty loan which, for the time, practically drained the reservoir of immediate investment funds, there would have been no difficulty on earth and the system would now be in no sort of trouble.

Mr. NORTON. If the gentleman will yield for an inquiry. As a matter of fact, during the month of December if a man wanted to buy $1,000,000 worth of these 4½ per cent bonds from the Farm Loan Board, could he have gotten them?

Mr. GLASS. Oh, I think he could.

Mr. NORTON. Where?

Mr. GLASS. From the Federal Farm Loan Board, and from the bonding houses which were cooperating with the Farm Loan Board.

Mr. NORTON. As a matter of fact, were they allowed to sell them during December?

Mr. GLASS. Oh, I think so. They were allowed to sell them at any time. Members of the board stated to the committee that from patriotic motives they did not feel disposed to enter upon a rival campaign for the sale of them while the liberty loan was being placed.

Mr. NORTON. I desired to make that inquiry because of information that has come to me from different sources to the effect that absolutely no effort was made to sell these bonds, and bonds were not given out freely even while they were willing to be taken during December.

Mr. GLASS. Oh, every reasonable effort has been made to sell the bonds since it was ascertained that there was some difficulty in placing them; and, as I said, until we started on the second liberty loan, the board had more applications than it was willing to accept.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me? I have a little time and I am perfectly willing from my time that the gentleman should be recouped.

Mr. GLASS. I think perhaps I had a poor estimate of the time required for the discussion of this matter, and I apologize to my colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES], for not freely yielding to his suggestion to give more time.

Mr. HAYES. The apology is accepted.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman has just stated that the Government is morally back of these farm-loan bonds, and I will not discuss whether the farm-loan bond act originally was wise. We have it. Now, then, in the circular that was distributed lengthwise the opinion of Justice Hughes was quoted to the effect that this system of farm-loan bonds was an instrumentality of the Government. Now, the Government is to purchase these bonds, one hundred or two hundred millions of these bonds, from the Treasury, and does not the gentleman think that if the Government is morally back of these bonds and we pay out $100,000,000 or $200,000,000 from the Treasury that we had better have it in black and white that the Government, being morally bound, will see to it that these bonds are paid, so that there will be no question or opposition by private investors or those who desire to be lenders privately, or no other roarbacks, if there are to be roarbacks that might be brought?

Is it good policy now, to put it in black and white, if the Government is to enact this legislation—I repeat the question—to guarantee these bonds?

Mr. GLASS. I would say to the gentleman from Illinois that I do not agree with the opinion of Mr. Justice Hughes that the farm-loan system is "a Government instrumentality" or that it was intended to be a Government instrumentality. The Government, after considerable discussion, took a very limited temporary stake in the system. I do not agree with Judge Hughes's opinion that "the Government is morally bound" for these bonds. But Mr. Justice Hughes is a very distinguished constitutional lawyer, a very descerning public man; and I had in mind his expressed opinion, which was requested by the investment bankers of the country when I stated a while ago that the Government was "morally behind the bonds." I think the country will accept Mr. Justice Hughes's opinion rather than mine. Neverthless, I do not think the farm-loan system is "a Government instrumentality" nor do I think it should be one.

I do not think, except in just such an exigency as that with which we are now confronted, that the Government will ever have any need or a more intimate relation with the system than the temporary supervision which the act originally provided. I do not think the Farm Loan Board will ever, in ordinary times, have to ask the Government for any sort of aid. It would not now but for this war. Had it not been for these unprecedented liberty bond issues the farm-loan system would stand solidly on its own bottom and conduct business out of its own resources without any help from the Government or from any other source than that involved in the revenue derived from making farm loans at a fair rate of interest.

Mr. HAYES. Will the gentleman yield to me for one question?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. HAYES. I would like to ask the gentleman if he has the opinion of anyone whose opinion is worth anything as to the constitutionality of this proposed act?

Mr. GLASS. No. It is proposing to do things that have been repeatedly done by the Congress of the United States, and in a very much more aggravated form, when it comes to the refinements of constitutional law. The Congress itself has made gifts of millions of dollars to other enterprises, whereas this is not a gift, but a loan. The President of the United States from that rostrum to-day advised the Congress that it may soon be called upon to make, practically, investments in railroad properties with a view to their efficient operation in this war exigency.

The Congress of the United States in the early period of the Government's history loaned every one of the thirteen original States millions of dollars, not one cent of which has ever been paid back. While I am not a constitutional lawyer, or a lawyer of any description, for that matter, I have no doubt of the constitutionality of this measure. But if it is not constitutional, my colleagues may be sure that the investment bankers who are opposed to its enactment will promptly take steps to test the validity of it.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Virginia yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Chairman, I have taken up so much time that I can not yield for further questions, and I reserve the balance of my time. [Applause.]

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN].

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the right to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, we are discussing this morning the Senate bill which has been substituted for the House bill. The Senate bill is S. 3235—and I ask that it be printed in my remarks at this point, together with the amendments made in the Senate—and the House bill is H. R. 7731.

The matter referred to is as follows:

A bill (S. 3235) amending section 32, Federal farm loan act, approved July 17, 1916.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Federal farm loan act, approved July 17, 1916, is hereby amended by adding at the end of section 32 the following:

"The Secretary of the Treasury is further authorized, in his discretion, upon the request of the Federal Farm Loan Board, from time to time during the fiscal years ending June 30, 1918, and June 30, 1919, respectively, to purchase, at par and accrued interest, with any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, from any Federal land bank, farm loan bonds issued by such bank.

"Such purchases shall not exceed the sum of $100,000,000 in either of such fiscal years. Any Federal land bank may at any time purchase, at par and accrued interest, for the purpose of redemption or resale, any bonds so purchased from it and held in the Treasury.

"The bonds of any Federal land bank so purchased by the Secretary of the Treasury, and held in the Treasury under the provisions of this amendment one year after the expiration of the pending war, shall, upon 30 days' notice from the Secretary of the Treasury, be redeemed or repurchased by such bank at par and accrued interest.

"The temporary organization of any Federal land bank as provided in section 4 of said Federal farm loan act shall be continued so long as any farm loan bonds purchased from it under the provisions of this amendment shall be held by the Treasury, and until the subscriptions to stock in such bank by national farm loan associations shall equal the amount of stock held in such bank by the Government of the United States."

SEC. 2. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed, and this act shall take effect upon its passage. The right to amend, alter, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Senator WEEKS offered the following amendment:

"On page 2, after line 13, insert:

"'Until all bonds so purchased by the Secretary of the Treasury have been so redeemed or repurchased no loans in addition to those now approved shall be made by Federal land banks except under special rules prescribed by the Federal Farm Loan Board, limiting further loans from funds derived from the Treasury to those made for the sole purpose of increasing food products.'"

Senator WEEKS offered the following amendment:

"In line 9, page 1, after the words 'nineteen hundred and eighteen,' I move to strike out the rest of that line and line 10 down to and including the word 'respectively'; and in line 4, page 2, after the figures '$100,000,000,' I move to strike out the words 'in either of such fiscal year.'"

Mr. McFADDEN. It is my understanding that later, during the discussion of this measure, the House bill will be offered as a substitute for the Senate bill.

Now, a little over a year ago we enacted the farm-loan law. At that time I pointed out certain features of the bill which in my judgment would become unworkable. I might assume an attitude to-day of "I told you so." One or two of the vital points that I criticized at that time were that this system was cumbersome and that it would not work without Government aid. That position, I believe, has been thoroughly vindicated by the introduction of this measure to-day.

Now, let us look at this proposition. The first bank of the 12 that was organized under this system was organized in March, 1917. The first loan under the system was made last June, after the declaration of war. Now, what has happened since that time? The Federal Farm Loan Bureau has received and approved and are obligated for $105,000,000 worth of loans. They have sold through investment bankers approximately $28,000,000 of these bonds on a 4½ per cent basis, or par plus a premium of 1½ per cent.

In answer to a question which I put to the Farm Loan Commissioner, interrogating him as to the theory upon which this law was predicated and enacted, that one-half of 1 per cent would cover the cost of the operation of the system from the farmer to and including the sale of the bonds—in answer to my question as to whether or not they had kept within that limit, he informed me that the total cost had been 1⅛ per cent plus the 1½ per cent premium which was paid to the bond house, who paid par to the Farm Loan Bureau, making something like 2½ or 2⅝ per cent as the actual cost of the operation thus far, instead of one-half of 1 per cent.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman evidently does not want that statement to go as a statement of the Farm Loan Commissioner? The gentleman is certainly in error as to his understanding of what the Farm Loan Commissioner said.

Mr. McFADDEN. I would be glad to be informed.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman by his statement has led the House to believe that the Farm Loan Commissioner gave the committee to understand that the cost of operating this system had been 2⅝ per cent. That is the only conclusion that can be reached from the gentleman's statement. The fact is the Farm Loan Commissioner did not make any such statement, because that is not the fact.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman state what the fact is?

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman will permit me, the fact is that the Farm Loan Commissioner, in reply to the question of the gentleman, stated this, that the experience of the board so far was that the system, when it got into full operation, could be operated for less than one-half of 1 per cent, but the overhead charges in the beginning, which the gentleman will very readily understand are heavy in the beginning, have run the expenses on the initial business up to 1½ per cent. But that included a lot of organization expenses that will not have to be incurred again. In the course of a year or so, spreading all the operating expenses out over the entire business, he thought the expense would get down to less than one-half of 1 per cent.

Mr. McFADDEN. That is also true; but when this law was passed we appropriated $100,000 for organization expenses, and at the last session of Congress we appropriated $260,000 to pay salaries and incidental expenses in connection with the operation of this system, and this was all in addition to what I have stated.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield for a question right there?

Mr. McFADDEN. I regret I can not yield further. I have only a few minutes, and I want to finish my argument.

Mr. WINGO. We gave the gentleman's side extra time from this side.

Mr. McFADDEN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I have only 15 minutes. It seems to me that in the operation of the system thus far the Farm Loan Board have not exercised ordinary business acumen in the sale of these bonds. These bonds appear to me to be a semi-Government obligation that should be put on a basis that would insure their sale to investors, and there would appear to be no more reason for the purchase of these bonds on the part of the United States than there would be for the Government to purchase its own bonds in an endeavor to make a fictitious market for its own securities.

Mr. Chairman, on the day that this bill came up for discussion, I introduced House resolution No. 206, calling upon the Secretary of the Treasury for information in regard to the Federal farm-loan system.

I had no ulterior motive in doing this, but was prompted solely because of the lack of information in regard to this system. I felt that the Members of the House should have other information than simply the letter of the farm-loan commissioner asking for an appropriation of $200,000,000 before appropriating this vast sum of money in as critical a time as this, and especially so when the people of this country are denying themselves and are patriotically subscribing for thrift stamps, war-savings certificates, and liberty bonds, and in addition are paying heavy taxes for the purpose of winning the war.

So far as I am aware, there is no concerted move which has for its object the breaking down of the Federal farm-loan system. I am not opposed to the granting of loans to farmers for the purpose of increasing agricultural production, and I am not opposed to loaning to the farmers 50 per cent of the valuation of their property, providing the loans are in accordance with the intentions of this act. I am opposed to the operation of a system such as presented, which is under political control and domination, and which can not exist except by Government aid and support, which contention is fully justified by this bill.

Nor do I think that the farmers of this country are demanding or expecting in this critical period aid or assistance in this respect from the Government, and the enactment of this bill may be the basis of a serious criticism of this Congress and may be a factor in the sale of future liberty bonds.

The farmers of this country are patriotic and are supporting the Government to the fullest extent of their ability in the production of crops and foodstuffs, and are furnishing their share of the man force for the Army and Navy, and will continue to do so in this crises. I do not believe the farmer is asking nor does he expect to receive a more favorable rate of interest than the commercial interests of the country at this time are paying. I am, therefore, firmly of the opinion that if the Federal Farm Loan Board had seen fit to raise the rate of interest on its bonds offered to the public there would have been no difficulty in the flotation of these securities during the past six months.

I am told that because of the very great prosperity in the farming sections of the South and West there is ample money to invest in these bonds, but not at the rates quoted on farm-loan bonds. Also that if the 12 banks had been permitted to do so (which privilege was withheld from them by the policy of the Farm Loan Board to sell the bonds) that large amounts could have been sold locally by them.

The very purposes that prompted the organization of this farm-loan system in the first instance are being defeated by this legislation. The purpose of the plan was to furnish a system for the farmer to enable him to borrow from the investing public under Government supervision money on the same basis that commerce was getting it and not from the Government Treasury, and upon no other basis. Now, the board after finding it impossible to sell their bonds to the investing public comes here and asks for an appropriation of $200,000,000, and on top of that the board, I understand, is asking that the maximum which can be loaned to any one borrower be raised from $10,000 to $25,000. This will mean an increase of applications from the well-to-do farmer and speculator, and still further demands upon the Treasury of the United States.

I lay no special claim to being more patriotic than the average Member of Congress, but I do regard myself as fortunate wherein I represent a district which, while devoted almost exclusively to agriculture, yet at the same time no inflation in real estate values exists, as I will presently prove. I am, therefore, in a position to look at this important question from a sound economic viewpoint, not being carried off my feet by the terrible wail of the real estate speculator who paints the awful condition as resulting in case he fails to get into the Government crib with a pitchfork. I desire here and now to warn the Members of the House that if they permit the establishment of this precedent all the schemers who favor Government aid will get into the crib, and there is no such thing as being able to satisfy this class once the door is open.

The fact that during the discussion of this bill in the Senate the proponents of this farm-loan act who had charge of the measure acquiesced in the amendment offered by Senator WEEKS, and by unanimous consent the House is now considering the Senate bill as amended, which amendment limits the appropriation in this bill to $100,000,000, and further provides that this money shall be used exclusively for the increase of agricultural production, I believe eliminates partisanship entirely in the discussion of this measure, at least so far as the Senate is concerned, and I sincerely trust that every Member of this House will rise to the occasion and eschew all semblance of politics from the discussion of this important measure. This is not a political proposition, but an economic one, and should be considered and acted upn as such by this House.

History proves beyond all doubt that the class of people heretofore referred to have profited but by one argument, the sad argument of experience, after these teachings have brought ruin and destruction to the people. And the people of this century do not differ one bit from the people of the eighteenth century, a century in which more harm was done by inflation than any century since the advent of Christian civilization. Every important country in Europe was ruined during that century as a result of the pernicious practices of inflation. And the injury was not confined to merely financial ruin, but moral as well. Corruption and crime have invariably attended such action.

It was during the reign of inflation in England—to be exact, in 1693—that Speaker Trevor was expelled from the House of Commons for accepting a bribe of 1,000 guineas to secure the passage of a bill introduced in Parliament for means of satisfying the debts due by the city of London to the orphans, by their orphans' fund, aggregating some $3,000,000. It took them much longer to bring the disaster to England which they brought forth in France. The people of the latter country were only four years in gulping down the fallacies of John Law and causing the bursting of his "Mississippi Bubble."

If there is any question in the mind of any Member of this House in regard to what inflation means, let him read the history of France from 1717 to 1721 and he will readily learn the evil effects.

I desire to call attention to a statement issued on December 31 by the Federal Reserve Board, being an appeal to the people urging thrift, having reference to the heavy financial burden that rests upon the country at this time, and that the Nation must have goods, and urging the people to save in every way, including food, clothing, and fuel, and thus enable our Government and our allied Governments to obtain goods with the requisite speed. As everybody knows, this is the most important factor at this juncture. Coal, copper, steel, and foodstuffs are cases in point.

The board says it can not have escaped the attention of the banks that since the beginning of the war deposits have increased at a rapid rate, and that loans, discounts, and investments have grown at an even more rapid rate. It is true that the Federal reserve holdings of gold have also increased to a point where they are larger than those of any other country, but the percentage of the gold reserves against the deposits and notes has decreased. This is a familiar phenomenon in time of war, and to a certain extent, perhaps, unavoidable, but it must, nevertheless, be our constant concern to keep every dangerous tendency in the banking situation under control and particularly to retard the too rapid expansion of banking credit as far as this can be done without jeopardizing the main business of the country at this time.

They further say that nobody should draw upon the credit resources of the country except to finance transactions which are essential for a national war. Credit should be saved as much as goods.

I would ask you to compare this statement with the bill now under discussion and ask you frankly whether or not this bill is in accordance with the suggestions of the Federal Reserve Board in this statement?

The board further says that gigantic operations of the Government will cause a further growth of bank deposits and loans. Our credit structure should therefore be strengthened as far as possible, and to this end the banks should lend their efforts toward three things:

First. Absorption of Government loans by savings.
Second. Conservation of credit for public and other essential uses, with curtailment of nonessential enterprises.
Third. Increase of the gold holdings of the Federal reserve banks, so as to maintain an adequate basis for our growing credit structure.

I therefore argue that in conformity with the sentiment expressed by the Federal Reserve Board that the only argument that can be used in support of this measure, which provides for an appropriation of $200,000,000 from the Treasury at this time, would be that it would aid in winning the war by increasing agricultural production. This may be true as to possibly 10 per cent of the money, but the other 90 per cent will be used for the purpose of refunding existing loans. Unless this amendment is added the argument might possibly be made that it was necessary to relieve the Farm Loan Board from the obligation to take $75,000,000 of loans, which should never have been promised in times like the past six months.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there for a question?

Mr. McFADDEN. I regret I can not yield. I have only a few minutes left.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. McFADDEN. During the continuance of this war we must do all we can to stimulate the production of foodstuffs, and nothing could be more conducive to that end than by Congress placing in the hands of the Federal Farm Loan Board $100,000,000 with which to purchase Chilean or other nitrogen, seeds, and fertilizers, to be sold to the farmers at the lowest price and on such terms as would encourage them to use it plentifully. No one will deny but that that would increase the production of foodstuffs, and that is the only way we can hope to reduce their cost during the war. War is naturally wasteful, and do what we may in economizing in foodstuffs, still we can not counteract the effects of the waste of war unless we increase the supply.

In this connection I would point out here that the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency when interrogated replied, in answer to a question as to how much of this money was used for refunding purposes, that 90 per cent of it was used to refund existing loans now held by private investors, banks, insurance companies, loan companies, and so forth. Credit should be saved as much as goods.

If we authorize this appropriation without imposing the safeguard imposed by the Senate amendment, and these funds are used by the board for the purchase or refunding of loans or for the purchase of lands, we will commit an act of inflation which no Member of this House can justify. This is no time for Congress to authorize the use of Government credit for inflation, and if we begin it on the small scale provided in this bill there will be no end to such demands during the period of the war. We have some four billions of real estate mortgages in this country, and if Congress favors a few farmers with a low rate of interest, then it will be asked to so favor all farmers; and if we favor all farmers, why not favor all classes of business.

Why, $200,000,000 would be a mere bagatelle in refunding the permanent investment of even the farmers, whereas $100,000,000 used for the increase of farm production would accomplish wonders. The Government's demands for capital to carry on the war are so stupendous that they have impoverished the capital markets of the country, impoverished them to such an extent that it is impossible for the transportation companies to procure the means to make such repairs as are necessary to transport our war material. But the roads must be properly equipped to carry that and our foodstuffs, even if the Government must supply temporarily the capital to keep the roads running and do the work itself during the war.

But we should announce the policy that in no event will we employ the Government's credit to protect the credit of any business, however much such business may be in need of credit. In that way, and in that way only, can the Government protect its own credit. If the time comes when creditors ruthlessly foreclose land mortgages or other evidences of debt, Congress can afford the necessary relief by the establishment of a moratorium for the general public, just as it has already established it for the soldiers and sailors.

The strongest argument in favor of any land-mortgage system for the purchase of lands is sociological, to prevent tenant farming. But this is no time to solve sociological problems which violate sound economic laws, especially not with Government credit. Beggars should never play the rôle of philanthropists, and for the next few years our Government will be the greatest beggar the world ever knew. The poor man should not be encouraged to buy farm lands when they are inflated, and, speaking for myself, I wish to say that I shall not be a party to any such arrangement. This farm-loan law does not help the landless man, "the poor man," to own a farm; he must first be worth half the value of his farm at least before he can participate in the benefits of this law. This law benefits the big farmer by permitting him to borrow at a less rate than the business man.

I would like the attention of the House for a few minutes while I point out how the bill under consideration will lead to inflation unless we adopt the Senate amendment. I shall not trespass on the patience of the House by making an extended argument on inflation and all the causes which produce that result, but this bill is such an important one that I must ask your kind indulgence while I give a few illustrations on inflation.

Definitions of any science are quite difficult to frame; that is to say, a definition which will meet every phase of the subject under all conditions. One definition of inflation which is doubtless familiar to all is the causing the price of an article to advance without a corresponding increase in its productivity. Any and every facility afforded for the purchase of a permanent investment will produce inflation, but any and every facility used to increase the productivity of a permanent investment will have the opposite effect.

To illustrate, suppose I lend a man money for the purpose of buying a piece of land and he makes such purchase. By that act he took that piece of land off the market, and in consequence caused the other lands in that vicinity to advance in price, and that without increasing their productivity. But suppose that instead of lending him that money to purchase that land I let him have it to buy fertilizers with and he had used it for such purpose and actually put them on the land and cultivated the land in such a way as to make those fertilizers useful. If the year be a seasonable one that loan would result in increasing the productivity of that land and become a blessing not only to the individual who obtained the loan for such purpose but to the community as well. So it is the use to which capital or credit is placed which counts. If it be used merely to change the ownership of a permanent investment, something which is already created, nothing is done to create value, and if that act advances the price there can be nothing to the transaction but inflation, and the public must pay for that without realizing any benefit in return.

The man who furnishes capital or credit for the production of agriculture or commerce, or for the distribution of those commodities through the various channels until they reach the ultimate consumer, is a public benefactor, because he has furnished the facilities for the creation of actual wealth.

It is pretty well agreed that lands in some sections of the country have become inflated during the past few years almost to the breaking point. To illustrate this I wish to present a table compiled from the 1910 census reports for the States of Iowa, Illinois, Indiana, and Pennsylvania, which I wish to incorporate with my remarks.

Value of farm lands in 1900 and 1910 and value of all farm products in 1909, and ratios of the values of such products in 1909 to such land values in 1910, according to the last United States census (1910):

State.	Value of farm lands in 1900.	Value of farm lands in 1910.	Value of farm products in 1909.	Ratio of 1909 products to 1910 land values.
				Per cent.
Iowa	$1,256,751,980	$2,801,975,729	$314,666,298	11
Illinois	1,514,118,970	3,090,411,148	372,270,470	12
Indiana	687,633,460	1,317,195,448	204,209,812	15
Pennsylvania	575,392,940	630,430,010	166,739,898	26
Fourteenth Pennsylvania congressional district	26,228,240	22,909,425	8,786,903	38

Number of counties in the above States which increased and decreased in population between 1900 and 1910.

State.	Number of counties which increased in population.	Number of counties which decreased in population.	Total number of counties.
Iowa	28	72	100
Illinois	52	51	103
Indiana	31	60	91
Pennsylvania	46	21	67

Land and crop values of the fourteenth congressional district of Pennsylvania, given by counties.

	Bradford.	Susquehanna.	Wayne.	Wyoming.
Land values:
1910	$9,517,220	$6,213,198	$4,383,837	$2,845,170
1900	11,596,340	6,548,760	4,991,840	3,091,300
Value of crops for 1909	3,594,664	2,543,845	1,729,427	918,967

This table shows that the values of the farm lands of Iowa increased from $1,256,751,980 in 1900 to $2,801,975,729 in 1910, or 115 per cent; those of Illinois from $1,514,118,970 in 1900 to $3,030,411,148 in 1910, or 104 per cent; those of Indiana from $687,633,460 in 1900 to $1,317,195,448 in 1910, or 92 per cent; that of Pennsylvania from $575,392,940 in 1900 to $630,430,010 in 1910, or 9 per cent; while those of the district I have the honor to represent on this floor actually decreased from $26,228,240 in 1900 to $22,909,425 in 1910, or a decrease of 12 per cent.

That makes out a pretty bad case for my district on paper, but only on paper, because the same census reports show the value of the farm products produced on those lands during the year 1909. The values of those products in proportion to the 1910 value of those lands were as follows: Those of Iowa, 11 per cent; those of Illinois, 12 per cent; those of Indiana, 15 per cent; those of Pennsylvania, 26 per cent; while those from the fourteenth Pennsylvania congressional district were 38 per cent.

Let us look at that from another viewpoint, that of the time required to purchase those lands. Let us assume that the labor cost of producing those crops and interest on the investment to be 50 per cent of the annual yield, or the value of the 1909 crops. Under that assumption the lands of Iowa would be nearly a 20-year purchase; those of Illinois, nearly 17 years; those of Indiana, nearly 14 years; those of the State of Pennsylvania, less than 8 years; and those of the fourteenth Pennsylvania congressional district a little over 5 years. It will be observed, therefore, that the fourteenth district does not show up so bad when the real test is applied, the test which takes into consideration the hard toil required to pay for those lands, and that is the only real test.

I do not give the statistics of my district for the purpose of advertising it, for it needs no advertising at my hands. I give them for the sole purpose of showing that there was no speculation to speak of in farm lands in my district during the decade in question. Hence it is that I have no land speculators "prodding" me to vote for this bill. I do not use the term "prodding" in an offensive sense, for I believe that every Member should be amenable to the healthy public sentiment of his district, but every Member should be sure that the sentiment is a healthy one. The sentiment which actuates the inflationist is the most harmful sentiment which can pervade a community or State, and all who yield to that sentiment do much harm. Therefore I plead with every Member on this floor, irrespective of party affiliation, to resist the plea of the inflationists who are behind this bill. Inflation is only caused by the use to which money is put. It is the use and not the money that is responsible for the cost of increase in prices. That inflation is giving the administration some concern is evidenced by the recent statement made by the Secretary of the Treasury cautioning the people against the use of thrift stamps, war-savings certificates, and liberty bonds in settlement of commercial transactions, and so forth. He warns the public not to treat this medium as you would treat circulating notes or money.

The real truth of the matter is that thrift stamps issued in denomination of 25 cents, war-savings certificates in denomination of $5, and liberty bonds in denominations of $50 and multiples thereof are being used to-day the same as currency or bank credits, and if the practice continues an inflation equal to the amount of the securities so issued can not fail to take place. Thus the Secretary of the Treasury very wisely warns the people to discontinue this practice, which has grown up innocently with a desire on the part of the people to popularize the purchase of these securities and to encourage the people to save and invest in thrift stamps.

There is another tendency along this same line, and I want to call the attention of the House to it in this discussion, and that is the attempt on the part of many banks and bankers throughout the country to make municipal, railroad, and other first-class bonds available for rediscounting purposes with the Federal Reserve System in giving to them the same rights as commercial paper has at the present time.

This is an attempt to make liquid fixed assets, such as real estate and permanent improvements by municipalities, railroads, and so forth. If this were permitted, it would, in my judgment, lead to a serious abuse and inflation and should not under any circumstances be permitted.

The activity of the circulating medium should be limited to the requirements of business, and in this connection every transaction of a commercial nature should carry with it its own source of relief. When that transaction is closed and finally settled the circulating medium should automatically retire.

I mention this at this time because there is sleeping quietly in the Banking and Currency Committees of the House and Senate a bill to accomplish this very result, namely, to make railroad bonds, municipal bonds, and so forth, the basis of rediscount and the issuance of Federal reserve notes, and such a measure should never pass.

At the proper time during the discussion of this bill I propose to offer amendments which will provide that this money if appropriated shall be used for the purpose of increasing agricultural production and not for the purpose of refunding existing loans in accordance with and in support of the argument which I have made. I will also offer an amendment providing that the Secretary of the Treasury shall within two years after the expiration of the war dispose of or compel the Federal Reserve Board to repurchase all of the bonds remaining in the Treasury of the United States at that time. I do this for two purposes. The first is in conformity with the argument that this contemplated purchase of bonds is only temporary and the purchase is made because of the fact that the United States is monopolizing the money market, and, second, to do away with the control over the system by the Secretary of the Treasury and return the management of the banks to the stockholders, under whose management and direction the system should be properly conducted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. McFADDEN. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, for 10 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. SHOUSE. I object, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas objects.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I will yield to the gentleman three minutes more, if that will help.

Mr. McFADDEN. Three minutes more will not cover it, so I had better quit.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, there is no question before us, in my opinion, of the suspension of this farm-loan system. There is no danger whatever that it will suspend. It does not make the slightest bit of difference, in my opinion, to the Federal Farm Loan Board or the system whether we pass this measure or not. The Federal Farm Loan Board has by no means exhausted its efforts to sell these bonds. In fact, it is not too much to say that they have not made any real effort to sell them. They have turned away bids for more than $100,000,000 worth of bonds, and now they come in on their bended knees to us and ask the Government to sell liberty bonds and use the proceeds to purchase farm-loan bonds. I think it is unnecessary and absurd, and it ought not to be done.

I believe the farm-loan system will stand on its own feet if given a chance.

I have sufficient confidence in Mr. Norris, at the head of the Farm Loan Board, to believe that he could go to New York City and sell $100,000,000 of these bonds himself in 24 hours. He has not tried to do it.

What have they done in regard to this business? They first fixed a uniform rate of interest—5 per cent—for mortgage loans in all districts, though the law does not require a uniform rate. The Federal reserve banks do not give uniform rates in all districts in rediscounting, and I think it fair to say that Congress did not expect that a uniform mortgage rate should be given in all districts, regardless of local conditions and risks, in the administration of the farm-loan act.

Then they tied themselves up with contracts to four bond companies to sell these bonds at a fixed price, on a 4¼ per cent basis, and they did that under war conditions, knowing that liberty bonds were being sold and that no power on earth could hold down the rates of interest with the enormous borrowings that the Government is making. These 4¼ per cent tax-free bonds are so good that there was a big demand for them at first, and the fixed contract price worked all right until the second liberty loan sale. Then it naturally proved a serious hindrance.

Mr. MADDEN. If they do not sell these bonds through these bond houses with which they have made the contracts, they can not sell them at all—is that it?

Mr. PLATT. That has been the case up to New Year's Day. They made a contract which was good until the 1st of December, and Mr. Norris told me and told members of the committee under questioning—I do not think those hearings are printed yet, but we asked him a good many questions—that the bond companies were bound under a gentleman's agreement for 30 days beyond the period of the extension of the contract not to sell the bonds at a lower price, and that the farm-land banks were also bound.

Now, these companies have got on hand something over $1,000,000—I think $1,500,000—of these bonds. I do not know whether one reason for the introduction of this bill is to get the Government to take these bonds off of their hands or not. It will not hurt these bond houses—all big, prosperous institutions—to have $1,500,000 of 4½ per cent tax-free bonds on their hands.

Now, just a word as to the possibility of selling these bonds. When I was over in New York during the holidays I was talking with a director of one of the big insurance companies, and I asked him whether he had ever heard of these 4½ per cent tax-free bonds, practically as good as Government bonds, and he said he never had heard of them. He said there should be no difficulty in placing $100,000,000 of them with the big insurance companies and other concerns which are looking for that kind of investments, and he said he would bring it up before his company. But the Farm Loan Board has before this refused to sell these bonds to those people. They have turned down every offer that has been held out for large blocks of the bonds. They were bound by a wooden contract up to January 1 to sell these bonds in small lots on a 4½ per cent basis, when they can not probably any longer be sold on that basis. Then they come to the United States Government and ask us to underwrite or buy $100,000,000 of these bonds each year for two years; and as the first bill which came to us was written, it looked as if that $100,000,000 was to be paid out of the Treasury each year for good and all unless the land banks took it on themselves to redeem them.

Mr. GLASS. May I ask my colleague if he thinks it is exactly advisable to take the irresponsible statement of any one man that such and such a thing can be done, against the official declaration that it can not be done? I ask that question because a colleague of mine in the House said to me the other day that he knew these bonds could be disposed of easily, and he gave me the name of a banker in his State who, he said, would take $100,000 of them. I immediately gave that banker's name to the Farm Loan Commissioner, but at last accounts the bonds had not been taken.

Mr. PLATT. That is a different proposition from going to New York and trying to sell these bonds to the big insurance companies and the people who have got the money to buy them. They have not heard of them at all. The board has not tried that at all. Mr. Norris said so under questioning from me and from other members of the committee. They have not tried to sell these bonds to the people who have got the money to buy them with, 4½ per cent tax-free bonds. Surely they can be sold when 3½ per cent tax-free liberty bonds sell at 98.50 and above.

Mr. GLASS. Did not Mr. Norris say that it was the policy of the board not to put a great amount of these bonds with the wealthy corporations, but to disseminate them in small amounts throughout the United States?

Mr. PLATT. Yes; he did.

Mr. GLASS. The purpose being to enlist all the people in the investment securities of the farm-loan bank, and to have them interested in the banks.

Mr. PLATT. He did say that, and I have no criticism of that as an initial policy when all was going well.

Mr. GLASS. That was when no difficult was being experienced in placing these bonds; but the board has tried repeatedly every sort of expedient to place the bonds since the 1st of November, when they began to experience difficulties on account of the liberty loan, and they have not been able to do it.

Mr. PLATT. Yes; but they have tried to sell them under the fixed wooden contract price which they had with the bond companies. They could not break it and the bond companies could not break it; but now the contract has expired, and they are free to go out and sell these bonds; and I say we ought not to give them a cent until they go to New York and try to sell these bonds at par. I have no doubt they can sell them.

You can talk to investors, men who have money to invest, and ask them if they have ever heard of these 4½ tax-free bonds, and not 1 in 50 has ever heard of them. They are practically as good as Government bonds. There are some Members of this House who have got money to invest, and I have asked them if they had ever had any of these bonds offered them, and they said they had not.

Mr. GLASS. Yes; and a Member of this House said he would take $100,000 of them, but he has not done it.

Mr. PLATT. I do not know anything about that, but there is scarcely a man in this House who has had any opportunity to buy them. I would not mind buying a few of them myself, but they have never been offered to me, and I would not know where to go to buy them. They are not quoted in any of the financial markets or exchanges, so far as I have ever seen.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman talks about a wooden contract. What does he mean by a wooden contract—a contract with a man who is wooden from the chin up?

Mr. PLATT. I mean that the bond houses and the banks were bound to a fixed price regardless of conditions. They would not let the farm-loan banks sell their bonds as they ought to be allowed to do. The Kansas banks had a chance to sell their bonds above the fixed price, and the Farm Loan Board would not let them do so, I am told. They insisted that the bonds must be sold at a fixed price through the bond companies.

Mr. MADDEN. Are the men who are managing the Farm Loan Board competent?

Mr. PLATT. I believe Mr. Norris is a good man, and I have no criticism of the way they started the thing off. The contract was perhaps good policy as a beginning, when the land banks were busy with organization problems, appraisals, and so forth.

Mr. MADDEN. Why should the Treasury of the United States be called upon to furnish money to buy these bonds?

Mr. PLATT. It should not be.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the Government of the United States guarantee these bonds?

Mr. PLATT. No; not in terms, but the Government furnished the $750,000 with which each of the 12 banks began business.

Mr. MADDEN. The Government is not responsible for the bonds, except morally?

Mr. PLATT. No; except morally. I do not know that one can fairly say it is even morally responsible, but the banks are under Government control.

Mr. MADDEN. In what section of the country have most of the loans been made?

Mr. PLATT. Kansas has the largest amount so far—$3,594,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Has any been loaned in the very rich agricultural sections of the United States?

Mr. PLATT. Well, I will say that the great and prosperous State of Iowa has only had $96,000 loaned to it.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt to answer the question of the gentleman from Illinois? He wants to know in what States these loans have been disposed of. The State of Illinois applied for $1,697,000.

Mr. MADDEN. That is a small amount of money for that State.

Mr. PLATT. The applications for loans do not count for a great deal. The loans already made count for more than the applications. Illinois has so far received $186,000. Many people will apply for a loan at a low rate of interest who do not greatly need the money. There is no great urgency among the farmers to borrow money. I questioned Mr. Norris, and he admitted that the $70,000,000 in mortgage loans which they consider the land banks are morally bound to furnish at the 5 per cent interest rate, having already approved them, will shrink to $50,000,000 and has already shrunk to about $50,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. HAYES. I will yield to the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. PLATT. As I say, that $70,000,000 has already shrunk to $50,000,000, which is a big shrinkage, because when a farmer asks to borrow $5,000 and they will not let him have but $4,000, he generally says he does not want any loan. Many farmers are paying mortgages instead of borrowing, and most of the loans made by the land banks go not for increased agricultural production but to refund or pay old mortgages.

Mr. MADDEN. Is it not easier for them to borrow from the private banks?

Mr. PLATT. No; I do not think so; 5 per cent is a low farm-mortgage rate, particularly at this time.

Mr. MADDEN. Is not there an additional charge made by the banks?

Mr. PLATT. Not by the farm-land banks, though there may be by private banks.

Mr. MADDEN. Do not they charge 1 per cent in addition?

Mr. PLATT. Oh, I could talk for an hour about the additional charges that are made to the farmer by some lenders of money. My point is that there is no necessity for the passage of this act. This Government bond-purchasing plan is exactly the same thing that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] and myself, the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES], and others, sound-money Members, stood against in the Sixty-third Congress. The Bulkley bill provided that the Government should buy the bonds. The President was against it and we were against it, and after a strenuous struggle we prevented its being reported.

Mr. GLASS. If the gentleman will pardon me, the Bulkley bill put no limitation on the amount of bonds the Government might acquire. It was a cumulative proposition and might have involved the Government in billions of dollars expenditure.

Mr. PLATT. That is true, and nobody knows what this will entail. No power on earth can keep the interest rate down. There will be another liberty bond issue, and the interest will probably be above 4 per cent. What this amounts to is to have the Government buy these bonds to keep the market price up. Why does not the Government go into Wall Street and buy liberty bonds which are selling at 97?

Mr. GLASS. Well, that is one way of stating it, and another way is to prevent people who would naturally invest in the bonds from squeezing the system, in extraordinary circumstances, by forcing the price of the bonds down and the rate of interest up. That is another way of stating it.

Mr. PLATT. Yes; that is another way of stating it; but the contract for the sale of these bonds has only expired a few days ago, and no effort has been made to sell the bonds without restrictions on their merits as a gilt-edged 4½ per cent tax-free security. It was all right at the beginning to sell the bonds in small lots all over the country, in lots of not over 6,000, but under present circumstances it is far better to sell them to people who have the money to purchase them than to ask the Government to bolster them up.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Chairman, I will yield the gentleman enough of my own time to answer a question. The gentleman has perfect confidence in the sincerity and character and ability of Mr. Norris?

Mr. PLATT. Absolutely.

Mr. GLASS. Does not my friend know that Mr. Norris and the Farm Loan Board will not ask the Secretary of the Treasury to exercise this power to the extent of one dollar if they should find that they can sell the bonds to individuals? Is not there an avowed purpose to sell them to individuals, and did not they express the conviction that they can sell them to individuals if they may be fortified by this guaranty of the Government to take them if in the future they do not sell them to individuals?

Mr. PLATT. Yes; but I believe that they can sell to individuals without the guaranty, and I think they should try that first.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY].

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I am opposed to this measure, because I do not see any merit in it at this time especially. This is a proposition to induce the Government to put $200,000,000 into this farm-loan proposition at a time when the people of our country are called upon for more money than ever before in the history of the Republic, at a time when money is much more needed to carry on the war than it is to further this particular banking system. In the first place, I have little or no faith in the system at any time, for I do not believe the Government gets legitimate loans generally, at least not so much so as do the local banks and local money lenders. I am led to that belief by a great many things that have transpired and come under my observation, and to one I desire to call your attention, which to me is a most striking illustration of the merit of this proposition. Three years ago I sold a piece of land for $2.50 per acre. It was cheap stump land, from which the valuable timber had been cut and removed. I sold that land on contract. The contract has not yet been fully paid. No improvements have been made on the land and there has been no change in its value whatever, except as it may have enhanced in value through time that has elapsed since then. I was advised the other day by the man who had purchased that property from me that he had made application for money from the Government on a mortgage on this property at $15 an acre, and that he wanted to take up his contract. Can you tell me that there is merit in such a loan? Why, he can not borrow such a sum on that land from any money lender in the vicinity of the land, because they know the value of that property better than does any outsider.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman say that that loan was approved at $15?

Mr. FORDNEY. No; I do not. He gave me notice that he was going to pay up on his contract, and he said he was getting the money from the Government at $15 an acre on a mortgage on that property.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman give a description of that land, so that it may be investigated?

Mr. FORDNEY. No; I will not. I can not do that. I ask the gentleman to take my word for it.

Mr. NORTON. The gentleman does not say that the loan was approved for $15.

Mr. FORDNEY. I do not say anything of the kind. I say that he has notified me that he is going to borrow the money from the Government at $15 an acre and wants a deed from me at $2.50 an acre. Let me tell you another thing. The people of this country are called upon to support our men on the battle field right now, at a most critical period in the history of this country, and the money to be subscribed in the purchase of Government bonds and the taxes to be paid by the people of this country this year is two and a half times the amount of all the money in circulation in the United States, as shown by the statement of the Treasury Department. You are coming in at a time when it is not necessary and calling upon the people of the country for $200,000,000 to put in an investment of this kind, when the money is not needed as badly, you will all admit, for this purpose, as it is to sustain our boys on the battle field. Think of it! The Treasury Department shows that there are about $5,000,000,000 of money in circulation. That is not all the money in circulation; there is far more than that—double that amount—but I say that is the amount the Treasury Department shows is in circulation in the country, and we are going to call upon the people this year for from twelve to thirteen billion dollars to purchase United States Government bonds and in direct taxes. The taxes the people will pay under existing law this year will call for 80 per cent of all of the money in circulation in this country as shown by the Treasury Department.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. HAYES. I yield the gentleman one more minute.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I think it is exceedingly unwise legislation at this time, when the people of the country are called upon for so much to sustain our Government, in time of war. This can be easily passed over until after the war, and then be intelligently, carefully, and sanely considered at a time when this kind of legislation may be needed more than now. [Applause.]

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL].

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, it would be useless now to endeavor to call a halt upon the raids that are being made on the Treasury of the United States. It would be useless also to suggest that we have a fundamental law known as the Constitution of the United States. Apparently that great charter has been lost. Upon the impulse of the moment we appropriate millions out of the Treasury without regard to the provisions of our great charter, and to the authority that the Congress has. Even fundamental political principles adhered to for more than a century by the dominant political party have been thrown to the winds. The doctrine of the rights and the duties of individuals and of the States has been forgotten. Everything now goes out from Washington. All authority is centered here. The Treasury is to the whole people now what the Government in 1840 was to the red man—the Great Father. It is useless at this time to undertake to call a halt upon these matters. At this time we are asked for $100,000,000 this year and $100,000,000 next year to buy farm-loan bonds. As a matter of policy, as a matter of constitutional right, it is quite as feasible and proper to do that as to lend $1,400,000 to the State of Tennessee, as was done by the Secretary of the Treasury a few years ago, or in a few weeks from now to lend millions to the railroads, as was suggested by the President a few moments ago we would be called upon to do. We are borrowing money from everybody who can lend; we are taxing the people by every possible method of taxation, for the purpose of raising money to carry on the war. The Treasury is not overburdened with money to carry on the great activities of the Government itself, and yet we are asked to take out of a needed fund for war purposes $100,000,000 to bolster up a failing scheme. If this were for the purpose of lending money to the farmers of the United States to carry on the next year's crop, I would not say a word in opposition, but it is for the purpose of enabling loans to be made for 30 years, out of moneys borrowed and raised by taxation to carry on the war. We are not acting in good faith with the people of the country who loaned this money and paid the taxes. The Secretary of the Treasury quarreled with the Farm Loan Board three months ago because the banks that had been designated by the Farm Loan Board were offering to sell these same bonds at a time when the Government was selling its securities—liberty loan bonds—to raise money with which to carry on the war.

And now, in three months, the Secretary of the Treasury asks the Congress to appropriate $100,000,000 this year and $100,000,000 next year out of money raised by the Government to carry on a war to buy bonds issued by the farm-loan banks. It is said my own State has been the largest borrower. The principle involved may not now be questioned, as I have before stated, but the policy at this time of taking money out of the Treasury that was borrowed to carry on the war may be questioned and ought to be questioned and this matter ought not to have been thrust upon the Congress by the Secretary of the Treasury or by the Farm Loan Board or by anyone else. It is unwise and I believe unpatriotic at this time to ask Congress to take money out of the Treasury for other purposes that was secured by taxes or by loans for war purposes.

Mr. QUIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I am sorry I can not. I have here a sentiment I want to read. I have received many letters of protest against this bill:

> The farmers are not asking this appropriation of $100,000,000 to buy farm-loan bonds. It is a device of the Federal Farm Loan Board to help get themselves out of their embarrassing financial difficulty. The farmers throughout the country generally never were in a more prosperous and better financial condition than now. All kinds of farm products sell at high prices, farm lands are in demand and selling at increased prices, the legitimate wants of the farmer are being taken care of now and will be in the future as they have been in the past, without borrowing from the United States Government.

This is but an extract from one of the many letters I have received in protest against the bill.

Mr. GLASS. Letters from farmers, may I ask?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No; but I have not had a request from a farmer in the State of Kansas to support this measure, not one.

Mr. GLASS. Is not that because they assume, of course, the gentleman will do it? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I will say this to the gentleman from Virginia, that while the Government lends money to States, as it did to the State of Tennessee, and lends money to the railroads, as the President says we must in the near future, if it is lawful or wise policy for those purposes, the right of it can not be questioned when it comes to loans to the farmer, but I say in all conscience, and I believe I express the sentiment of the gentleman from Virginia, that it is untimely to ask Congress to take $100,000,000 out of the Treasury at this time that was placed there to carry on the war to bolster up the farm land-bank scheme.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to my colleague from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON].

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] closed his remarks by reading a statement from somebody who does not seem to have been a farmer, stating that the farmers were not asking for this and did not need it. The farmers are asking to the extent of $100,000,000 for loans with which to relieve themselves from encumbrances that they can not relieve themselves of otherwise, unless, as his correspondent suggests, they sell their farms; and when they sell their farms the correspondent says that the farm lands are bringing a good price; therefore when he attempts to continue to farm by buying another he finds the price of the farm that he wants to buy put up so high that he is squeezed out of the farming business; and now they are asking that loans be provided in order that they may have funds with which to liquidate these debts and enable them to go on. This statement of his correspondent that the farmers are in a good and prosperous condition is partly true, but as to the section of the United States from which I come, it is just beginning to recover from the enormous loss, which Congress said it could not help them to avoid, brought about by this war, when in 1914 they marketed the crop of cotton at a loss of $480,000,000, and many a farm was mortgaged as a result, and they have not had a prosperous time sufficient to rehabilitate themselves. They made 16,000,000 bales of cotton in 1914, and it cost the average farmer at least 12 cents a pound to make it—$60 to the bale—and the people got, on an average, $30 for it. They have never recovered, and they are to-day facing demands from England and elsewhere, from the mortgage companies, that they liquidate their mortgages, and they have got to do it in this way or not at all. Now, are these bonds safe? If they are not, who is responsible? This Congress enacted this act, and in the 27th section it provided the Federal reserve banks should have the right to buy and deal in them. Well, if they are not a safe security, why allow the great financial institutions handling the commercial credits of this country to deal in them as assets on which our currency should be based? Not only that, but is it just that we should do something for them, and is it propitious now? We have got to do one of two things, to allow these farm-loan bonds put upon the market in competition with the United States loans that are being made and asked for for the purpose of helping until this war is over—we have got either to do that or we have got to take it out of the Treasury of the United States; and I say we should not put the Farm Loan Board in competition with the Treasury of the United States, and the President this morning in this apt language expressed exactly the principle that should govern us now when he said:

> No borrowing should run athwart the borrowing of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. I will.

Mr. PLATT. How is this $100,000,000 going to be raised if we do not borrow it on the credit of the United States?

Mr. STEVENSON. We borrow it on the credit of the United States, along with the billions that we are borrowing to loan to France, England, and other countries. We hear no protest against that. We hear no protest when we find that the Government is preparing to loan money to keep the railroads running; and I submit that if we are going to loan money to the railroads to keep them running, it is high time we began to take care of the men who produce that which will move upon the railroads and which is absolutely necessary to maintain the railroads, the people, and the army at the front.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. Does the gentleman agree to have the Government seize the farms and run them for the benefit of the people as it has the railroads?

Mr. STEVENSON. The Government has not found that necessary, because the farmers have shown their capacity, if given proper credit and given the proper facilities, to run their farms so as to support this great Government; and they responded last year in a way that has far exceeded the ability of the railroads or anybody else to demonstrate their patriotism in this country.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Could not the railroads do that, too, if they had that much credit from the Government?

Mr. STEVENSON. They have had much more than the farmers have had. They have had their credit in the money center of New York; and when in 1907 we had a panic, preceded by speculation in securities in New York, the farmers of the South paid for it in the prices of their cotton, and the money that we had in New York we could not get, for the Treasury of the United States put $100,000,000 there in order to maintain the values of the stocks of the railroads and of the bonds of the great corporations. [Applause.]

Why, Mr. Chairman, coming to that, I was president of a bank at that time. We had money in New York and could not get it. I had a neighbor who had $100,000 on deposit in a bank in New York, and it took him three weeks to get $10,000 of it, and we were having cotton forced on the market and were taking certificates of indebtedness for it. If it comes down to a question of aiding the farmers as a special class, I want to call your attention to one other thing.

The great commercial centers, such as New York, have had their heart and center in the Federal reserve banks. What have we done? There has been on deposit in those banks by the Government not less than $50,000,000, practically, ever since they have been established, upon which they do business every day in the year.

Not only that, but we passed last spring here a bill amending the provision for Federal reserves, so as to require 7 per cent of all deposits of all banks of the reserve system to be maintained in those banks, and that meant on the average deposits last year $568,000,000 of reserves, put there for the Federal reserve banks to do business upon. And yet they say that the Federal farm-loan banks can not have a credit of $100,000,000 from the Government in this way, when it is absolutely secured, which it is given the right to control until the loan is paid off; and it is presumed to be secure, because the very basis of these bonds is the land of the farmers of this country, and land is the basis and the foundation stone of all credit, and everything that maintains credit is grown for the support of this country, of its armies, and of its institutions, and upon its shoulders rests the conclusion and successful termination of this war. And they are doing their duty and using their best endeavors to provide the means with which to prevent the people from starvation. It would be a tardy act of justice not to give them at least an opportunity to look in on the Treasury of the United States and feel that Uncle Sam is a father to the farmer as well as to the other interests of this country. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, it seems like old times in this House to have the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON] denounce the trusts of New York and remind us of the crushing effect of Wall Street upon the cotton bales of the South. All these things are supposed to be tabooed in this session of Congress.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And it brings up pleasant memories of those days when speech was free on the floor of the House and Democrats sat on one side and Republicans on the other and pleasantly contended.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. I have not named Wall Street or any trust. I ask the gentleman if he appears on behalf of Wall Street here?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I answer the gentleman by stating that I read in a paper day before yesterday that whereas the present administration came into power cursing the trusts, promising to crush them and put them out of business, all prosecutions against the great trusts of the United States have for the time been suspended. And in order that the gentleman may more thoroughly understand, and that Democrats as well as Republicans may be informed of the assiduity with which the present war administration is prosecuting trusts, I put this little statement in the RECORD:

Suspension until October of Government suits for dissolution of the International Harvester Co.—

Do you remember what an incubus that was upon Kansas and South Carolina—

the United States Steel Corporation—

Do you remember what a holy terror that was when Mr. Woodrow Wilson was campaigning in 1912, and how you were going to put it out of business, and how you are relying upon it now—

the United States Shoe Machinery Corporation—

Which may now have some very profitable contracts with the Government in one form or another—

the Eastman Kodak Co., the Quaker Oats Co.—

And food prices have certainly gone up recently—

the American Can Co., and the Corn Products Refining Co.—

Another food producer which is said to be a part of the Standard Oil Co.—

was asked of the Supreme Court by Attorney General Gregory to-day. Further suspension until the close of the war will be requested then. The tremendous expense—

Think of it!

Why, we raised $21,000,000,000 to prosecute this war and are worrying over this bauble of court costs. [Laughter.]

Mr. MADDEN. You should add $390,000,000 more to it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; I will do that. We are going to add many more billions before this administration gets through. But think of "the tremendous expense"! Think of it! The Attorney General to whom we make constant appropriations for the investigation of trusts; the President, to whom we make an appropriation of $100,000,000 to employ agents and go out and investigate the trusts. Think of the "tremendous expense" involved in dissolving these seven great corporations. And "should the Supreme Court hand down a favorable decision, think of the disruption of the business involved." Ah, do not come up here from South Carolina or Texas or down from Minnesota and throw up to us our political contentions of 1912, when you were opposing the trusts. You have had it in your power now for nearly six years to "bust the trusts," but they seem to have become your nearest and dearest friends. Even you walk into the Supreme Court of the United States and ask for a suspension of judgment until the war is over.

Why, the prices of commodities to the people under your administration have grown higher than at any time in the history of the world, yet you ask for a suspension of judgment against the trusts during the war, because of "the tremendous cost" of hiring lawyers and prosecuting your suits to a successful conclusion. [Laughter.]

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman referred to Minnesota. I want to say on behalf of the State of Minnesota that she had nothing to do with the fraud of 1912. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I accept the gentleman's statement, and I hope the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON] will be good from now on.

Mr. Chairman, I have looked through this bill very carefully. I can not find that it is a war measure, which the Democrats promised us would be the substance of the legislation of this session.

I can not find anywhere in the literature respecting this bill a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. McAdoo, advocating this measure; but I do find coming from the committee a voluntary statement that this proposed legislation, which turns loose from the Treasury of the United States $200,000,000 to the use of certain farm agitators and farmers, who may eventually turn "cats and dogs" into the Treasury of the United States, that it is a "war emergency measure." The necessity for it is explained in an appended letter from the Farm Loan Board to the Secretary of the Treasury. Read that letter, gentleman, and you will find in it not a word about the war, but a plain, blunt statement to the effect that whereas "dad," the Government of the United States, gave $9,000,000 to one of "his boys" to go out and do a little farm-loan business, on which he was thereafter to take care of himself, "the boy" failed to make good, and having made certain promises in his business, involving upwards of $100,000,000, comes back to "dad," the Government, and asks for $200,000,000 more to put him on his feet.

Oh, yes. When my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN] asks for more time to explain the objectionable features of this legislation, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SHOUSE] rises in his seat over yonder and objects to two or three minutes' more discussion, presumably because it appears from the RECORD that the gentleman from Kansas, looking out for the interests of his State, is doubtless aware that under this new deal Kansas expects to receive $7,826,577. His State is one of the largest of all the borrowers. Of course, he wants no discussion of a matter of this kind.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GLASS. I suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that had he yielded to his colleague the first 10 minutes of his own speech, which was not directed to the discussion of the bill but to politics, he might have had more enlightenment on the subject of the bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I suspect this bill has some politics in it. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I consumed?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has used seven minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I suspect, I say, that this bill has some politics in it, but I did not introduce politics into the discussion. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON] introduced the subject of politics by referring to the trusts that sadly distressed the cotton planter.

Now, the cotton planter has not been paying very much in taxes during this war. Let the gentleman from South Carolina remember that. The cotton farmer has declined to submit himself to taxation on cotton in the bale; he has the voting power in this House to prevent it. But he has conceded that at least four States of this Union should bear the burden of practically all of the income tax necessary to prosecute the war. He has conceded that out of the 48 States of this Union the States of New York, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, and Illinois shall pay $122,000,000 out of a total of $180,000,000 on income tax for 1917 and more for 1918. The great voting power of this House just now can impose this new and additional farm-loan burden of $200,000,000 upon the consuming public if it wants to. It is a fine, generous spirit from 44 States of the Union which unload the bulk of the taxes on 4 States.

Politics in this bill? Why, we have had more politics under cover of war than any gentleman here dares to speak of for fear he will be charged with giving information and comfort to the enemy. Politics in this session? Well, gentlemen, if you can control the capitalists on the one hand by Government control of railroads and make the Treasury of the United States pay the cost of operation rather than those who are the beneficiaries of the railroad service you will have done one thing. Withdrawing the prosecution of the trusts of the United States is another. That may not be politics, but if you can tie up the big trusts and railroad managers and capitalists on the one hand and satisfy labor by increasing wages on the other hand and then give the farmers $200,000,000, it looks like playing pretty good politics.

Yet we are forbidden to discuss politics in this House. [Laughter.]

They wanted to pass this bill under a rule just before the holidays, and my distinguished friend from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], who made a plain, frank statement as to his attitude on the bill this morning, was in favor of that move. He did not want any more discussion of the bill than that other distinguished gentleman, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], who now occupies and graces the chair. It was the gentleman from Mississippi, who, arguing for the rule to limit debate, closed his brilliant speech with a tribute to Coriolanus and George Washington, the illustrious farmer, and Thomas Jefferson, the great tiller of the soil, and declined to be interrupted. Why did he cling to these delightful historic memories? Not only to secure the $200,000,000 that the bill asked for, reduced, as it has been temporarily by senatorial action, to $100,000,000——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But because, perchance, the State of Mississippi had put in its claims to receive $7,000,000 out of this $100,000,000 or $200,000,000 or whatever the total may be. Compare that with the income tax paid by Mississippi and you can understand why this bill ought to pass. [Laughter and applause.] I would like to make some other comparisons.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Chairman, I want to give notice now that, whether from this side or from that, I am not going to tolerate any more political harangues while we are considering a serious matter; and I will submit a point of order if any other man takes the floor and indulges in picayune politics when we want to discuss a grave question. [Applause.]

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. SLOAN. Remember, the chief tolerator of the House has given notice that you will not be tolerated if you talk politics.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I shall not discuss politics, even though there may be some politics in this bill. I am in favor of the Senate bill, and I sincerely hope that the substitute which the chairman of the committee announces he will present, being the House bill, will not be adopted. I want, first, to call attention to the differences between the Senate bill and the House bill. The House bill provides for $200,000,000—$100,000,000 this year and $100,000,000 next year. The Senate bill provides only $100,000,000. There is a provision in the Senate bill, known as the Weeks amendment, which provides that after the loans now approved have been taken care of, amounting to something over $70,000,000, no other funds of the Treasury shall be used for the purchase of these farm-loan bonds except for loans made for food production; in other words, that outside of the $70,000,000 of loans already approved, if the Treasury is to loan money for this purpose it must be for the purpose of increasing food production, as against making loans merely for the refunding of existing loans. The chairman of the committee stated in response to a question from me a little while ago that of the loans now approved, amounting to something over $100,000,000, 90 per cent of them involved the refunding of existing mortgages; and that means that a very large majority of these loans are not for the purpose of increasing food production except as a lowering of the interest rate may do so.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. I think the gentleman misapprehends, perhaps, the statement made, because it is not true that 90 per cent of the loans made are for refunding purposes only. It is true that they involve refunding purposes.

Mr. LENROOT. That is what I said.

Mr. TOWNER. But it should be explained to the House that in a vast majority of cases a part of the loan is for refunding purposes and the other is for extension purposes.

Mr. LENROOT. That may or may not be so. Of course it is true to a certain extent, but I am satisfied that it is not true as to a majority of the cases. But, however that may be, under what is known as the Weeks amendment, if the loan is for the purpose of increasing food production the funds of the Treasury may be used, but not otherwise; but if it be solely for the purpose of enabling a farmer who is now paying 6 per cent to obtain his loan for 5 per cent the money of the Treasury can not be used for that purpose. And that brings us to the question whether we ought to appropriate money out of the Treasury of the United States in these war times for the sole purpose of reducing the interest rate and not for the purpose of increasing food production. That, gentlemen, is a very serious matter. Many gentlemen think they must favor this proposition as a whole because otherwise they will be charged with not favoring the farmers of their districts. Let us see. In the two liberty loans that we have floated there is no part of the United States where farmers, business men, and professional men have not gone to the banks and borrowed money at a higher rate of interest than the liberty loan bears for the purpose of purchasing liberty bonds. That is true in every section of the United States. That is true of farmers. Now, I think they have a good case for the $70,000,000, but outside of that when you say, "We will authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to use the proceeds of these liberty bonds for the purpose of loaning money to farmers to refund mortgages," when our next liberty loan comes up and we again make an appeal to the people of this country to purchase liberty bonds to carry on the war, and do it as a matter of patriotic duty, can we ask a man to go to the bank and borrow money at 5 per cent or 6 per cent in order to buy liberty bonds at 4 per cent, when we are going to turn around and pay out that money to his neighbor in order that he may get a rate of interest of 5 per cent instead of 6? Can you justify it? Is there anyone who can justify it? Ah, it is more than that. Upon that proposition the very success of the liberty loans in the future may depend.

We have no right to ask the poor and humble people of this country to go without necessaries of life in order that they may patriotically help the Government to carry on this war and purchase liberty bonds in amounts as low as $50, when it can be absolutely demonstrated that the money—perhaps the very money taken from them and depriving them of necessities—will be given to a farmer who may be worth $10,000 or $25,000, in order to enable that farmer to get a mortgage refunded for 5 per cent instead of 6 per cent. Ah, any gentleman who thinks there is any politics in supporting that kind of a proposition and voting against the Weeks amendment is very sadly mistaken. You can not justify it, and it ought not to be considered for a single moment, and I am surprised that the chairman of the committee should be opposed to the Weeks amendment. Under the Weeks amendment the $30,000,000 that the Senate bill provides for, in excess of the $70,000,000, can be used wherever the farmer making the loan will use the money for the purpose of increasing food production. All that it prevents is the refunding of existing mortgages. In a few months we may be confronted with a most serious situation with reference to raising money needed to carry on this war. Facing that condition, are we in a position to furnish money out of the Treasury that will be used in many cases solely for the purpose of lowering the rate of interest in some section of the country? Why, I understand that to-day, since the President delivered his message to this House, a bill has been introduced appropriating $500,000,000 for the railroads of this country. Unquestionably we will be compelled to appropriate in some form or other a very large amount of money out of the Treasury for that purpose. That is just as important to the farmer as it is to anyone. The farmer's farm is of no value to him unless his products can be transported. And so in every direction we are confronted and will be confronted, from day to day, with staggering sums necessary to carry on this war, and thus it is all the more important that not one dollar be appropriated out of the Treasury, or that any officer of the Government be vested with power to expend a single dollar except where it is necessary for the purpose of carrying on and winning this war. [Applause.]

But to get back to the original proposition, it should be clearly understood that every Member who votes for the House bill against the Senate bill votes to take money out of the Treasury in order to refund existing mortgages at the expense of the farmers who do not get mortgages from these farm-loan banks, asking the farmer who pays 6 per cent now from private sources to buy a liberty bond, to borrow the money from the bank to do it, in order that his neighbor who pays 6 per cent on a like mortgage may get his mortgage reduced to 5 per cent. Gentlemen, it ought not to be.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this bill. It provides that the Government may purchase for each of the fiscal years of 1918 and 1919 $100,000,000 worth of farm-loan bonds. Unless this is done, our Federal land banks may be compelled to suspend business until the close of the war. I regret that there are so many on this side of the House who are antagonizing this measure. All who have spoken on this side, so far, have been in a way criticizing this bill. I regret it. It has been said that there ought not to be any politics in this bill, and there ought not. And yet I say to you, my Republican friends, that opposition to this bill will be, and ought to be, construed as antagonistic to the great agricultural interests of this country [applause], and the Republican Party will never be in power in this Nation again if the farmers of this country understand that the party is unfriendly to their interests. [Applause.]

Now, I warn you who are here, and I warn the great leaders of the Republican Party in this Nation, that we can not return to power without the confidence and support of the farmers. We can not expect, and indeed we ought not to have that support and confidence, unless we are ready, through national legislation and national policies, to promote the prosperity of farmers and the expansion of agriculture. Shall we be wrapped up in the great commercial, financial, and industrial interests and not be ready to extend a sympathizing hand to the great agricultural interests of this country?

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes; I will yield for a question.

Mr. PLATT. Does the gentleman understand that the farmers are asking us to do this? I do not so understand it; not one farmer in a million knows anything about it.

Mr. MORGAN. What I have said I stand by, and I again warn the Republican leaders of the House and of the Nation that a friendly attitude toward the farmers must be maintained if we expect to go back in national power. Historically the Republican Party has always stood for agriculture and commerce alike. Its principles and polices have favored the farmers and their industry, but modern conditions have brought new problems. No party that does not stand by the farmers and their industries should be placed in power in this Nation. [Applause.]

Now, the able gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] has made an eloquent speech criticizing this measure. I am surprised at it, and I regret it. Of course if this was simply a measure to help the farmer to the injury of the carpenter, or help the farmer to the detriment of the merchant, I would not support it, and no one should; but this is to carry out a great policy established when the Government undertook to aid in financing the farmers by the passage of the Federal farm-loan act. Why was this act passed? Not simply in the interest of the farmer. No, no; but to strengthen this great Government; to increase food production; to expand agriculture; to promote through the expansion of agriculture the prosperity of the whole country. It was for the benefit of nonagricultural population as well as farmers. In this critical hour the cry comes from England, from France, from Italy, and from all of our allies for bread—the cry is food. Where is it to come from? All eyes are turned to the farmers of the United States. Shall we by our voices and our votes say to starving Europe that we will not encourage our farmers in their effort to feed the world? Certainly not. But to refuse to pass this bill would be doing so. Then, Mr. Chairman, let us pass this bill.

We can do nothing better in this hour of peril and danger than by a unanimous vote of this Congress, to give the necessary financial aid to promote the prosperity and expansion of agriculture, in order that in this great war—whether it shall last one year or five years—we may be able to feed ourselves and those who are fighting with us to free the world of autocracy, and make liberty, freedom, and justice supreme throughout the world.

Mr. Chairman, this is not the time to criticize the management of our Farm Loan Board. I have no doubt there have been mistakes made. I have no doubt, as the gentleman from Michigan has indicated, that some loans have been made too high. Nothing else could be expected. There are always mistakes made, and sometimes public officers are corrupt and betray their trusts. But this is no argument against the passage of this bill. There should be criticism if criticism is just, but this is not the time to make it. I want the report from the Federal Farm Loan Board. I want to know what they have been doing; whether they have been administering their trust efficiently and economically as they should. I will be ready at the proper time to criticize any mismanagement, with a view to improving it. But I can not lend my voice and vote to-day to oppose this great measure.

Why is the passage of this bill necessary? Here is the situation. The Government is monopolizing the credit power of this Nation to-day. You can not sell industrial bonds; you can not sell railroad bonds. If the truth were known, one of the objects of taking over the railroads is in order that the Government may finance them. Railway officials said that they could not borrow money. They could not meet their maturing obligations without borrowing money. Their bonds were depreciating in value. Our banks own billions of these bonds, and billions of their loans are based on railway bonds as collateral security. So the Government proposes to finance the railroads. The Federal Land Banks are in the same position as the railroads. In this emergency these banks—representing the farmers and their industry—must be rendered such aid as will enable them to carry on the great work they have undertaken.

It may be as the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT] says, these bonds can be sold without this aid. The Federal Farm Loan Board think not. Their opinion is entitled to great weight. Even if they could be sold, I am not certain it would be wise for the Federal Farm Loan Board to put 4½ per cent bonds, free from taxation, on the market in competition with the liberty loan bonds at 4 per cent in part taxable. We must clear the track for financing the war. That is the paramount duty of the hour. In the meantime we must not discourage the farmer. We must not let agriculture languish. It is of no less importance to finance the farmer than it is to finance the railways. We must do both. That is why this bill should pass.

The work of financing the farmer has not yet been completed. We have done nothing for short-time personal credit. Last summer the farmers in northwest Oklahoma, and over much of Kansas and other western States, could not buy seed wheat. This resulted in restricting the acreage of wheat sown in these sections. Various schemes were proposed. In all of them the farmers were compelled to pay an exorbitant rate of interest to borrow money to buy seed wheat. This ought never to occur again in the United States. We must go on and perfect our mortgage credit system—give it the aid it now needs—and then perfect a personal, short-time loan system which will in truth give the farmers the same credit facilities possessed by the great commercial, manufacturing, and industrial interests.

We should pass this bill and carry out the great policy of promoting agricultural growth, through better credit facilities. By so doing, we will encourage the farmers to produce all the food products possible in this hour of great crisis, and there ought not to be one vote against the measure when it comes to a vote. I hope there will not be. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I think that opposition to this bill in a general way is unjustified. I do not mean by that to criticize gentlemen who really believe that the bill, if passed, will mean taking $100,000,000 or $200,000,000 out of the Public Treasury. I think gentlemen are not justified in that belief, not because of the weakness of their judgment but because of a lack of knowledge of the circumstances. We have not anything to explain here that is at all remarkable, as some gentlemen seem to believe. Here is the situation. These bonds could have been placed on the market at any time and sold there for par and for more than par, if it had not been for circumstances for which the Government of the United States is itself responsible. So there is nothing to do but for us to meet the question in the best way we can. Thirty million dollars of these bonds were sold under terms that everybody agreed were just, both to the borrower, to the Government, and to every one else. Seventy million dollars more in applications which are approved are pending, for which loans would have been made if it had not been for the remarkable effect of the last liberty loan on the credits of the country. We know that just as soon as that loan was placed all of the credits of the country fell to a remarkable degree. Those who had been handling these bonds could no longer sell them. There were two reasons for that, one because of the depreciation of the investment funds of the United States, and another reason, that it is now believed by the investing public that the United States bonds of all kinds and character must carry a higher rate of interest than has hereto been authorized in order to be floated. That belief is so widespread that no one will take existing bonds except at a discount. It is very well known that our 4 per cent bonds on the market are now selling at 97 or thereabouts. These bonds are depreciated, and why? Not because of a lack of faith in the credit of the United States, but because of the fact that people believe that better terms will be given them in a very short time; that the next liberty loan will carry 4½ per cent; that in order to float this loan it will have to be raised to 5 per cent or still more. Those are the conditions beyond peradventure which exist, and which explain the reason why the $70,000,000 could not be floated.

It can not be taken charge of as it has been by those gentlemen who have managed the flotation of the $30,000,000 on existing terms and conditions. Their contracts extended only to $30,000,000, and they refused to extend it to the other $70,000,000, not because they did not desire to do so, but because they did not dare to do so. Those are the conditions which exist. Instead of taking $100,000,000 from the United States Treasury, I have very grave doubts as to whether it will ever take $10,000,000 from the Treasury. In other words, as soon as it is known to the investing public that they do not have to sell these bonds at a higher rate of interest, then they will sell at 4½. Why should they not? No more desirable bonds were ever offered in any market of the world than these. They are to-day the very best investment that can be offered anywhere on earth, and it is because the public believes they can secure them at better rates that they are not able to sell them on the market now, in my judgment.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. The gentleman referred to the present 4 per cent liberty bonds as selling on the market at 97.

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. The gentleman knows that the 3½ per cent tax-free bonds are selling at 98½. Is there any reason why we should not sell these bonds at 98½ if we tried?

Mr. TOWNER. I do not know.

Mr. PLATT. I do.

Mr. TOWNER. Of course, I know the gentleman knows a great deal more about this matter than I do, but there are so many conditions that exist about which it is impossible for me to have all of the knowledge necessary to form a judgment, that I feel very great hesitancy in making a judgment on that proposition.

Mr. HARDY. It is very evident, however, that if investing capital feels sure that it can command a rate of 5 per cent it will not invest in 4½ per cent bonds.

Mr. TOWNER. That is about the whole proposition.

Mr. PLATT. If investing capital feels it can command a rate of 5½ per cent or something like that, why do they buy the 3½ per cent liberty bonds and pay 98½ for them?

Mr. TOWNER. Because, and I think the gentleman knows it, that that is the difference between the tax-free bonds and those that are taxed.

Mr. PLATT. Exactly; but these are tax-free bonds.

Mr. TOWNER. I know; and that is one of the reasons why I say they will sell readily if the investing public does not believe that the interest rate will be raised upon them.

I want to say just a word or two regarding the Senate bill. I sincerely hope that the Senate bill will be adopted by this House, and I want to address myself more particularly to the Democratic side of the House, because I think they know the responsibility that rests upon them. If we pass the Senate bill to-day, that ends the transaction, and it ends it as the Treasury desires it. Of course, I know that the Farm Loan Board would prefer that the House bill should go through. I know that the Secretary of the Treasury would prefer that the Weeks amendment should not be attached to it, but that is not a serious objection. It is a great deal better for us to pass that bill to-day and have it ended, because matters that gentlemen consider desirable can be obtained in the future, and I fear that a disagreement now to the Senate amendments may lead to a prolonged discussion between the two Houses. We ought not to wait a day longer. This bill ought to have been passed in December. Conditions are such that these borrowers of $70,000,000 are uncertain as to whether they will receive the money the Government has agreed to furnish or not. Men do not know what they can do. Their loans have been due and they have got the bank to pay them and carry them over until the 1st of January. They can not be carried much longer. We must pass this bill now if we want to save them from embarrassment and loss. Seventy millions of dollars of approved loans are now waiting, $70,000,000 are promised men who have made arrangements to take up old mortgages and who have made arrangements for the investment of additional money for improvements on property. This money that was promised to them months ago they ought to have now. Do not delay it for another two or three months. Let us pass the Senate bill to-day. What is the Weeks amendment? After all, I think there is a good deal of justification for it under the existing circumstances. We are claiming, and I believe with justice, that this is properly a war measure for the purpose of increasing the agricultural production of the United States. Gentlemen who have opposed this bill say that they would gladly pay money of the Treasury to increase production.

Very well; we do not ask them to take money from the Treasury; we just ask them to lend the credit of the United States to increase production. That is what we are asking, and only that. Therefore I am for this bill unequivocally. I believe this is a great measure for the carrying on of this war, and gentlemen who say that this is taking money out of the United States Treasury that ought to be used for carrying on the war I think are not justified in that statement. We can do nothing better than to increase the productive activities of the United States to feed our soldiers at home and abroad, to give the raw material to the manufacturers, and to furnish the things that the Government needs to equip the soldiers comfortably in the field.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Does the gentleman understand that under the Weeks amendment no more bonds can be sold by the farm-loan banks until the Government is paid off?

Mr. TOWNER. No, sir; I do not so understand. The Weeks amendment only provides——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAYES. I yield the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. TOWNER. The Weeks amendment simply provides this, that these loans of $70,000,000 shall be put out without limitation. Then, if further applications are approved, they shall only be approved with those conditions that will make the money available for increased production and not merely for the refunding of loans.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. But the amendment states plainly that they can not approve of any more loans until the Treasury has been paid off.

Mr. TOWNER. I know; but they have approved $70,000,000 already.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Well, but suppose after they have settled that account and they still owe the Treasury of the United States on money advanced to them on bonds, can the farm-loan banks continue the sale of their own bonds while still owing the Treasury?

Mr. TOWNER. Why, certainly they can.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. The amendment says they can not.

Mr. TOWNER. Oh, I do not think so.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. And in the Senate Senator FLETCHER stated that they could, and Senator WEEKS stated that they could not, so the amendment apparently is not very clear.

Mr. TOWNER. I do not think there is any question about it. Let me say this, gentlemen: I do not think there are a great many of these loans that are merely for refunding old loans. Nearly all of these—and it has been the policy all the way through of the farm-loan people that they should make these loans not merely for reinvestment purposes but, as far as they could, for increasing the capacity of the farmer to produce; that if he had a $1,000 loan he could refund that and get $500 more to buy more stock or build a new barn, or something of that kind, to increase his capacity to produce.

Mr. GARD. Does the gentleman know that 90 per cent of these loans involve a refund?

Mr. TOWNER. I do; but a refund, of course, would include an absolute refund of the entire loan, and also a partial refund of the loan that may be made for improvement. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the lady from Montana [Miss RANKIN].

Miss RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, the Federal Farm Loan System must be continued if the farmers of my State are to meet their share of the Nation's demand for food in the future as generously as they have met it in the past. My farmer constituents are complaining bitterly against conditions imposed upon them by exorbitant farm-loan rates charged by private local companies, and I feel that in the Federal Farm Loan System lies one important factor in the development of their farms.

The people of Montana have filed with the Federal land bank of Spokane 4,377 applications for loans, which aggregate nearly $12,000,000. This means an average of something over $2,700 for each applicant.

The amount of applications ranks third in the United States. Loans have been approved on 1,915 of these applications, involving $4,604,815 altogether, and averaging about $2,400 apiece. Six hundred and thirteen loans, aggregating $1,632,020, have already been closed and the money paid to the borrowers.

I am informed that reductions, rejections, inability to make title, change of mind on the part of the borrower, and other causes have cut off about 40 per cent of the applications in the country at large, to date. Assuming that the same proportion prevails in my State, it means that $7,250,000 worth of loans are closed out of the $12,000,000 worth of applications, and that my people are receiving about $1,600,000. On the same basis they will receive about $5,600,000 additional on applications now pending if the Federal Farm Loan System continues.

The consideration of the Federal Farm Loan System is especially timely right now, as we face the national food problem, which becomes more acute each week. We are urging increased production. And in the meantime we are lending to those countries with which we are associated in the world war, and, I believe, to manufacturers and builders upon whom we are depending for military equipment.

Our financial arrangements are far from complete, however, when we leave out of consideration the farmer who must feed us, and, further than that, must feed the world. He is the man who finds it most necessary and at the same time most difficult to secure capital, and he is the man whose capital requirements must be taken care of.

I am advised that both foreign and domestic companies that have heretofore been engaged in making loans in various sections of the country are discontinuing or seriously curtailing their operations, and unless the Government facilitates the operation of the Federal Farm Loan System which it has created, the farmers of my State will not only be unable to increase their production, but will find it impossible to continue even the production of the last few years.

The Federal Farm Loan System was intended to operate on capital accruing from the sale of Federal farm-loan bonds issued through the 12 farm-loan banks to individual investors. During normal times the system operated without difficulty. Even during the abnormal period between the first and second liberty loan flotations the sale of Federal farm-loan bonds was not seriously interfered with. But since the second issue of liberty bonds, capital for such investment has been so completely absorbed as to make it impossible now to sell Federal farm-loan bonds in sufficient quantities to meet the demands for loans.

This condition of the Federal farm-loan bond market can be but temporary, and possible investors are now waiting to see whether the price of the bonds is to be reduced or the interest rate increased. During the last six months the change in interest rates has made possible the reduction in the price of the bonds from 101½ to 100½; and it is reasonable to believe that prospective investors will be eager to buy the bonds as soon as they know that the banks can get cash for the bonds pending their sale in the market. Thus, if the Treasury is authorized to buy the bonds, in limited amount, until they are resold to individual buyers, a certain confidence will be inspired in the investors and the Federal Farm Loan System can be continued. Inasmuch as Congress has created this system, it should be responsible for the continuation of it until some more satisfactory system of aiding the farmers can be devised.

With regard to Senator WEEKS's amendment, although it may be desirable to prevent loans being made for the mere purpose of paying off a mortgage at 6 or 7 per cent or even 12 per cent, which is not due, or for the mere purpose of enabling the applicant to borrow money at 5½ per cent, the amendment limits future loans from the proceeds of the bonds bought by the Treasury to loans which are made "for the increase of food production," and overlooks the fact that the act prohibits loaning except on first mortgages.

I believe I am safe in saying that most of the farmers of my State already have a mortgage or lien of some kind on their lands. If, then, a man whose farm is mortgaged for $1,000 wishes to borrow an additional $1,000 for live stock, machinery, or other improvements, he can not be loaned that $1,000 and have a second mortgage taken as security; but the Farm Loan Bureau must lend him $2,000 to enable him to take up his existing mortgage and give a first mortgage in exchange for the new loan.

Thus the amendment would limit future operations of the bureau to only that very small minority of farmers who have no already existing indebtedness on their farms. This would make impossible the organizations of Federal farm-loan associations of 10 or more members in which borrowers must associate themselves before loans can be made to them; and would be impracticable. [Applause.]

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON].

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, during the Sixty-third and Sixty-fourth Congresses I gave much time and study to the subject of a suitable and practical Federal system of credits for securing to those engaged in the production of farm products in our Nation long-time loans at fair and reasonable rates of interest on the security of their lands and permanent improvements thereon. As the few Members of the House who were most deeply and actively interested in this subject will recall, it was not an easy matter for us to formulate or to agree upon a system of Federal rural credits that would be practical and suitable for our ever-changing farming population and for the very varied agricultural conditions of our country. The subject of a Federal system for long-time farm loans was one of the most important and live subjects of consideration and debate in the House and Senate for many months over a period of about four years prior to the passage of the present rural-credit law. The study of rural-credit legislation before the passage of the existing law developed two schools of thought in this country on the subject. The followers of the one school held that the system should be purely cooperative among the borrowers; that it should be wholly self-supporting; that the Government should give no financial credit or support to the system; and that the only aid the Federal Government should give to the system should be that of Federal supervision of its organization and its business transactions.

The other school held that the Federal Government should issue and dispose of United States Government bonds to secure money at the lowest possible rate of interest, the proceeds of these bonds to be used as a fund from which loans direct to farmers could be made on their farm land as security, the notes and mortgages to be held by the Federal Government as security for the repayment of the loans. The present legislation is a compromise between two schools of thought on Federal rural-credits legislation for this country.

The rural-credits law was approved on July 17, 1916. The members of the Federal Farm Loan Board held their first meeting on August 7, 1916. The first Federal farm-land bank to receive a charter was the bank located at Wichita, Kans., which was chartered on March 3, 1917. The first bonds authorized to be issued were issued by the Wichita land bank of the ninth farm-land district. Authority for the issue of these bonds in the sum of $250,000 was made by the Federal Farm Loan Board on June 28, 1917. The first authorization for the issue of the bonds by the Federal farm-land bank at St. Paul, Minn., which is the farm-land bank of the seventh district, including the States of North Dakota, Minnesota, Wisconsin, and Michigan, was made by the Federal Farm Loan Board on August 16, 1917.

The Federal farm-land banks for the most part were not organized and ready to receive applications and approve loans until about the 1st of June, 1917. From the very beginning there was a very great demand from every section of the country for farm loans under the new system. This demand was so general and so great that the farm-land banks were not able to care for but a small part of the business that was offered to them. While the original capital of the 12 farm-land banks, each having a capital of $750,000, was but $9,000,000 up to November 30, 1917, practically the first six months' business of the banks since they were organized and ready for business, applications for loans amounting to $219,760,740 had been made. Of these applications $105,136,529 were approved. From these approved applications $29,824,655 were closed. These loans that were approved and made were made at an interest rate of 5 per cent and on an amortization plan, whereby 1 per cent per annum of the amount of the loan was provided to be collected and applied in reduction of the principal sum of the loan.

In my judgment, the work accomplished by the Federal farm-land banks up to the present time shows conclusively that the Federal Farm Loan system is a splendid success and that it is one for which there has been great and long need in this country. It could not be reasonably expected that all the workings of this new system in the first six months of its active existence would be perfect. To fully appreciate the work that the Federal farm-land banks have done in so short a time it must be understood how the system provides for a revolving fund from which farm loans are made. Under the law, when any Federal farm-land bank has made and has in its possession a certain amount of first-mortgage farm loans, say, an amount aggregating one hundred or two hundred thousand dollars, the Federal farm-land bank then may, with the approval of the Federal Farm Land Board, issue farm-land bonds to the full amount of the farm-land mortgage loans it has in its possession. These bonds are issued and sold to the public at not less than par by the Federal farm-land bank and the proceeds are again used by the Federal farm-land banks to make more first-mortgage loans to farmers on their farm lands and improvements. The amount of the loans made to farmers is not to exceed 50 per cent of the value of the land and 20 per cent of the value of the farm buildings and permanent improvements.

I wish to speak here to-day on this subject for the farmers of the Northwest. To those here who have stated that the farmers of the country do not demand legislation of this kind in aid of the Federal rural-credits system I desire to say that the farmers of my State are asking for this legislation and the farmers of every other State adjoining the State of North Dakota are asking for it. Why, gentlemen of the committee, the farmers of Massachusetts are asking for it. The farmers of Mississippi are asking for it. Farmers are asking for it from one end of this country to the other.

I have a letter here that may interest some gentlemen, and, unlike the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], who read an extract from a letter in opposition to this proposed legislation, I am pleased to give the name of the party who forwarded this letter strongly favoring the passage of the bill. This letter is written by a Mr. William E. Putnam, secretary-treasurer of the Berkshire National Farm Loan Association, of Pittsfield, Mass. In his letter, presenting the needs for this legislation and urging the passage of this bill in aid of the rural-credit system, Mr. Putnam says, among other things:

To expect farmers to increase the food production when faced with the foreclosure of their mortgages and the loss of their farms is to expect the impossible, owing to the difficulty of obtaining money from the savings banks and, together with the floating of the huge war loans, the constant appeal for funds for the different interests, is just what the farmer is facing to-day.

When the Federal land banks were organized the farmer welcomed them as the greatest blessing they had ever enjoyed, thus to be recognized in the class of legitimate borrowers at a fair rate of interest and a living chance to pay up.

I want further to say to you, gentlemen of the committee, that the farmers of Maine are asking for and are advantageously using this system of Federal rural credits. Farmers are using it in Florida. Farmers are using it in California. Farmers are using it in Washington. They are using it in Kansas, in Oklahoma, and in every leading farming State of this Union. They are using it, and they are being greatly benefited through its operation in lower interest rates and in more favorable terms of payments on their farm loans than they have ever had heretofore. As I have observed the operation and the benefits of the rural-credits system in its present not altogether perfect form, I consider it one of the greatest pieces of Federal legislation that has been passed by Congress in the last quarter of a century in the interests of agricultural production and in the interests of the welfare of the farmers of this country. The amendment that has been added to this bill known as the Weeks amendment would completely destroy the usefulness of the Federal rural-credits system and should not be considered favorably for a moment by any true friend of rural-credits legislation. If this ridiculous and vicious amendment were enacted into law no loans other than those that have already been approved could be made to renew an existing mortgage or to provide for making farm improvements. I am surprised that anyone claiming to be a friend of Federal rural-credits legislation should speak a word in its support.

The failure of the sale of farm-loan bonds during the past two months is not due to any inherent defect in the present rural-credits law. If the Federal farm-loan bonds had been properly placed upon the market, and if the farm-land banks of the country during the last six months had been allowed to sell these bonds in competition with the United States Government bonds, they would have been easily sold. The administration, however, has seen fit to withhold the sale of these bonds and to suggest to the Federal farm-land banks that the bonds be not placed upon the market in active competition with the second liberty loan bonds. Since this has been done, I believe it is only right and proper that this Congress respond to the recommendation of the administration to enact this law in aid of the Federal rural-credits system.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORTON. Certainly.

Mr. GORDON. Is it a fact that these bonds have never been offered for sale to the public?

Mr. NORTON. Between July 1 and November 1 of this year $30,000,000 worth of these bonds were sold. Since the 1st of November the sale of these bonds has not been pushed.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORTON. Yes; I shall be pleased to yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. MORGAN. As I understand it, they have never been offered to the public. So far they have been sold by a syndicate of bankers that had the exclusive contract for selling the bonds up to the first of this year.

Mr. NORTON. The farm-land banks have never made a systematic effort to sell these bonds to the public. The bonds that have been sold were sold through a syndicate of brokers.

Mr. GORDON. What price did they bring?

Mr. NORTON. They sold at a considerable premium. They sold at a price that would return to the purchaser about 4 per cent per annum. The bonds bear interest at the rate of 4½ per cent per annum.

Mr. HARDY. Does not the gentleman think it would have been a rather bad condition if these loans had been pushed in competition with the liberty bonds?

Mr. NORTON. I will say to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] that I am perfectly willing at this time to waive any criticism of the wisdom of the action of the administration in this matter.

This debate has again evidenced in a most conspicuous manner that whenever there is brought up in the House for consideration any measure of importance in aid of the farming industry of this country and of the farmers of this country there are men who represent the manufacturing industries, banking interests, and railroad interests of the country who almost invariably are loud in their wails of opposition. These men are not satisfied with what has been given their constituents. They want the whole earth and the fullness thereof. They seem quite unmindful and forgetful of the past. It may be well for them to remember that during the period of depression brought on by the European war in 1914 up to the 24th of September of that year the Federal Government had loaned emergency currency to banks of the country in an amount exceeding $315,000,000. I do not now recall that I heard a word of protest at that time from any gentleman in the House from Pennsylvania or from any gentleman in the House from New York as to any loss that the Government might suffer on account of this loan of emergency currency to the banks in Pennsylvania or in New York. This money, be it remembered, was loaned to those banks at a rate of interest of 2 and 3 per cent per annum and not at a rate of interest of 4½ per cent, the rate that these good farm-land bank bonds bear. [Applause.] The banks of the State of New York, from which the gentleman [Mr. PLATT] comes, were loaned $37,000,000 of this Government emergency currency. I want to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], who has so vigorously protested against this legislation, that the banks of his State were given $20,000,000 of this easy emergency currency. There was not a word of protest against that procedure by the gentleman, as I now recall it. Further, I want to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that it might be fairly said that considerable of that emergency currency was loaned upon real cats and dogs and not upon securities in anything like the same class as good, sound farm-mortgage loans.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman knows that, will the gentleman point out to anyone of them that happens to be in the Treasury to-day? Will the gentleman venture to say at all that every dollar of that was not paid?

Mr. NORTON. The gentleman can not with any reason say that a single dollar of the farm-mortgage bonds that are made or to be issued under this system will not be paid. The gentleman, if he knows anything about the rural-credit system that has been enacted, can not say that a single dollar of the bonds issued under it is not absolutely gilt-edged.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman deny that the banks and trust companies that loan money upon real estate do not eventually get some of that real estate?

Mr. NORTON. While that may be true, I want to remind the gentleman that the banks and trust companies that have loaned money upon the real estate of this country have made countless millions from these loans.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Do they not get some real estate that they can not sell?

Mr. NORTON. They do not get any good farm lands that they can not readily sell. I want to remind the gentlemen of the House that we are loaning vast sums of money to our allies across the seas. We have already loaned millions of dollars to France, to England, and to Italy; but of all our allies the greatest and the most powerful allies of this Nation in this great war are the farmers of our Nation. [Applause.] They it is who are supplying the real sinews of war. During the past year they have produced more than $21,000,000,000 worth of farm products. They have produced during the past season farm products aggregating a greater value than the total amount we have already appropriated for our expenses in this war and for all loans to be made to foreign nations during the present fiscal year. [Applause.] The farmers of the State which I have the honor in part to represent, under the most adverse seasonal conditions, produced from the soil and from the air crop products of the value of more than $220,000,000.

The passage of this legislation will enable the rural-credit system to continue its helpful and beneficial operations. It will immediately supply the funds necessary to make payment for the $70,000,000 of farm-loan applications that already have been approved, but not closed. It will give needed relief to many farmers from exorbitant interest rates and from constant fear and dread of mortgage foreclosures. It will permit these farmers to give their best thoughts and best energies to producing during the coming year a maximum amount of the foodstuffs so much needed and so essential to the great work of winning this war. Its passage will lift burdens from those farmers who are now carrying burdens heavier than they reasonably ought to bear. It will do simple justice to the farmers of this Nation who in truth are the bulwark of the Nation in this war as in all our former wars where victory has crowned our banners. It will give merited consideration to those who, for manifold reasons, are entitled to the Nation's first, highest, and most favorable consideration. [Applause.]

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The getleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to my colleague from California [Mr. OSBORNE].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Chairman, there are to my mind two or three controlling considerations that have been brought out in this debate and that have influenced my mind in this matter. One is that the policy has already been adopted in the farm-loan act as passed in 1916. Practically it is not before the House for consideration now. That being the case, the question arises as to the proposed new measure for providing this extra capital.

It has been forcibly stated here that the raising of money by the liberty loan for war purposes and then turning it into this channel is justly subject to criticism. I think that is true, and it is only justified upon the superior considerations which this proposed action involves.

The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN] made a statement which was very striking to my mind. That was that the Government is practically commandeering the credit of the country, and very properly so. That being the case, it places a handicap upon these bonds that is very difficult to overcome. The product of the farms is subjected by the Government to officially fixed prices, and it is no less than just that the Government should at least partially even matters up by facilitating farmers' credits, as is contemplated in the pending bill. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Chairman, I stated a while ago that there was but one more speech on this side. I overlooked the fact that I had promised the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL] two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration embraces no wild or revolutionary scheme. It is in perfect accord with the established view of Congress on the subject of rural credits. As was stated by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON], the study of the subject of rural credits developed two schools of thought in this country—one favoring a Government system based upon Government credit, dealing directly with the borrowers; the other advocating a cooperative system under Government supervision, with Government aid and credit limited to initial organization and establishment. This latter view found expression in the provisions of the Federal farm-loan act approved July 17, 1916, which provided for the organization of 12 regional land banks, with a capital stock of $750,000 each, subscribed by the Government. The bill made provision for the reimbursement to the Government of the sum of $9,000,000 original capital stock, as the same is taken over automatically by the borrower.

The measure under consideration to-day follows the same scheme. It nowhere contemplates that the Government shall take over the entire system nor lend its credit, nor make any land bank a loan of a single dollar permanently. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase in his discretion upon request of the Federal Farm Loan Board $100,000,000 of Federal land-bank bonds for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1918, and June 30, 1919, respectively, at par and accrued interest, such bonds so purchased to be held in the Treasury one year after the termination of the war to be repurchased by the Federal land banks at par and accrued interest on 30 days' notice from the Secretary of the Treasury.

It will be remembered that when the original bill was before the House some of us who believe in a larger measure of Government aid sought to amend the bill so as to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase with Government funds as much as $50,000,000 annually of the Federal land-bank bonds. The amendment was offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY], with an amendment to the amendment offered by myself. I thought then and I think now that it would have been better to have extended the additional Government aid carried in that amendment. I believe such action would have insured a continued sale of the bonds at as favorable figures as those at which they were placed by the Federal Farm Loan Board. In fact it can scarcely be doubted that under that plan the bonds could have been sold to better advantage than has been possible under the plan adopted. But the House in its wisdom rejected the amendment, and it must be admitted that subsequent events have demonstrated that they were correct in the opinion that the system could be operated successfully without such increased Government aid, had business conditions remained the same as they were at the time of the passage of that act.

Since the system was inaugurated loans have been made to the farmers by the Federal land banks to the amount of approximately $30,000,000 at an interest rate of 5 per cent per annum. Applications have been made for 92,446 loans, amounting to $219,760,740. Loans to the amount of $105,136,529 have been approved. This leaves nearly $200,000,000 of loans applied for which the Federal land banks have not the money to supply. The sale of enormous amounts of liberty bonds necessarily withdrew immense sums from the investment world. The result has been an increase in the interest rate on commercial paper and other securities. Even the interest rate on the Government bonds themselves has been increased since the sale of those bonds was begun. On account of the changed conditions brought about by the world war the Federal Farm Loan Board have increased the interest rate to be charged by the Federal land banks from 5 to 5½ per cent. Prior to November the bonds of the Federal land banks found ready market throughout the country, selling at 4½ per cent with premium of 1½, the demand of investors exceeding the supply. But for the changed conditions incident to the war no one doubts that such demand would continue to exist.

It is only natural for investors to seek the best bargain possible, and they are not unreasonable under existing conditions in hoping to get the bonds at a better price. But ought the Congress to sit by and allow this to be done? Some of us think not. I will not say that the system will be destroyed or be forced to terminate its operations if this bill is not passed; but it is manifest that its usefulness to the farmer will be seriously curtailed. It is probably true that the bonds of the Federal land banks can be sold at some price without this legislation; but the moment the Congress passes this bill the investing public will know that, if necessary, the Secretary of the Treasury is going to use Government funds to sustain the market for these bonds, and that will settle the whole matter. This will be the effect if we pass the House bill without the Senate amendment, but the moral effect sought—which is the chief object sought to be accomplished—will be lost if we accept the Senate amendment limiting and qualifying the assistance authorized. The Senate amendment would practically destroy the purpose of the bill, because that amendment provides that no loans shall be made in addition to those now approved until all bonds so purchased by the Secretary of the Treasury shall have been redeemed or repurchased, unless such loans shall be made for the sole purpose of increasing foodstuffs. So, if we wish to stabilize the market for these bonds and sustain their value during the existing emergency, let us pass the House bill without amendment and serve notice on the investing world of our purpose to stand by the system, and not go at the matter in a half-handed way.

If we do this, investors will abandon hope of driving a better bargain and normal investments will be revived. While I do not believe that without the passage of this bill the bonds could be depressed to the point of destroying the system, it must be borne in mind that under the existing law no loan can be made at a rate of interest in excess of 6 per cent, and that the rate to the borrower can not be more than 1 per cent above the amount at which the bonds of the Federal land banks sell. So it is better to take no risk of such serious and far-reaching results. Surely, this House would not be guilty of such folly.

For my part I agree with the veteran statesman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that the Government is morally responsible for these bonds and should guarantee their payment. I realize that this view has been rejected all along, and will be for the present. But some day I expect to see this great system simplified and utilized as a great instrumentality of the Government for the development of the agricultural interests of the Nation to a degree not possible under the existing law. For the present, especially in the great emergency confronting the Nation, creating, as it does, an unprecedented call for the increased production of the necessaries of life, surely no one who understands the situation would have the Government withhold the temporary aid indispensable to the continued usefulness of this system to the farmers of the land.

Let no one be alarmed by fear that the Government will be involved in loss through the operation of this measure. These bonds have every safeguard thrown around them than can be devised. The bonds of each of the land banks are secured by the entire 12 banks, all under strict Government supervision, having as chief security land, which really constitutes the greatest basis of credit of the Government itself. In Germany bonds of land banks in a system similar to ours sold last year above the bonds of the Imperial German Government.

For my part, I am not frightened because this bill embodies something unusual. We are doing unusual things here every day. The Government established and controls and operates a great commercial banking system, lending its credit by issuing currency based upon commercial assets. It has built and equipped railroads and canals. It is now taking over the vast railroad properties of the Nation. This is being done not alone because their operation is essential to the Nation's welfare in the present crisis, but for the additional reason that railroad values and securities should be stabilized and upheld.

The development of agriculture and an increased production of farm products at this time transcends in importance all other economic problems confronting the Nation. It is not true, as has been suggested here to-day, that the benefits of the Federal Farm Loan System are limited to those who actually borrow of the land banks. Before the establishment of this system the farmers of the country were paying between 8 and 9 per cent interest. In round figures, their annual interest debt was something like one-half a billion dollars. The average interest rate in all lines of business was not much more than one-half of the rate paid by them. Such a discrimination has depressed agriculture, decreased production, and tended to drive the young men of the country from the farm to the cities and industrial centers. The Federal farm-loan law has reduced interest rates not alone to the farmer, who borrows under the system at 5 per cent, but through its operation banks and loan companies have reduced their rates, resulting in a general stimulus throughout every agricultural section of the country. It is not demagogery but the part of wisdom and patriotism to continue this good work. In doing so we not only serve the best interest of the farmer but we promote the welfare of every citizen of the Nation, no matter where he lives nor what may be his pursuit, because the time has come when an increased production of the farm is indispensable to the well being of all citizens and classes.

The rural population of the United States decreased from 70.5 per cent in 1880 to 53.7 per cent in 1910. The tenant farms in 1880 constituted 25 per cent of the total; in 1910 they had increased to 37 per cent. These figures are sufficient to impress every thoughtful man with the wisdom of attempting by every means at our command to make farm life more pleasant and farming pursuits more profitable. They present a problem upon the solution of which rests the future peace and happiness of the Nation. This truth is emphasized to-day as at no other period of our history, when the Republic is engaged in a struggle to the death with the biggest and bloodiest military power the ages have known—a struggle the result of which depends upon our ability to furnish food for the armies of the Nation and their allies. It would be folly unthinkable, while sending billions across the sea to support the soldiers associated with ours in battle, to withhold the paltry assistance carried in the pending bill to make it possible for the farmers of the Nation to do their part in winning the war. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 15 minutes.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Chairman, I hardly think it necessary to continue this discussion. I think, perhaps, everything essential for an accurate understanding of the case has already been said.

Statements to the contrary notwithstanding, there is not one whit of politics in this measure. For myself I may avow that in the 16 years I have been in this House I have never taken a partisan or narrow political view of any economic question. I would lose my own self-respect if I should do it. If I could not feel that I have vision enough to contemplate public measures in their genuine governmental aspects I would want to quit the House.

There is no sectionalism in the proposition, as any Member may very soon convince himself by the most casual inspection of this table, prepared by the Farm Loan Board, of applications for loans and loans approved and granted and of loans now pending. There is nothing sectional about it.

I deny, Mr. Chairman, that the farm loan system has "broken down" in any true sense of the term—certainly not any more than the railroad systems of this country at this time have "broken down"; not any more than the food supply by individual initiative and enterprise has "broken down"; not any more than the fuel supply of the country in the hands of individuals and corporate interests has "broken down." The fact is that nearly every public utility has broken down in this war emergency, except the Government of the United States; and God grant that this Government may never break down—and certainly not now. [Applause.]

As far as the principle involved in this measure is concerned, it is already embodied in the farm loan act—not by any effort or even assent of mine, but it is there. In the subscription by the Government to the capital stock of the bank it is there, and in other respects it is there; and this is simply a utilization in larger form of the principle that the Congress has already put into the act itself. I do not agree with the principle, but I heartily advocate its efficient and temporary utilization at this extraordinary period.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield for a question for information?

Mr. GLASS. I have only a few minutes, but I yield for a brief question.

Mr. FESS. I want to know whether in this emergency, when the Government embarks in taking the bonds, it will ever get rid of that or whether we will not continue it after the war is over?

Mr. GLASS. I think we will not continue this aid. I think there will be no need to do it. These bonds will be gotten rid of by the Treasury in a specific time. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT], my colleague on the committee, who is always patriotic and always fair, and who discusses measures with intelligence and character, stated the case in a nutshell. Not in terms, but practically, he admitted what I have contended all along, that this is primarily a psychological proposition. He says there is no trouble about selling these bonds. The Farm Loan Board says there is trouble about selling the bonds.

Accepting the gentleman's statement that there is no trouble about selling, then the Government will not be called upon to spend a dollar for the purchase of these bonds. What we are proposing here is simply to create a situation in which the Farm Loan Board may be enabled to dispose of these bonds without being squeezed to a higher rate of interest, and that is the whole of it. I think myself that the bonds will be speedily sold when Congress enacts this legislation.

Now, just a word as to the Senate amendment. I am utterly opposed to it, because it cuts the very vitals out of the psychological aspect of the proposition. Not only am I opposed to it, but the farm loan commissioner, who is an expert in these matters, who has spent his life in the bonding business and knows what the bonding business is, distinctly states in a letter to me that in his judgment the amendment put on by the Senate limiting future loans to such as are for the increase of food products would not only discredit but hopelessly cripple the operation of the system, and I agree in that judgment. That is precisely what it would do.

And, moreover, it is absolutely impracticable. As has been stated here, 90 per cent of the loans made to farmers involve, either directly or indirectly, the refunding of existing loans. A farmer who wants to increase the productiveness of his farm, who wants to engage in larger operations—to be specific, a farmer who has a mortgage of a thousand dollars already on his farm and who needs a thousand dollars additional for productive purposes can not borrow the money from the Federal farm loan bank by making application merely for $1,000. He must make application for $2,000 in order to discharge the existing mortgage on his farm before he can get any credit at all; because the farm loan act, in terms, requires that the farm loan bank shall have a first mortgage on the farm; so that the existing mortgage has to be refunded. And that is what the Farm Loan Board means when it says that 90 per cent of these loans involve a refunding operation.

If we adhere to the Senate amendment, we practically make it impossible of operation and we utterly destroy the psychological aspect of this measure, which I think is important. I do not believe the Federal Treasury will have to expend one dollar for the purchase of these bonds if the Congress will enact this legislation. The Farm Loan Commissioner is an expert, experienced bond man, and he expresses the opinion that the investing public—and this is said in no reprehensible sense—is holding off under the very reasonable and natural expectation that the Farm Loan System, having no immediately available funds, will have to increase the rate of interest on the bonds or reduce their selling price. I believe that the moment it is known that this Government will not permit this system to be held up—will not permit this "squeezing" process—just as soon as that announcement goes out and the investing public knows that if it does not take these gilt-edged securities the Treasury will, then the last dollar of them will be taken.

As has been stated, there are commitals now to the extent of $70,000,000, which, as the gentleman from New York [Mr.

PLATT] has said, will be practically reduced to $50,000,000; and it would make an impression upon the farming communities that would be hurtful to all of our national interests to have this system suspend operations and refuse to meet the moral obligation to loan this $50,000,000.

I think I have said all that is needful to be said.

The CHAIRMAN. General debate is closed, and the Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Federal farm-loan act, approved July 17, 1916, is hereby amended by adding at the end of section 32 the following:

"The Secretary of the Treasury is further authorized, in his discretion, upon the request of the Federal Farm Loan Board, from time to time during the fiscal years ending June 30, 1918, and June 30, 1919, respectively, to purchase, at par and accrued interest, with any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, from any Federal land bank, farm-loan bonds issued by such bank.

"Such purchases shall not exceed the sum of $100,000,000 in either of such fiscal years. Any Federal land bank may at any time repurchase, at par and accrued interest, for the purpose of redemption or resale, any bonds so purchased from it and held in the Treasury.

"The bonds of any Federal land bank so purchased by the Secretary of the Treasury, and held in the Treasury under the provisions of this amendment one year after the expiration of the pending war, shall upon 30 days' notice from the Secretary of the Treasury, be redeemed or repurchased by such bank at par and accrued interest.

"The temporary organization of any Federal land bank as provided in section 4 of said Federal farm-loan act shall be continued so long as any farm-loan bonds purchased from it under the provisions of this amendment shall be held by the Treasury, and until the subscriptions to stock in such bank by national farm-loan associations shall equal the amount of stock held in such bank by the Government of the United States."

SEC. 2. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed, and this act shall take effect upon its passage. The right to amend, alter, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That the Federal farm-loan act, approved July 17, 1916, is hereby amended by adding at the end of section 32 the following:

"'The Secretary of the Treasury is further authorized, in his discretion, upon the request of the Federal Farm Loan Board, from time to time during the fiscal years ending June 30, 1918, and June 30, 1919, respectively, to purchase at par and accrued interest, with any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, from any Federal land bank, farm-loan bonds issued by such bank.

"'Such purchases shall not exceed the sum of $100,000,000 in either of such fiscal years. Any Federal land bank may at any time repurchase at par and accrued interest for the purpose of redemption or resale any bonds so purchased from it and held in the Treasury.

"'The bonds of any Federal land bank so purchased by the Secretary of the Treasury, and held in the Treasury under the provisions of this amendment one year after the termination of the pending war, shall upon 30 days' notice from the Secretary of the Treasury be redeemed or repurchased by such bank at par and accrued interest.

"'The temporary organization of any Federal land bank as provided in section 4 of said Federal farm-loan act shall be continued so long as any farm-loan bonds purchased from it under the provisions of this amendment shall be held by the Treasury, and until the subscriptions to stock in such bank by national farm-loan associations shall equal the amount of stock held in such bank by the Government of the United States.'

"SEC. 2. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed, and this act shall take effect upon its passage. The right to amend, alter, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, at the proper time I would like to offer an amendment to the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. GLASS. I want to inquire whether we can agree on some time for the discussion of this amendment and all amendments thereto.

Mr. HAYES. Is not that a little premature? It may be that this will not require much discussion. I doubt if there will be much discussion on it. I would suggest to my colleague that we run along for a little while.

Mr. GLASS. Under the rule we are not entitled to but 10 minutes.

Mr. LENROOT. On each amendment?

Mr. GLASS. On each amendment. I merely wanted to facilitate the proceedings; I do not want to cut off any reasonable debate.

Mr. HAYES. I suggest that we go on for a little bit and see how it will develop.

Mr. GLASS. Very well; then I yield the floor to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I presume the committee recognizes the fact that this amendment really goes to the real question we have to settle in the consideration of this bill. There are only two matters in dispute: First, are those who are opposed to the legislation, and then those who may be in favor of the legislation and yet prefer the Weeks amendment.

From my viewpoint, if we fail to adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] we might as well kill the bill. Even if you were in favor of the limitation which the gentleman in discussing the Weeks amendment says it places on the law, you can not afford to accept the language of the Weeks proposal, because the Weeks amendment, if adopted, will mean that within 60 days the land banks will be closed for all practical purposes.

The Weeks amendment says that no loan shall be made until all bonds purchased by the Secretary of the Treasury have been redeemed or repurchased.

Mr. MADDEN. Nobody has seen or knows what the Weeks amendment is.

Mr. WINGO. It has been read.

Mr. MADDEN. The Members of the House would like to know what it is.

Mr. WINGO. I can not yield. I tried to get one gentleman to yield after I had denied myself time as a member of the committee and gave that side 30 minutes more than we had, and he refused.

Mr. LENROOT. But if the gentleman states an inaccuracy, the gentleman ought to yield.

Mr. WINGO. I prefer to argue my proposition in my own way.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman should yield to an interruption if he states that which is not so.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman is discourteous and unparliamentary, but he may take advantage of the protection of the House——

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I do not yield, with all courtesy to the gentleman from Illinois. I insist that I have the right to discuss the matter in my own way. If the gentleman from Illinois will only listen, I intend to take up the Weeks proposition and discuss it fully.

Mr. MADDEN. But nobody here knows what it is.

Mr. WINGO. My altercation was not with the gentleman from Illinois, but with the gentleman from Wisconsin, who butted in.

The only Weeks amendment I have found is in the RECORD on page 501. I will ask the Clerk to give me the original Senate bill. I want the attention of the House and of those gentlemen who feel that the Weeks amendment is the proper safeguard. I want to show you that you go further than any of you think. I have no criticism to make of the author of the amendment, for he does not believe in the system. He does not believe that we ought to grant any relief, but the Senate disagreed with him and he got the best that he could out of the wreck.

Now, the Weeks amendment reads as follows:

Until all bonds so purchased by the Secretary of the Treasury have been so redeemed or repurchased no loans in addition to those now approved shall be made by the Federal land bank—

I have no need to read further. In other words, 11 of the banks may have redeemed all of the bonds which the Secretary of the Treasury has bought from them, and yet if 1 bank has $100,000 worth of bonds left unredeemed in the Treasury it would mean that the other 11 banks are held up by that 1 bank. That goes further than I believe any man who really believes in the alleged "safeguarding" proposition supposed to be covered by the Weeks amendment.

Let us see what else you do. There is no question but that the whole effect of the bill is purely psychological, for the purpose of stabilizing the market for farm-loan bonds. I think everyone will agree to that. Any fair man will agree that the bond-loan market, like the railroad-security market, has broken down.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Arkansas may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. LENROOT. I object.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I think the mere presence of this bill here to-day comes more nearly proving the inefficiency or inexperience of the Farm Loan Board than anything else could. If they had ability and experience, they would have sold the bonds issued and they would not be here. That is the truth of it. It is said that the policy of the Farm Loan Board was to sell the bonds to small purchasers in five and six thousand dollar lots. They refused to sell these bonds to the men who had money and could buy. They prefer to come to the Congress of the United States and dip their hands into the Treasury and compel the Government to tax the people to furnish the money to buy the bonds, instead of going into the market and selling them.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. GLASS. Does the gentleman think that is a fair statement?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. GLASS. To the gentlemen who are in the service of the Government to say that they prefer to do that?

Mr. MADDEN. Well, they did it.

Mr. GLASS. And that they anticipated doing that?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not know what they anticipated, but that is the effect of it.

Mr. GLASS. Does the gentleman on consideration think that is a fair statement?

Mr. MADDEN. I do.

Mr. GLASS. I am astonished.

Mr. MADDEN. They could have sold these bonds. They would not have had to come here. They refused to sell the bonds except under contract with some men in New York or some other place, and under that contract they restricted the right of the sale of the bonds to a 4½ per cent basis. They could have gone into the open market and sold the bonds at 4½ per cent without a contract, but they did not want men with money to have the bonds they said. That is what is said on the floor by those who speak for them. We have to reach the conclusion that these men are not efficient; that they are not practical; that they do not understand their business; and that they are working along the lines of least resistance, that they can find money more easily by coming to Congress and getting it out of the Treasury of the United States, by taking the money that we wring from the blood of those who are compelled to save, which we obtain as the result of selling liberty bonds.

These bonds ought to sell and can be sold, and if the men in charge of the Farm Loan Board are not qualified and have not the experience they ought to be supplanted by men who have the qualifications and experience and understand the thing that ought to be done. Why should the Government loan money to men who want to place mortgages upon their property? Why, it was only a year or so ago that we had before us a bill for the deposit of hundreds of millions of dollars in certain banks in the cotton section of the country with the requirement that those banks should loan the money to cotton raisers at a certain fixed price per pound of cotton. The bill was not passed. This is the equivalent of that except in another form. It is wise that the bill which we had before us before did not pass; the Congress refused to consider it seriously and it was laughed out of court, and there was just as much merit in that as there is in the bill now before us. Tell these men who have been charged with public responsibility and who have been given the amount of $9,000,000 already out of the Treasury of the United States to exercise their genius, if they have any, and furnish a market for the bonds. Ah, they will be putting mortgages on land that the Government will have to take over after a while. A vast amount of loans that are being made by this Farm Loan Board is being made in sections of the Nation where the lands upon which the mortgages are placed are absolutely valueless. You do not find money loaned in sections of the country where the land is worth something, because they can borrow the money more cheaply from private sources than from the Farm Loan Board. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois that he promised to recognize the gentleman from Mississippi and then he will recognize the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I am willing to allow the gentleman from Illinois to proceed and I will follow him.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman desire to offer an amendment? Does he have an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. No, sir; I have not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CANNON offers the following amendment to the amendment: Strike out all of section 1 of the amendment, beginning with line 6, page 1, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "the payment of all bonds provided, principal and interest, heretofore or hereafter issued by any Federal land bank, is hereby guaranteed by the Government of the United States."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, it is admitted by all the friends of this bill that under this law on the statute books the Government of the United States is morally bound with a guaranty. Does anybody object to that statement? Silence gives assent. Now, then, there has been some doubt by some people, putting an anchor to the windward, as to whether the Government is bound. Now, in my judgment, it is morally bound, strengthened by the circular that was issued by by the Federal Farm Loan Board, with the opinion of Justice Hughes, with which gentlemen are familiar, that the Government is committed to a guaranty of the bonds. Now, you can, in my judgment, settle the whole matter. Under the law as it is now bonds can, I think, be issued in the discretion of the Federal Farm Loan Board. At what? Five or six per cent?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Must not exceed 6 per cent.

Mr. CANNON. Must not exceed 6 per cent. Now, I have not any doubt, nor has any gentleman of this House, in my judgment, any doubt that a bond at 4½ per cent net to the man who buys the bond, and certainly 5 per cent in any event, exempt from taxation, both State and National, both inheritance and surtax, will command the money without any doubt. Ah, says some gentleman, it is patriotic for the Secretary of the Treasury or the Farm Loan Board to hold up and not put the bonds on the market while the liberty loan was being pressed. It may happen that that may come again. I do not believe it will, because with a 4½ per cent liberty bond I believe that would go. This is better than a 5 per cent liberty bond, because it is absolutely free from inheritance tax and surtax. Now, why fuss about getting the money in the Treasury and buying the farm loan bonds under the provisions of the House or Senate bill? Why, may be I am foolish in my old age, but I have no doubt that the amendment amended as I have proposed——

Mr. SNOOK. Vote it down.

Mr. CANNON. Well, my friend says vote it down. Why——

Mr. SNOOK. Well, vote it up.

Mr. CANNON. That is right. I think it settles the whole question, and as long as this act stands upon the statute book and these banks exist there can be no question about the money forthcoming to meet the bonds that shall be issued. It can not hurt the farmer; it can not hurt the Government because the Government guarantees, gives credit. It gives credit to these bonds, and no man, no Socialist, no repudiationist, no Populist, no highflyer, no fool, can dispute the value of these bonds.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, the bill now under consideration proposes an amendment to the farm-loan act. If this bill is enacted into law, the Secretary of the Treasury will be authorized to purchase bonds from the Federal land banks.

Bills identical in language were introduced both in the Senate and in the House. The committee of each body reported the bill without amendment. The bill has passed the Senate with what is known as the Weeks amendment.

As stated by the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, Mr. GLASS, he will move to strike out all after the enacting clause, the Senate bill as amended being now before us, and substitute the original bill.

It is my purpose to support the motion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GLASS].

As was said by Senator GRONNA, the Weeks amendment practically nullifies the whole bill so far as giving any benefit to the farmer is concerned.

The purpose of the farm-loan act is to help build up the agricultural industries of the Nation. What was in mind in the introduction of the original bill was to further the general purpose by authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to buy the land-bank bonds in order to give an additional sum to be loaned to the farmers.

The Weeks amendment would prevent any farmer who has a mortgage on his land from borrowing any money from the farm-loan banks. The farmer who is not in debt could borrow from such banks.

It is a discrimination that is unfair, unjust, and unwise. It puts the premium upon good fortune and adds an additional handicap and burden to the man who has not been so well blessed.

For example, there are two neighbors, each owning 80 acres of land. One has a mortgage on his land; the other has not. Under the Weeks amendment the one with the mortgage can not borrow; the other can borrow.

Which is in greater need of help? Of course it is the one in debt. Yet under that amendment he will be denied any relief.

Interest rates are high. The purpose of the farm-loan act is to cut down the interest rate as well as to give a long time in which to pay the principal. The man already in debt would be forced to continue to pay a high rate of interest and take his chances of having his mortgage foreclosed, while the man out of debt could borrow at a low rate of interest and be assured that he would have many years in which to pay his debt.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] said that we ought not to refund any loans if it is necessary to take money out of the Treasury to do it, because that money, he said, was taken from the people to be used for the benefit of our soldiers, who are now, or soon will be, in the trenches of Europe.

The gentleman certainly does not grasp the situation. We will not take anything from those boys. We will be aiding them. If not, the whole purpose and effect of the farm-loan act is wrong.

It was passed not to help only a few individuals here and yonder but in the interest of the agricultural classes generally; not simply to help those now out of debt but those in debt.

Why not use this money to refund debts as well as to lend it to those who are free from debt? What we are interested in, what we need, what we must have, is an increased production of foodstuffs. If the debtor is allowed to pay a smaller rate of interest as well as to be allowed to pay only a small portion of the principal, instead of the whole of it, then he will be enabled to expand his activities and to lay out his money in such a manner as to materially increase his production. If every dollar that he gets his hands on must be used to pay high interest and a mortgage debt, with what can he buy fertilizer, improved machinery, or live stock?

The farmers of the Nation have been urged to increase production of farm products. They have responded nobly. The large increase of food production shows this, and I earnestly contend, Mr. Chairman, that we can not afford to do anything to lessen or handicap their efforts, or rather their opportunities, to serve the Nation in a larger way in this hour of great necessity.

Of course food alone will not win this war, nor will men and guns and shot and shell alone win it. All these elements are absolutely essential, and none of them are of greater importance to the United States than food, because the burden of supplying food to the allies has fallen largely upon us. The greatest need of the allies to-day is food.

I shall insert an article from the Banker-Farmer that states in a forceful way the great importance of the farmer in this war, as follows:

FARMERS' WAR RESPONSIBILITY.

The war has given to the American farmer the greatest responsibility, the greatest privilege and the greatest task any man or any class of men have ever known. In large degree he will determine the trend of human history for all time to come, because the enormous ultimate consequences of this conflict rest primarily upon the farmers' production of food and feed to sustain the fighting forces. They might fail even with an adequate food supply; without it they are certain to fail.

But in his field, far from the fury of battle, far from either the adventures or the horrors of the firing line, the American farmer will say whether autocracy or democracy shall rule the world during the seasons that are to come.

In a sense the war will be won or lost in the fields, gardens, orchards, pastures, and hog lots of the American farmer.

The hope of the American citizen, not a farmer, also hinges upon adequate agricultural production. Our aeroplanes are useless, our guns are spiked, and our rifles jammed, our shells are but as harmless baubles, if the farmer fails. This must be understood in all its grim force by every man, woman, and child in America; by farmers and by those who are not farmers.

With food we can win the war.

Lack of food will lose the war.

Whether or not we produce the food depends upon whether or not each and every individual farmer does his level best on his farm—produces its maximum.

Many people have thought of the war as "far away," as a remote, impersonal thing, a sort of dreadful nightmare—but not as a specter menacing our immediate persons or property. Our appreciation of the actuality is more poignant now, with our own flesh and blood upon the firing line. That firing line is in France to-day. It will come to America if the farmer fails.

No matter what course military strategy may take, the final battle field of the war is already fixed. The Waterloo of the Prussian autocrat and all he stands for, or the Waterloo of American liberty—the end of autocracy or the end of democracy—the end of Prussianism or the end of freedom—will be wrought on the battle field of the American farm—every American farm.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Chairman, I am told that practically the only amendments to be proposed to the amendment offered by me, aside from the amendment just offered by the gentleman from Illinois, are amendments to take the bill back to the Senate form. And if that be so, I would like to have those amendments sent up to the desk right away, with a view of moving to close debate on my amendment and all amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that all amendments to be offered be now reported. Is there objection?

Mr. McFADDEN. Reserving the right to object, in answer to the query of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] I might say I have some amendments here that I will send to the desk covering the points he mentions, and in addition to them one other amendment.

Mr. GLASS. I ask that the gentleman send all his amendments to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia if it is his intention to foreclose debate on amendments that may be offered, so that Members of the House will not know what is in the amendments?

Mr. GLASS. As I have stated, my information is that the only amendment to be offered, aside from the one offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], involves taking the bill back to the Senate form. And I distinctly inquired if there were other amendments of a different nature. If not, I think we have very largely debated the proposition as to whether the Senate amendment shall prevail or not, and I have it in mind to move to close debate.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not think the gentleman ought to do that without giving some of us who have not spoken an opportunity to speak.

Mr. GLASS. I do not mean to do that. I want to develop how many people want to speak.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. LENROOT. Reserving the right to object, I think it would be better procedure if we voted upon each amendment. The gentleman could move to close debate on each amendment, and the House could vote intelligently on each amendment before it.

Mr. CANNON. I would be glad to have a vote on the amendment to the amendment, and when that is disposed of other amendments can be offered.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman can move to close debate——

Mr. GLASS. I am perfectly willing to vote on the gentleman's amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. CANNON. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided: and there were—ayes 63, noes 71.

Mr. CANNON. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. CANNON and Mr. GLASS to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 56, noes 82.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, the bill before us (H. R. 7731) has for its purpose the amending of the Federal farm-loan act approved July 17, 1916. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase at par and accrued interest not to exceed $100,000,000 of Federal farm-loan bonds for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1918, and June 30, 1919. Provision is made for the redemption or repurchase by the Federal land banks of the bonds upon 30 days' notice at any time after one year after the expiration of the present war.

The rural-credits system was authorized by the act of July 17, 1916. Twelve land banks were to be established. About six months elapsed before the members of the Farm Loan Board were selected, the banks established, and their officers and employees appointed, so that the several farm land banks have now been in operation less than a year. Up to December 1, 1917, 1,839 local cooperative associations have been chartered, the charters of 2,019 associations have been approved, and applications for 1,171 charters are pending, so that there have been formed and in process of formation 3,190 local loan associations.

These associations have applied for 92,446 loans, aggregating $219,760,740. Of these loans, 44,332 have been approved, aggregating $105,136,529. The total number of loans closed is 14,000, and $29,824,655 have been paid to borrowers.

In my State of Oklahoma 86 local loan associations have been chartered and 17 additional associations are under consideration, with 15 more in process of formation, or a total of 118 associations when all are organized. There have been 2,804 loans applied for in Oklahoma, aggregating $6,075,157. Of these loans, 913 have actually been closed, aggregating $1,740,200. Loans aggregating $4,327,957 are pending approval and disbursement.

This summary justifies the enactment of the rural-credits law. It was designed to stimulate agriculture. Everyone living in the country should have an ambition to ultimately own and cultivate a farm. The rural-credits system enables farmers to borrow money on long-time loans at a low rate of interest upon first-mortgage securities. There is greater need now to stimulate agriculture, because of the war, than when the act was passed. We need to greatly increase our food supply, not only for ourselves but for our allies. Everybody appreciates that we are going to win this war not only with men but with munitions, clothing, food, and the financial aid our country can give.

If we had not been forced into this world-wide war, there would have been no necessity for this legislation, because these farm-land bonds would have found a ready market everywhere. The 4½ per cent bond was being sold at 101⅛, or a premium of 1⅛ cents on the dollar. The offering of so many war bonds has attracted immense sums of money. Interest rates on commercial paper have increased, so that there is not now the same ready sale for farm-land bonds that there was before the war broke out. The necessity for stimulating agriculture increases as the war proceeds.

The loans applied for aggregate $219,760,740, and the sum of $29,824,655 has actually been loaned. This leaves $189,936,085 in loans applied for and approved but for which the farm-land banks do not have the money to give the borrowers. Such farm-land bonds as have been sold were 4½ per cent bonds. They were sold at 101⅛. A small part of the 1⅛ premium was allowed for the sale of the bonds. The remainder of the premium, plus one-half of 1 per cent, was allowed for expenses in administering the system. This enabled the various banks to lend money to farmers at 5 per cent interest, to which, of course, the amortization charge was added. The amortization charge depends entirely upon the length of time the loan is to run. If it runs for a period of 36 years, 1 per cent, payable semiannually, will pay the principal. The farmers of the country under the administration of the rural-credits law during the past year were enabled to borrow money for a period of 36 years by paying 5 per cent interest, plus 1 per cent amortization, which paid both principal and interest. This has greatly stimulated farming, particularly throughout the South, and the farmers of the Southern States have been quick to take advantage of it.

Farmers should remember that they can borrow money not only for the purpose of buying land but to pay off existing indebtedness, to make permanent improvements upon their land, and to buy machinery, equipment, and fertilizer.

I was very much interested in the bill when it was being considered by the Banking and Currency Committee, of which I was a member, and when it passed the House, and I favor the enactment of the present amendment. As soon as this war is over farm-land bonds will find a ready sale and the farm-land banks will be able to repurchase them. In my judgment, it will not then be necessary to longer extend Government aid.

However, one criticism has been made against the system, and that is the delay in making the loans. I have invited the attention of the Farm Loan Board and the farm-land bank at Wichita to it. This bank has jurisdiction over my State. In an effort to expedite consideration of loans and to overcome this objection, when the original bill was up for consideration in the House more than a year ago, I pointed out that it was the only objection which I feared. The Federal Farm Loan Board answered my inquiry with reference to delays by calling attention to the fact that many men who are forming the local associations are not men with business experience; that their papers are not correctly filled out when first received, necessitating their return in a great many cases; that after they are received in proper form delay is caused by reason of a large number of applications being received at the same time; that it is necessary to make the preliminary investigation required by the rural-credits law before recommending that the charter be granted; and that while some of the fault is due to delays, much of it is due to the inauguration of a new system, with which no one, not even the men in charge, is familiar.

I called on the farm-land bank at Wichita, Kans., and also the Federal Farm Loan Board in Washington, for specific data as to the charters issued for local associations in my district in an effort to definitely fix the cause of these delays. I found that but five charters had been issued for local associations in my district. The original papers for the one at Tahlequah are dated March 17, 1917, but all the signatures were not secured and the papers were not sworn to until May 12, 1917. The farm-loan bank at Wichita made an investigation and forwarded the papers to the Federal Farm Loan Board on June 20, 1917. This was a month and eight days after the application for a charter was perfected and sworn to. The charter was issued on June 23, 1917, so that the application for this charter was with the Federal Farm Loan Board only three days.

However, I am advised that many of these prospective borrowers did not receive their money until three or four months thereafter. What is true of the association at Tahlequah is also true of the one in Adair County and true of the associations at Fort Gibson, Wagoner, and Enterprise. Upon investigation I find that none of the applications for charters remained with the Federal Farm Loan Board more than five days. I have called for definite information several times as to when members of these local associations actually received their money upon the loans applied for, but have not as yet received the same. I feel sure that after one or more local associations have been chartered in each county and farmers become used to the system and get their details in good shape with abstracts brought down to date such long delays will not be experienced as when the system is new. I think much can be done by the farm-land banks in expediting consideration of applications for loans. If the system is going to be a success, this will have to be done. No prospective borrower can wait from six to eight months to secure favorable action upon his application for a loan to be used as a partial payment on land or for any other purpose. He will be forced to borrow money at a much higher rate of interest from individuals, banks, or loan companies. Where the abstract can be examined at once and the land viewed and appraised, the transaction should be closed within a few days.

I believe that a further testing of the system will prove its great value to the farmers of the country and to the Nation, but I indulge the prediction that amendments will be necessary to the act, which will have for their purpose expediting the making of loans. For my part I do not think local associations are necessary. I so stated when the bill was up before the Banking and Currency Committee and when it came up for consideration in the House. I see no reason why local agents could not in safety be appointed, using a county or a district as a unit, through whom individuals could submit applications to the farm-land bank and at the same time submit an abstract brought down to date and comply with such other rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Federal Farm Loan Board or the farm-land bank. This agent could either view and appraise the land, or the present system of appraising could be followed. Assuming that there is money on hand with which the farm-land bank could make the loan, there is no reason why the whole transaction could not be completed and the money sent to the borrower within a week after his original application is made if the local representative were permitted to appraise the land. The agent could see that the application is made in the proper form upon blanks prepared by the farm-land bank, and that the abstract is brought down to date, and could soon become an expert in passing upon the less complicated abstracts.

The rural-credits law has greatly lowered interest rates throughout the South and West, and has been the cause of much more favorable terms being extended those who borrow money. If we had not become involved in this war, interest rates would have been much lower, and prospective borrowers could have secured much more favorable terms from those anxious to invest in the very best and safest securities—farm mortgages.

Pass this amendment and provide the money to make the loans to farmers, and you will enable the tenant farmers to purchase homes, increase the number of farmers, cause all surplus lands to be placed under cultivation, increase very greatly the production of all kinds of farm products, and increase the general prosperity of the country. While the present bill only extends temporary Government relief during the period of the war, if bonds to the amount of $2,000,000 are bought by the Government within the next two years and the money is loaned to members of local loan associations, making it possible to organize additional associations in every county throughout the country, you may rest assured the system will be so strengthened that the representatives of the people in Congress will in the future continue the system, enlarge and amend it, and no backward step will be taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana makes the same request—to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KINKAID. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska makes the same request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I rose for the purpose of objecting. I was on my feet. The Chair went so hurriedly that I could not secure recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not see the gentleman rise in time, and thinks the objection comes too late.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, if there ever was a time when this House ought to exercise a little sober thought, it is right now. Since the foundation of this Government, if I understand, the total amount collected and the amount of money expended by the Government has been around $28,000,000,000. We are now asked to raise about $20,000,000,000 this fiscal year—probably as much the next year—and the Committee on Ways and Means has been struggling with that proposition. If the time can possibly arise when no money ought to be loaned to anybody by this Government, except under the most dire necessity, that time has been reached right now.

I am inclined to think that, so far as the loans already made by the land bank are concerned, it is a case of dire necessity. I think that we can not afford to let these banks fail, and that is probably what would happen if we refused this money, and a large number of other calamities would ensue. I am therefore in favor of the Senate bill, but I am not in favor of anything further.

Why, gentlemen, take this matter into fair consideration. Gentlemen of the House, myself and others have been out during the vacation that ensued since the recess on December 18, calling upon men who had only $900 or $1,000 a year, or up to $1,500—sums that many gentlemen are saying now are not sufficient on which to support a family—asking them to subscribe to liberty loan bonds, and now we are proposing to take that money and loan it to somebody else who is in a better situation, so far as I know, than the men from whom it is proposed to derive this great sum of money. We ought to have consistency in our financial system. We are putting out bonds at 3½ per cent and 4 per cent, Government bonds, and we are asking the people to subscribe for them, saying that is the Government rate; and now we are proposing to loan out this money to some other parties in order that they may reduce some interest rates.

Such a proposition was never before presented to any Government or to any House, in my judgment. When this farm-loan bill was first presented to the House we were told that $9,000,000 would be enough to start it; that $100,000 would be enough to pay the expenses of organization; and that the money would not be loaned except to people who needed it in agriculture, upon first-class security.

Now we find that instead of taking a small amount it is going to take at least $100,000,000 this year and $100,000,000 next year under the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Virginia. Now we find that the organization expenses are not satisfied with $230,000, as some gentleman has stated, but that the expenses of loaning are, up to date, something like 2½ per cent on the amount loaned. How many votes would this proposition have got in the House if at the time the bill was originally pending in this House we had been told that when the Government was struggling to save itself from absolute destruction we would be called upon to furnish $200,000,000 more? Gentlemen say that we are loaning money to the allies—France and England. So we are, but I did not vote for that on the ground that it would lower the rate to France and England. I did it because I wanted to save the people of this country from having the Kaiser's foot on our necks. That is what I had in mind when I voted for that. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, every man who talks against this bill has some excuse to offer for his action. Here is the gentleman from Iowa, who stated that he voted to loan $500,000,000 to England, France, and Italy and for $200,000,000 to Russia. Yes; that is all right. I voted for it, too; but he is against this bill providing that the United States Treasury shall take up mortgages and lend $100,000,000 a year for the great farming industry of this country, that produces $22,000,000,000 worth of food and material for clothing to feed and clothe the people of this country and our allies in the war. [Applause.] Gentlemen are willing to loan hundreds of millions of dollars to our allies across the water, and all of us are in favor of that, but some of you object to the loan of $100,000,000 this year and $100,000,000 next year to the farmers of this Nation to make crops to feed and clothe the 104,000,000 people here and our allies in Europe and the million and a half of soldiers that we propose to have over there. So the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] strenuously objects to this bill after the farmers of his State have already received $5,000,000 from the Government under this proposition. So the gentleman from Philadelphia [Mr. MOORE], who always gets up here and takes a big hammer and hits the farmer over the head [laughter], proposes to rise up on this occasion and keep the farmer from having this money. They say that the United States Government is going out to ask for a $3,000,000,000 liberty loan, and that for that reason, forsooth, the farmers of this country should not have a loan to pay off the heavy debts and the mortgages that now hang over their heads in order that they may operate their farms successfully and produce the necessary food and clothing to keep up the world and carry on this war. [Applause.]

Gentlemen talk in favor of the Weeks amendment on this bill, but if they will analyze it they are bound to know that it cuts the guts out of the bill and that it will be worthless to the farmer who already has a mortgage or deed of trust on his land. [Applause.] Where is there a man on the floor of this House whose heart honestly beats for the farmer who will favor the Weeks amendment as passed by the Senate? Do you suppose that the men in this Congress who represent the great cities, with their enormous wealth and great financial interests—lenders of money, who come and offer amendments to this farm loan proposition—are going to come in here and offer amendments for the benefit of the farmer? Do you not know they are endeavoring to keep the rate of interest high? Always beware of such gifts as that. Look out for an amendment coming from some gentleman from a city, who has nothing in common with the man behind the plow. [Applause.]

This Glass substitute bill is the thing that will do the work. Farmers can borrow money at low rates of interest under this bill. You can not fool the man whose heart is for the farmer. We know the Weeks amendment is a wolf in sheep's clothes. [Applause.] Why, all of us men, who a few minutes ago voted for Uncle JOE CANNON'S amendment, which provided that the Government should guarantee these bonds, these men are for the farmers of this country heart and soul. I am happy to say I am one of them. [Applause.] I voted for that proposition when we had it in the original farm-loan bill. I voted for it in the caucus. The gentleman [Mr. GREEN of Iowa] who preceded me said, "Who would ever dream that anybody in this Congress would vote for a proposition for the United States Treasury to buy these mortgages from the farmers?"

Why, my friends, I voted for that in the Democratic caucus in 1913, and a great many more friends of the farmers voted for it. We were not in a majority in that caucus, but here to-day I am proud to see a great drove of Republicans who are friends of the farmer come over to this proposition and are advocating it on the floor of the House. [Applause.]

One gentleman, endeavoring to kill our bill, said it is populism. Well, we have needed a little populism in this country for a long time. [Laughter.] Some talk about taking over the railroads. Nobody can object to the Government coming along and taking the railroads when they are so congested. All of you ought to favor it. I am no Socialist, but I am proud to-day to see you gentleman recognize the fact that the Government of the United States is already in charge of the railroads of this country, and I hope it will be in charge of them from now until the very end of the existence of man. The farmers of this country have been robbed too long by the transportation companies. When private enterprise can not handle things in an emergency to properly protect the people the Government should take charge and protect the masses of this Republic. People should not be forced to shiver and freeze for the lack of coal—and suffer and starve for the lack of food. [Applause.]

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 9, page 1, after the words "nineteen hundred and eighteen," strike out the rest of that line and line 10 down to and including the word "respectively."

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, also the following amendment, which I send to the desk, to complete that.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 4, page 2, after the figures "$100,000,000," strike out the words "in either of such fiscal years."

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, that simply provides that the appropriation is for the current year, for $100,000,000, to conform to the Weeks amendment, which will be offered a little later. I do not care to discuss those amendments at this time.

Mr. SUMNERS. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the Weeks amendment. In order that the maximum of benefit may be had from the Federal farm-loan bank, it is necessary not only to provide a low rate of interest for the loans effected through the bank but it is necessary that the bank shall at all times be in unrestricted competition with private capital seeking investment in farm loans. During the course of this debate a number of gentlemen have based their opposition to the House bill upon the proposition that it would be unjust to the patriotic citizens of this country, and especially to the poor people, who placed their money in the Federal Treasury by the purchase of liberty loan bonds, for any part of that money to be used, as it may be used if this bill is passed without the Weeks amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to direct the attention of these gentlemen to the fact that in this country we have passed the point where it is wise to consider that the farmer alone is interested in the economic problem of the farm. The whole country is face to face with the imperative necessity of helping agriculture to raise its bid for population, in order that that proportion of population which is necessary to feed and clothe us may be held in the country. There is no longer a surplus of agricultural products. Even though agricultural products are still sold to the highest bidder the margin between production and the imperative necessity is so narrow that the consumers are compelled to include in the price given for that which they eat all overhead charges incident to production. Nobody is more interested than the poor man of the city in having a cheap interest rate for the farmers of this country, because the poor man of the city must pay in the price of every loaf of bread which he purchases a part of the interest charge which the farmer must pay who produces that bread.

The country boy of to-day has been liberated by education from the necessity of following the vocation of his father. He must have as much net profit from agriculture as any other business offer or he will accept the better bid of the other business. Net profit, gentlemen; that is what we must pay. The movement of population in this country shows conclusively that the cities have been offering the better bid, and the almost total exhaustion of the world's reserve food supply shows conclusively that associated with the high cost of living is the peril of widespread hunger.

We have reached the point in the evolution of this problem, Mr. Chairman, when those who are the spokesmen for the farming interests must not shake the confidence of others in their sincerity by engaging in demagogy, and those who represent the great cities of this country must recognize that as they imperil the strength and attractiveness of agriculture they imperil the food and raiment supply of their constituents. I say that the farmer is no better than anyone else. I would not ask anything for him which is contrary to the soundest public policy. I speak the truth when I say that those of you who live in the cities are more concerned in this great drift of population from the country to the city than are those who represent country constituents. You are more concerned in interest rates than all the farmers because you must pay the charge.

We have reached the point, Mr. Chairman, when the margin between imperative necessity and current production is so narrow that if we were to slip a cog in the machinery of production the question would not be the high cost of living; but where on the face of this wide earth can we get those elements necessary to sustain life? When that time comes, when there is not enough to go around, the constituents of those who represent country districts can hold back enough for themselves, but I ask you gentlemen who represent great cities with their millions of population, a population which neither produces nor possesses a reserve surplus, what will be their situation then? What will you do when these hunger-crazed millions march down your streets behind red banners? Let us face the situation fairly. If the Weeks amendment is adopted, by its adoption you provide that those mortgage concerns which now hold farm mortgages shall not be under the necessity of competing for their renewal with the rates of interest carried by the loans made through the Federal Farm Loan Bank. If you do that, you people who live in the cities will pay the 8 and 10 per cent interest which some of those loans carry. You can not escape it—it is a fundamental economic fact, under existing conditions, that the farmer must have as much net profit as any other business will pay, or he will go to that business which offers him a higher net profit.

That is what has been happening in this country. We have reached the danger point—we have gone beyond the danger point. Our condition is one which appeals to the best constructive genius of this country and to its most disinterested statesmanship. The problems of the farmers are the problems of the country at large.

Mr. JACOWAY. Mr. Chairman, I think the record will disclose that the tenant class in this country has doubled in the last 11 or 12 years; and I would like to ask the gentleman if he has given any thought to that, and if so, what reason he can assign for it?

Mr. SUMNERS. Pardon me for not answering that, because I have not time. However, some gentlemen seem to be laughing, because, I presume, they have concluded that the question embarrasses me and I shall therefore answer it, not in detail, of course. Fundamentally, I should say that the reason why this has occurred is because neither the officials of the Federal Government nor of the several States have recognized that in dealing with the question of home ownership they are not dealing with a matter, from the Government's standpoint, at least, of primary concern to the individual, but are dealing with a matter which is of paramount concern to the Government.

No theory of government can excuse those who act and speak for the Government for permitting the relative decrease of home owners, because the home—the owned home—is the foundation upon which government rests. No government is justified by any consideration in permitting its own foundation to become weakened. A nation of home owners, regardless of its system or theories of government, can safely be trusted to deal effectively with its problems. No government whose body of citizenship is not composed of home owners is safe, I care not what its form or theories of government are. To the extent of necessity, therefore, every government should go to preserve for itself a foundation of home owners. We have not done that. The Federal farm-loan act is a step in that direction. The Weeks amendment is a step backward. Getting somewhat away from this fundamental aspect, the reason for the increase of tenantry is due to a number of related causes. I will not undertake to enumerate them all.

When the railroads and power factories came, and with them improved farm machinery, the cities began to develop and to offer to the energy and the capital of the country and to the educated and ambitious youth of the country better inducements than the country offered. Many of the young men and women bred in the country, capable of leadership, capable of making money in the country, and therefore capable of acquiring homes for themselves, left the country and left behind them a larger percentage of men in the country who are not so capable from a money-making standpoint. That of itself would necessarily reduce the home-getting average of the country population. Many of those who remained in the country who were possessed of money-making ability, after acquiring sufficient land to sustain their families from the rent thereof, moved to the town and city because of better educational advantages and the other attractions which they found there. The superior economic advantages offered by the vocations of the cities and towns shifted the wealth of the country largely to the inhabitants of the cities and towns, and many men of the cities and towns, by reason of the better credit which their fortunes gave to them, were able to procure money at a lower rate of interest than the individual living in the country and could, therefore, outbid the country man for farm lands coming on the market, other things being equal. Besides, many of them having businesses in the cities and towns which provided them a livelihood, and because of the constant advance in farm lands, they could afford to pay a price upon which they would realize a smaller per cent of revenue than they would ordinarily require, depending upon the increase in farm values to supplement the annual earnings, while the poor man in the country could only offer a price upon which, if he borrowed the money, he could pay interest charges on the principal and liquidate the debt.

The other reasons for the increase of tenantry is disclosed from the form and philosophy of this sort of legislation, which seeks to substitute for high interest rate and a short-time loan low interest rate and amortized payment, under which the tenant farmer can pay the loan in payments which are practically no larger than the interest rate on the farm loans in a large part of the country before this legislation was enacted.

I can not go further into detail. In a sentence, I will say that the increase of tenantry is due to that failure to approach the vital, imperative necessity of home ownership to the Government itself, which, it seems to me, the attitude of some gentlemen here discloses, and the failure to appreciate that the economic problems of agriculture in a peculiar sense are the problems of all of us who must eat to live.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SUMNERS. Mr. Chairman, I would ask that I may have five minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I have no objection provided liberal debate is still to be extended.

Mr. GLASS. I think we have had quite liberal debate, and I propose to move to close debate on all amendments.

Mr. SUMNERS. Then I will not insist.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will not object, but I should like to ask if I could have five minutes before this debate closes somewhere on one of these amendments?

Mr. GLASS. I do not think that it is reasonable that those who have had ample time should take all of the remaining time. I have refrained from invoking the rule because there are so many Members on both sides who have not spoken at all and who have appealed for some time. I am not disposed to have a long debate for the benefit of those who have already spoken.

Mr. LENROOT. The Weeks amendment has not——

Mr. SUMNERS. Mr. Chairman, in view of the peculiar situation that seems to be developed, I withdraw my request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas withdraws his request.

Mr. KINKAID. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of the relief as sought by the Farm Loan Board. The condition which confronts the board in the administration of the law is one that ought to be promptly relieved. The board and the farm-land banks are stranded for want of funds. This very beneficent act had but a short time in which to get a start, and we should not allow it to perish while it is yet a yearling, but we should give it fatherly assistance, having brought it into legislative existence. [Applause.]

I think the demand for relief is reasonable and justifiable. I am unqualifiedly in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia to substitute the House bill for the Senate bill. I should have gone further—well, in fact, I have gone further—in voting for the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that the Government guarantee the payment of farm-land bank bonds. I thing that amendment well reflects the wisdom of long-experienced statesmanship.

Mr. Chairman, why should the Government go half way and not all the way in sustaining the operation of the act? Why obligate itself morally, which it has admitted that it has done, to make good and safe the investments in farm-loan bonds without shouldering the responsibility legally and unrestrictedly? It is plain that to remain only morally obligated would thus leave it uncertain how a future administration with a future Congress might view the matter, and that such an attitude would make investors as apprehensive and as cautious as if the Government had given the system no support whatever.

Why not go further and guarantee that farm-loan bonds shall be at all times kept at par to the same extent as a Government bond, pure and simple, is? By so doing the risk and responsibility assumed by the Government would be reduced to the minimum by the increased standing in value given the bonds, and I deem it very unlikely that the Government would ever be called on to redeem bonds if it would guarantee payment.

On the other hand, simply to stand responsible for the act, and, as a mere gratuity, to help along now and then with its operation, may compel the Government to buy and carry a large percentage of the bonds, and thus to become so loaded with such investments as to render it advisable to issue its own bonds whereby to secure funds to pay for the same.

Mr. Chairman, our history has established precedents that prove the Government recognizes a moral obligation equally with a legal obligation. Fortunately, our chief administrators have been wise enough to foresee that it was a good investment and a good State policy to sustain the faith and confidence of the people that justice will be done them at all times and in all cases.

But what is the status? Why, applications for loans have been accepted by farm-land banks to the extent of $70,000,000, for which the money has not yet been furnished. A large percentage of these applicants are intending to use all or a considerable portion of the money to pay off existing mortgages, and when their applications were accepted they promised their mortgagees to make payments within a certain time. But the farm-land banks were unable to furnish the money within the periods agreed upon, and in many instances the applicants have been obliged to go to their local banks and borrow sufficiently to take up their mortgages. In most cases a short time was given these borrowers by the local banks, and now, when the creditor banks and their patrons need this money for the ordinary commercial transactions, it is lacking. These banks, large and small, doubtless were assured by the farm-land banks that the money would be forthcoming soon in accordance with the applications they had accepted, and, in order that the farm-land banks may keep faith with the local banks, who have undertaken to help the borrowers as well as the farm-land banks, relief must somehow be afforded them.

Mr. Chairman, I take issue with the two or more Members who maintain that it is not justifiable or legitimate to legislate the relief sought for the purpose merely of reducing the rate of interest 1 per cent, which farmers must pay. It is my judgment that this is sufficient ground for affording the relief. One of the fundamental purposes of the farm-loan law, when first sought, was to secure lower rates of interest, and I am glad to say that has been already, in a measure, realized, but the result will be only temporary if the operation of the act is permitted to be long suspended for the want of funds, as is now the actual situation. Members point out that none of their constituents have written them in behalf of this legislation; neither have my constituents expressly requested me to support it; but a number of them have written me earnestly, complaining of the delay in consummating loans for which their applications have been accepted; but in any event, I favor extending relief. I grant that there are large areas where farmers feel no interest whatever in the subject, because of their good fortune in not needing loans, since they have large accumulations or live in communities so old and so well developed that interest rates have become reasonably low.

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of affording relief in accordance with the recommendations made by the Farm Loan Board and O. K.'d by the Secretary of the Treasury. I favor it as a war measure; but if our country were not involved in war and the same or a less degree of necessity existed, I would favor the relief.

Both the great political parties were pledged to the farming industry for a farm-loan law for several years before its enactment. Considerable expenditures were made under Republican administrations in collecting information concerning the operation of farm-loan banking systems in European countries, to be used in the preparation of a farm-loan bill, so that the views of Congress had become pretty well matured on the subject before formal steps were taken for legislation when the change came.

Having launched the policy under the act passed, it would not now become us to let it lag or fail for the want of funds, which the Government can without difficulty supply.

The purpose of legislation is to help rather than to hinder the successful operation of the law, and this object will be reached by substituting the House bill unhampered by any restrictions. [Applause.]

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Chairman, I move to close all debate on the pending amendment and all amendments thereto.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that is fair. The Weeks amendment has not been offered yet.

Mr. GLASS. I gave notice half an hour ago that it ought to be sent up.

Mr. LENROOT. But under the rules of the House the only way it could be offered is to get recognition, and I have been trying to get recognition for an hour.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order the gentleman is out of order.

Mr. LENROOT. I know I am.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia moves that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto do now close.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, a division.

The committee proceeded to divide.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LENROOT. The motion is that the debate close on this amendment and all pending amendments. I make the point of order that the reading of this amendment has not been completed. Only section 1 of the amendment has been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The entire amendment has been read.

Mr. LENROOT. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] at the conclusion of the reading of section 1 offered his amendment.

Mr. WINGO. If that is true, the point of order comes too late.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is not in order when the committee is dividing.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order and will continue the count.

The count was completed; and there were—ayes 72, noes 63.

Mr. LENROOT. Now, I make the point of order that this vote is of no effect because it was not within the power of the Committee of the Whole to make any such order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair——

Mr. LENROOT. I want to be heard if the Chair raises any question about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like the gentleman to state his argument on the proposition. Does the Chair understand the gentleman to say that in the Committee of the Whole the debate can not be closed after the question has been debated for five minutes?

Mr. LENROOT. Let me give an illustration: Suppose we had a tariff bill under consideration, and at the end of the consideration of the first paragraph in that tariff bill a motion was made to close debate upon the entire bill, and through misunderstanding on the part of the Chair that motion had been put. Now, will the Chair say that if the committee voted to close debate upon that entire tariff bill, something the committee under the rules of the House had no power to do, the vote would be of any effect whatever? And that is exactly this situation.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the Chair please, the Chair has no right to assume that the Committee of the Whole acts without intelligence and knowledge of what it is doing. The fact is, a motion was made that might have been subject to a point of order. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], assuming that he had a good point of order, slept on his right and did not make it until after the House was dividing, and therefore lost the right.

Mr. LENROOT. In reply to the suggestion of the gentleman from Kentucky, I would suggest to the Chair, irrespective of a point of order being made, until the reading of a bill is completed the Chair would have no right to put the motion. It does not require a point of order on the part of a Member, because it is the absolute right of every Member, irrespective of a point of order, to have the reading of the bill completed before this motion can be made at all. And if made under that situation it is of no effect.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] that he tried to recognize the gentlemen as they rose who had not spoken under general debate.

Mr. LENROOT. I am not criticizing the Chair——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is just stating that. And the Chair tried to be fair. But the Clerk informs the Chair that this bill was read, and that the whole amendment was read as offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. There was no point raised at that time that applied to both sections. And debate has been had on these amendments that have been offered.

Mr. LENROOT. The bill was read, but the amendment was not read, except the first section.

Mr. SISSON. The amendment was read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk informs the Chair that they were read, and so the Chair thinks the motion to close debate was in order and therefore overrules the point of order. On this vote the ayes were 72, and the noes 63.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman's demand for tellers is too late. The gentleman permitted the Chair to announce his decision, and then made the point that the decision had no validity, because the committee could not entertain or could not act upon such a matter. Now, having urged that the action of the committee had no validity, and being overruled, he wants to reconsider by tellers the action of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the count had not been announced, and so he overrules the point of order of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY]. All in favor of tellers will rise and be counted. [After counting.] A sufficient number has risen. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] will act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 88, noes 70.

So the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN].

The Clerk read as follows:

On line 9, page 1, after the words "nineteen hundred and eighteen," strike out the rest of that line and line 10 down to and including the word "respectively."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the other amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN].

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 4, page 2, after the figures "$100,000,000," strike out the words "in either of such fiscal years."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers another amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MCFADDEN offers the following: Amend, on page 2, by striking out, on line 8, the words "one year" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "two years," and on lines 9 and 10 strike out the words "upon 30 days' notice from the Secretary of the Treasury."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Did the motion that recently passed preclude all debate on these amendments?

The CHAIRMAN. It precludes all debate, but does not preclude amendments being offered.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There can be no further debate?

The CHAIRMAN. No; there can be no further debate. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The vote now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GLASS].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Chairman, I now move that the committee rise and report the bill with amendments to the House.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LENROOT. I desire to ask whether section 2 of the original bill has been read for amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that section 2 was embodied in the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]; that the motion was made to strike out all after the enacting clause. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Virginia, that the committee rise and report the bill and amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill S. 3235, amending section 32, Federal farm-loan act, approved July 17, 1916, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a yea-and-nay vote. No; I will withdraw that request.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I renew the motion. I demand the yeas and nays on the bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. We have not reached the passage of the bill yet.

Mr. FORDNEY. On the amendment.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman demand the yeas and nays on the amendment?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; on the amendment.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays on the Glass amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts demands the yeas and nays. Those in favor of taking the vote by yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Forty-five gentlemen have risen in the affirmative—a sufficient number.

Mr. WINGO. I ask for the other side, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas demands the other side. Those opposed to taking this vote by the yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] One hundred and six Members in the negative and 45 in the affirmative. A sufficient number in the affirmative. The yeas and nays are ordered, and the Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk began reading the amendment.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, it is not necessary to read the amendment again. It has been read once.

The SPEAKER. Members ought to know what they are to vote on. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:
"That the Federal farm-loan act, approved July 17, 1916, is hereby amended by adding at the end of section 32 the following:
"'The Secretary of the Treasury is further authorized, in his discretion, upon the request of the Federal Farm Loan Board, from time to time during the fiscal years ending Junt 30, 1918, and June 30, 1919, respectively, to purchase at par and accrued interest, with any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, from any Federal land bank, farm-loan bonds issued by such bank.
"'Such purchases shall not exceed the sum of $100,000,000 in either of such fiscal years. Any Federal land bank may at any time repurchase at par and accrued interest for the purpose of redemption or resale any bonds so purchased from it and held in the Treasury.

"'The bonds of any Federal land bank so purchased by the Secretary of the Treasury and held in the Treasury under the provisions of this amendment one year after the termination of the pending war shall upon 30 days' notice from the Secretary of the Treasury be redeemed or repurchased by such bank at par and accrued interest.

"'The temporary organization of any Federal land bank as provided in section 4 of said Federal farm-loan act shall be continued so long as any farm-loan bonds purchased from it under the provisions of this amendment shall be held by the Treasury, and until the subscriptions to stock in such bank by national farm-loan associations shall equal the amount of stock held in such bank by the Government of the United States.'

"SEC. 2. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed, and this act shall take effect upon its passage. The right to amend, alter, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 218, nays 70, answered "present" 1, not voting 139, as follows:

CUSTOMS-COLLECTION DISTRICTS (H. DOC. NO. 753).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, ordered printed, and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means:

By Executive order dated September 7, 1917, effective October 1, 1917, customs-collection district No. 23, of which Laredo was the headquarters port, and district No. 25, of which Eagle Pass, Tex., was the headquarters port, were abolished and a new district No. 23 created with headquarters at San Antonio, Tex.

Districts No. 22, of which Galveston is the headquarters port, and No. 24, of which El Paso is the headquarters port, were enlarged. These changes were made in order to insure a better administration of the customs laws and to lessen the expenses.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, 4 January, 1918.

COUNCIL OF NATIONAL DEFENSE (S. DOC. NO. 156).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and, without the accompanying document, ordered printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress approved August 29, 1916, establishing the Council of National Defense and providing for the appointment of an advisory commission to the council, I transmit herewith the first annual report of the council, the advisory commission, and the subordinate agencies of both bodies for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1917.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, 4 January, 1918.

Also, memorial of Pennsylvania Woman Suffrage Association, favoring woman suffrage; to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, January 5, 1918.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, bless us with Thy gracious favor, and continue us by Thy continual replenishing, that our spirits may respond to Thy Spirit, that our cause may be Thine, that our land, consecrated to the high ideals born out of the Gospel of Christ, may continue its mission among men until it shall have accomplished its end in the establishment of peace and brotherhood amongst men. For Christ's sake. Amen.

CHARLES S. THOMAS, a Senator from the State of Colorado, appeared in his seat to-day.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS, ETC., SENT TO THE VICE PRESIDENT.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On the 7th day of December, in order to clarify the situation with reference to the rights and duties of the presiding officer of this body touching petitions and memorials, the Chair announced that unless otherwise ordered by the Committee on Rules petitions and memorials from citizens of the several States must be sent to the Senators representing those States for presentation to the Senate. No exception was taken to this ruling, the only comment being a commendation of the action by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE].

Upon yesterday the Chair received a letter from the managing editor of the Vigilantes, a patriotic, antipacifist, nonpartisan organization of authors, artists, and others, with headquarters at 505 Fifth Avenue, New York City, N. Y., asking the Chair to bring to the attention of the Senate certain inclosed letters of protest against the continuing membership in the highest council of the Nation of ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE.

These letters come squarely within the ruling of the Chair made upon the 7th day of December. They will, therefore, be by the Chair transmitted to the senior Senators of the several States in which the writers thereof reside for such action as the judgment and conscience of the Senators may deem appropriate to be taken.

The presentation of petitions and memorials is in order.

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. McNARY. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] on account of work in committee.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. GOFF] on account of illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-eight Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by G. F. Turner, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3235) amending section 32, Federal farm-loan act, approved July 17, 1916, with an amendment; insists upon its amendment to the bill, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes in the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GLASS, Mr. PHELAN, and Mr. HAYS managers of the conference on the part of the House.

PETITIONS.

Mr. NELSON presented a petition of sundry postal employees of Minneapolis, Minn., praying for an increase in the salaries of postal employees, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. PHELAN presented a resolution adopted at a conference called by the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce, of California, indorsing the findings and recommendations of the Navy Yard Commission appointed by the Secretary of the Navy to investigate the location of sites, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

WAR CONDITIONS IN SEATTLE, WASH.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I present the following letter and ask that it be read by the Secretary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? There being none, the Secretary will read the letter.

The Secretary read as follows:

WASHINGTON STATE SOCIETY OF ARCHITECTS,
Seattle, Wash., December 29, 1917.

Hon. MILES POINDEXTER,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR POINDEXTER: This city is overrun with German sympathizers, and something should be done to check it forthwith. The work of detecting such persons is in the hands of the United States Department of Justice, and do you know that that department is struggling along with 10 poorly paid men, when the least number of well-paid men that can render the desired service that we must have is 50 men; not half that number, but 50, and pay them. Trying to run this department with 10 men under present conditions, and in this the leading shipbuilding point in our country, is a thousand times poorer judgment than was the management of the steamship Lusitania in running that vessel without proper field glasses.

I am giving such of my time free to this work as I can and look after my business, and have made the statements above with a full knowledge of what is required.

I will await an early reply from you. I am worried over the situation, knowing what I do, and shall not be satisfied until this matter is remedied.

Sincerely,

HARRY H. JAMES.

IMPORTATION OF CHINESE FARMERS.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, yesterday morning the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] presented petitions in favor of the importation of Chinese labor to meet the demand for farm labor. The necessity for securing farm labor we all concede. I desire to have spread upon the RECORD, if there be no objection, a letter from the Department of Labor stating that, in view of the fact that the Department of Labor has organized a central farm service for the purpose of meeting the demand for farm labor, "it is not deemed by the department necessary to go into the matter of the importation of Chinese, Japanese, Hindu, or other foreign labor."

I submit this letter from the Department of Labor for printing in the RECORD.

I am disposed to believe that every encouragement should be given the department to solve the farm-labor question before the drastic remedy of importing nonassimilable people be entertained. In a self-governing Republic we must preserve the character of our white population as a first consideration.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY,
Washington, January 3, 1918.

Hon. JAMES D. PHELAN,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: My attention has been called to your communication of December 21st ultimo, addressed to the Secretary of Labor, with which you transmit a letter of the 15th ultimo from Carson C. Cook, general manager of the Rindge Land & Navigation Co., of Stockton, Cal., and also a copy of a communication to Mr. R. L. Adams, State farm-labor agent, Berkeley, Cal., concerning a possible shortage of farm help for 1918.

In this connection I wish to state that a special farm-labor service has been organized within the United States Employment Service and that the matter will be looked into by the officers thereof and recommendations made to meet whatever conditions may arise. In view of this it is not deemed necessary to go into the matter of importation of Chinese, Japanese, Hindu, or other foreign labor.

Sincerely, yours,

LOUIS F. POST, Assistant Secretary.

Mr. PHELAN. In this connection I desire to present a petition from the Central Labor Council, of Santa Clara County, Cal., and one from members of the Oil Workers' Local Union No. 15612, American Federation of Labor, of Fellows, Cal., on the same subject, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the petitions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CENTRAL LABOR COUNCIL,
San Jose, Cal., December 22, 1917.

Hon. JAMES D. PHELAN,
United States Senator from California, Washington, D. C.

HONORED SIR: The Central Labor Council of Santa Clara County has been informed that Senator GALLINGER, of New Hampshire, has introduced in the Senate a bill "providing for the importation of Chinese as farm laborers during the war." The Central Labor Council of Santa Clara County, Cal., is decidedly opposed to any importation of Chinese, and the secretary has been instructed to communicate with you as to their attitude on any measure of this kind.

I don't believe it is necessary to acquaint our Senator with the sentiment of Californians on questions of this nature, as you have been in public life so long that you are very familiar with the motives behind measures of this kind.

Trusting that you are in accord with the foregoing, I beg to remain,

Yours, very respectfully,

F. J. HEPP,
Secretary Central Labor Council of Santa Clara County.

FELLOWS, CAL., December 28, 1917.

Hon. J. D. PHELAN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: We (Oil Workers' Union, Local No. 15612) humbly beg of you to do all you can to defeat that bill (introduced by Senator GALLINGER) providing for the importation of cheap Asiatic labor. We feel that to admit this cheap labor, even as a war measure, would hamper the laboring class of the United States, and that it would take years to overcome it, if ever. So we, the laboring people of California, ask you again in our behalf to work against this bill.

Thanking you in advance for what you do for us, I am

Very respectfully,

[SEAL.] VIRGIL M. SELF,
Secretary Oil Workers' Union, Local 15612.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. LODGE:

A bill (S. 3386) to provide for commissioned officers of the Dental Corps of the Navy the same rank, pay, promotions, and allowances of officers of corresponding grades in the Naval Medical Corps, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. FLETCHER:

A bill (S. 3387) to authorize and empower the President to create military zones around shipyards where vessels are under construction for the United States;

A bill (S. 3388) to amend the emergency shipping fund provisions of the urgent deficiency appropriation act approved June 30, 1917, so as to empower the President and his designated agents to take over certain transportation systems for the transportation of shipyard and plant employees, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. 3389) to authorize and empower the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation to purchase, lease, requisition, or otherwise acquire improved or unimproved land, houses, buildings, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. MYERS:

A bill (S. 3390) to authorize the transfer to the Government of privately owned timberland within the Bitter Root National Forest, Mont., and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 3391) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent to G. H. Beckwith for certain land within the Flathead Indian Reservation, Mont.;

A bill (S. 3392) for furnishing water supply for miscellaneous purposes in connection with reclamation projects; and

A bill (S. 3393) to authorize the exchange with the Government of lands privately owned within national forests; to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (S. 3394) granting a pension to Mary J. Ritchey; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. THOMPSON:

A bill (S. 3395) for the relief of Daniel H. Scofield, alias Cofield; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 3396) granting an increase of pension to Gilbert L. Holmes (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Arizona:

A bill (S. 3397) to fix the salaries of clerks and deputy clerks of the district courts of the United States, and to repeal all other conflicting laws and parts of laws; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. NELSON:

A bill (S. 3398) granting an increase of pension to William W. Gordon; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TILLMAN:

A bill (S. 3399) to amend an act approved May 27, 1908 (35 Stat., pp. 417, 418), and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 3400) to regulate the pay of retired chief warrant officers on active duty;

A bill (S. 3401) to authorize the President to temporarily reduce the course of instruction at the United States Naval Academy;

A bill (S. 3402) to fix the age limits for candidates for admission to the United States Naval Academy;

A bill (S. 3403) for the relief of Paymaster Alvin Hovey-King, United States Navy;

A bill (S. 3404) to authorize the President to drop from the rolls any naval or Marine Corps officer absent without leave for three months, or who has been convicted of any offense by civil authorities, and prohibiting such officer's reappointment;

A bill (S. 3405) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes," approved August 29, 1916; and

A bill (S. 3406) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to determine where and when there are no public quarters available for officers of the Navy and Marine Corps; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

AMENDMENT TO POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WATSON submitted an amendment proposing to increase the per diem allowance of inspectors in the field while actually traveling on official business away from their homes, etc., from not to exceed $3 per day to $4 per day, intended to be proposed by him to the Post Office appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT OF INCOME-TAX LAW.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there concurrent or other resolutions? [A pause.] The morning business is closed.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator withhold that request for a moment until I make an announcement?

Mr. PITTMAN. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, immediately following the exercises of to-day, which I understand are to begin at 12.30 o'clock, I am going to ask, out of order, to offer an amendment to House joint resolution 195, a joint resolution amending the present revenue act. In connection therewith I desire to make a statement. I will say to the Senator from Nevada that it will not take over 30 minutes for me to do so, and I simply give notice now, because if the unfinished business is taken up I shall ask the privilege, out of order, to offer the amendment and to make the remarks which I desire to make.

MINING OF COAL, ETC., ON THE PUBLIC DOMAIN.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I renew my request for unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be laid before the Senate.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2812) to encourage and promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, potassium, and sodium on the public domain.

Mr. PITTMAN. I offer the amendments which I send to the desk for the purpose of perfecting the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The first amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 12, line 12, before the word "of," at the beginning of the line, it is proposed to insert the words "by a claimant," so that it will read:

SEC. 16. That upon relinquishment to the United States within 90 days from the date of this act or within 90 days after final denial or withdrawal of application for patent by a claimant, of any claim or subdivision thereof asserted under the mining laws, etc.

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not ask to have these amendments acted on now, but I merely desire to have them read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 12, line 14, after the word "withdrawal," it is proposed to insert the words "and who prior to such date had performed all acts necessary to a valid mining location thereof except to make a discovery of oil."

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I did not understand what the amendments were. Is the Secretary now reading the last amendment or the context?

Mr. PITTMAN. These are amendments which I am now offering, to be considered later in the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 12, line 15, it is proposed to strike out the word "the" and to insert the word "such," and on page 12, line 17, after the word "each," to insert the word "such."

Mr. PITTMAN. For the purpose of perfecting the text, on behalf of the committee I offer the amendment which I now send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 25, line 6, it is proposed to strike out the word "any" and to insert the words "more than a tenth."

On page 25, line 8, after the word "the," to insert the words "transportation, refining, or."

Mr. PITTMAN. I give notice that immediately after the recess this morning I shall ask to have these amendments taken up in the order in which I have presented them, of course giving way to the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] for the presentation of the amendment to the amendment, which he desires to submit.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, if it is now in order, I desire to propose an amendment to the pending bill, to which I do not think there will be any opposition. I have spoken to the chairman of the committee about it. The amendment is with reference to the provision on page 14 in regard to oil or gas bearing lands in the Territory of Alaska. On page 14, line 9, I desire to move to strike out the sum of "$1,000" and to insert in lieu thereof the sum of "$500." As I understand now, to secure a patent to land in Alaska an expenditure of only $500 is required, and I do not, therefore, see any reason why, to secure the benefits of the provisions of this act, there should be required the expenditure of a greater sum than to secure a patent. So I desire to offer the amendment.

Mr. PITTMAN. I think there is no objection on behalf of the committee to accepting the amendment, but I will ask the Senator from Washington to allow the amendment to go over until after the recess.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I thought that if the amendment would require no discussion and there was no opposition to it we could adopt it now.

Mr. PITTMAN. I am sure the amendment will require a few minutes of explanation.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Very well; I will withdraw the amendment now, and I shall offer it later.

RECEPTION OF THE SERBIAN MISSION.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I have just been advised that the members of the Serbian mission are now in the Capitol, and I am sure it will be a pleasure for the Members of the Senate to have an opportunity to receive them and to be presented to them. I therefore move that the Senate take a recess until 1 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair appoints the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to conduct the members of the Serbian mission into the Senate Chamber.

At 12 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m. the members of the Serbian mission, escorted by the committee appointed by the Vice President and headed by the Sergeant at Arms, appeared at the main door of the Chamber, and were announced to the Senate by the Sergeant at Arms. The members of the mission were: Dr. Milenko R. Vesnitch (chairman), Dr. Sima Lozanitch, Gen. Michailo Rachitch, Lieut. Col. Michailo Nenadovitch, Capt. Milan Yovitchitch, and Mr. Vladislav Martinatz.

Mr. Lioubomir Michailovitch, minister from Serbia to the United States; Mr. Alexandre V. Georgevitch, and Mr. Todorovitch accompanied the mission into the Senate Chamber, together with the Assistant Secretary of State, Mr. William Phillips, Mr. A. B. Ruddock, of the Department of State, and Lieut. H. F. Armstrong, United States Army.

Dr. Milenko R. Vesnitch was seated on the right of the Vice President and Minister Michailovitch on his left.

ADDRESS BY THE VICE PRESIDENT.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Senators, even so untrained a mind as mine grasps the artistic possibilities of this scene. Here you are, the representatives of a free people, because your forbears heard and heeded the agonizing cry of Patrick Henry in the Virginia House of Burgesses. Here they are, the representatives of a people who for nearly six centuries in mortal combat with Austrian and with Turk have written in the blood of their sons upon the greensward of every mountain side and every valley of the Balkans the immortal cry of Henry. Here you both are this day, each a worthy representative of his race, clasping hands in the midnight darkness and solemnly vowing that the morrow's morn will find you and yours, as always, consecrated to liberty or to death! [Applause.]

If I were asked by some not so learned as you what the world will open its eyes upon when the nightmare of this awful carnage has passed, I should answer of my faith and hope and not my knowledge; I should say that the world would gaze upon one dream come true.

The greatest of the national heroes of our visiting friends was Stephen Dushan, Stephen the Throttler. His untimely death prevented the unification of the Serbs and the driving of the last Turk from the soil of Europe. It is a far cry from Diavoli to Washington. The physical Throttler died there; the spiritual Throttler, we hope, lives in this city. [Applause.]

For centuries the dream of the real world has been that some time, somehow, the spirit to rule alien nations, the ambition to lord it over conquered provinces, the arrogant desire to fatten and grow great upon the broken and bruised bodies of the weak and helpless would be throttled, throttled to their undoing and to their death; and when that time comes, as come it must, the Serb will be as free as the air that soothes to sleep his babe on the Balkan mountain side.

Senators, you are not what you pretend to be if it be not "hats off" and voices in unison with these our friends as they sing:

On our sepulcher of ages
Breaks the resurrection morn,
From the slough of direst slavery
Serbia anew is born;
Through five hundred years of durance
We have knelt before Thy face;
All our kin, O God, deliver—
Thus entreats the Serbian race.

[Applause.]

We should be traitors and forsworn to our own glorious traditions if we did not gladly greet and joyously acclaim the representatives of a people who, through the long centuries, have never failed to put their backs to the wall of Europe fighting to die in the defense of their rights and their liberties. So, Senators, it pleases me to present to you Dr. Milenko Vesnitch, the head of the Serbian mission, whom the wings of destiny have wafted to our shores. [Applause.]

ADDRESS BY DR. MILENKO R. VESNITCH.

Dr. VESNITCH. Mr. President and gentlemen of the Senate, destiny willed that we arrive in the United States just before your Christmas eve, and, having heard in Europe of the historic announcements made in your Congress during the past year, like the Magi from the East, we were anxious to inquire and to testify to their truth. The same good destiny wills, thanks to your gracious invitation, that we appear before you on the eve of our Christmas, and, like the shepherds of the Gospel, we are now going about in the splendid capital of your country singing in our hearts and reciting to ourselves the magic words which President Wilson has addressed to mankind, "We believe in peace, but we believe also in justice and righteousness and liberty." More than anybody we believe that peace can not subsist without justice, without liberty and righteousness.

From over the ocean we have anxiously listened to the epochal declarations of the eminent leader of the greatest and purest democracy that history has ever known, and we have been happy to understand that this Congress was in complete harmony with the ideas of the dignified successor of Washington and of Lincoln.

With golden characters in their hearts and souls, all liberty-loving nations will inscribe forever his and your program, following which America stands first of all for the right of men to determine whom they will obey and whom they will serve, for the right of political freedom and a people's sovereignty; for the equality of nations, which means the equality of rights, neither recognizing nor implying a difference between big nations and small, between those that are powerful and those that are weak; for no peace can last or ought to last which does not recognize and accept the principle that governments derive all their just powers from the consent of the governed [applause], and that no right anywhere exists to hand people about from sovereignty to sovereignty, as if they were property. [Renewed applause.] We, too, accept with enthusiasm the doctrine of Monroe as the doctrine of the world, "that no nation should seek to extend its policy over any other nation or people, but that every nation or people should be left free to determine its own policy, its own way of development, unhindered, unthreatened, unafraid, the little along with the great and powerful." We are happy to be permitted to share with you the belief that right shall command might, and that it ought not to be dishonored in its very inception.

Let me confess to you, gentlemen, that over there in Europe many people were anxious for months, if not for years, as to the attitude of the United States in this unexampled war. But let me add at the same time that I was not of the number. How could a man acquainted with your history imagine for a single moment that this great Nation should confine herself to the part of a reserved spectator in the presence of the most tremendous struggle for the highest principles of humanity? How could we believe that you could have been insensible in reading the barbarous and unprecedented ultimatum which the Hapsburg Government presented to Serbia and foreseeing the unequal struggle between the two countries, of which the one was ten times bigger and stronger than the other, especially as the latter had just passed through two successive wars? How could an American citizen remain indifferent to the violation of Belgian neutrality, excused by the imperial chancellor with the assertion that solemn international treaties are nothing else than simple "scraps of paper"?

The people who doubted the course you were going to take are excused only by the consideration that they did not know, or rather that they had forgotten, your history.

My mind had been fixed about this problem from the very first moment of the war. But on the tragic day when our old King and his heroic son, our almost dying Voïvod Putnik, and our last soldier, hungering and freezing, quite exhausted, left the Albanian coast, taking with them nothing save our national flag and our honor enveloped in it [applause], I remained for hours and hours deploring our unmerited misfortune and defending myself against despair, and, glancing at the map in my mind, I reviewed countries and nations. And looking across the Atlantic, I saw your ancestors sailing over the "sea of darkness," after having left forever in their native countries all that was dear to them, and going to this unknown continent without any fear, unaware of the trials and troubles awaiting them here, scorning the risks and dangers, determined to fight with savages, with beasts, and with the elements. For what reason? Because they were not willing to endure autocracy and capriciousness in their native countries, and because they were ready and capable to found new human societies, where political, religious, and moral liberty would be the same for all, and where law and right would command instead of tyranny and caprice. I have followed their generations, extending civilization over the mountains, over the woods and lakes, and enlarging the political rights of everybody in this part of the continent—becoming, in a word, the promised land of all liberty-loving people. [Applause.] I remembered then how early it was that Turgot represented the American people as "the hope of mankind," and how justly he appreciated and foresaw at that time the character and importance of your people for the civilization of mankind. The American people, he thought, "must show the world by its example that men can be free and tranquil, and can do without the chains that tyrants and cheats of all garbs have tried to lay on them under the pretense of public good. It must give the example of political liberty, religious liberty, commercial and industrial liberty."

This prophecy of the great French statesman, made in the second half of the eighteenth century, has become a reality. And so, in my desolate eagerness, I said to myself that the Nation with this origin and this history, I know, can not consent to the overwhelming of the whole civilized world by the barbarous rule which centuries ago had forced them to leave their native countries and to seek other homes, and that the day is not far off when the Star-Spangled Banner will join the flags of the nations fighting for freedom, for right, and for justice, and that then better days will come for the nations suffering injustice in Europe and throughout the whole world. [Applause.]

The Serbian Nation, with their kinsmen, the Croats and Slovenes, have suffered in this war more than any other nation. But I shall not appeal to-day to your commiseration. I am happy and proud to say we have fought for our liberties as bravely as any one of our gallant allies. [Applause.] In thus fulfilling our sacred duty to our country we venture to think that we have rendered a real service, however small it may be, to the better future of humanity, for in defending our beloved land our regiments have sown the greater portion of our territory with the lives of the best of their men. These seeds of virtue can not, they will not, perish. They have even begun to give their blessed fruits. To them we owe the interest which the civilized world has taken in our national cause; to them, and because of their martyrdom, we owe the heartiness with which your great Nation has opened her magnanimous arms to us; to them my friends here present and I myself owe the great honor of being received in your Senate, which we regard as the strongest asylum of right, of liberty, and of justice, and as the noblest temple for the prayer of a better future for the human race. [Applause.]

We, too, believe with you, Mr. President of the Senate; we, too, have faith to-day that the morning light will break in this good year at hand, and that it will break with the sun of liberty rising upon a rose-tinted sky. We, too, have in this solemn hour a vision, and we voice our unalterable faith that this magnificent Republic is to lead the nations of the world unto the mountain of perfect peace and to become the arbiter of them all, because we know that the American commandments of peace are commandments of justice, which alone will enable mankind to improve in free evolution.

When, in the service of these ideals, the allied Governments, the allied soldiers and sailors, and civilian men and women will have put forth all their energies; when, in a coordinated and strongly cemented unity of all our forces, of all our war aims, and of all our thoughts, we win this fight—and we must win it unless we are all to be crushed in slavery under the Prussian heel—then, as you said some days ago, Mr. President:

The darkness will disappear. The light will break over a world grown old in want, in sin, in misery, in autocratic kingcraft. It will be the light of a newer and a better day; and anything else that America has ever accomplished will pale into insignificance before the light of the sacrifices which it shall have made for humanity and for freedom.

Blessed be the nation which first in history gives glorious impulse to the Christian teaching, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

Accept, for the sake of our common humanity in these epochal days, the heartfelt gratitude of a small but of an honest nation. [Prolonged applause.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. Senators, Dr. Vesnitch and the members of the mission will be pleased to meet you and greet you.

The members of the Serbian mission took their places at the left of the Vice President's desk and the Members of the Senate were presented to them by the committee appointed by the Vice President.

The distinguished visitors were escorted from the Chamber, and (at 1 o'clock p. m.) the Senate reassembled upon the expiration of the recess.

MINING OF COAL, ETC., ON THE PUBLIC DOMAIN.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2812) to encourage and promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, potassium, and sodium on the public domain.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the pending amendment.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I rose also to suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The absence of a quorum is suggested, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] is detained on important business. I also wish to announce that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] are detained from the Senate by illness.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to state that the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] is unavoidably detained from the Chamber this morning.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Michigan]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. MYERS. My colleague [Mr. WALSH] is still detained from the Senate by illness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-three Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

PROPOSED AMENDMENTS TO EXISTING REVENUE LAWS.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, out of order I offer the following amendment to House joint resolution 195. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment referred to is as follows:

Amendments intended to be proposed by Mr. SMOOT to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 195) entitled "Joint resolution amending the act entitled 'An act to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes,' approved October 3, 1917, so as to subject to the war excess-profits tax the compensation of officers and employees under the United States, including Members of Congress," viz: Strike out all after the resolving clause and insert the following:

TITLE I.—INCOME TAX.

Part I.—On individuals.

SECTION 1. (a) That there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid annually upon the entire net income received in the preceding calendar year from all sources by every individual, a citizen or resident of the United States, a tax of 2 per cent upon such income; and a like tax shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid annually upon the entire net income received in the preceding calendar year from all sources within the United States by every individual, a nonresident alien, including interest on bonds, notes, or other interest-bearing obligations of residents, corporate or otherwise.

(b) In addition to the income tax imposed by subdivision (a) of this section (herein referred to as the normal tax) there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid upon the total net income of every individual, or, in the case of a nonresident alien, the total net income received from all sources within the United States, an additional income tax (herein referred to as the additional tax) of 1 per cent per annum upon the amount by which such total net income exceeds $5,000 and does not exceed $7,500, 2 per cent per annum upon the amount by which such total net income exceeds $7,500 and does not exceed $10,000, 3 per cent per annum upon the amount by which such total net income exceeds $10,000 and does not exceed $12,500, 4 per cent per annum upon the amount by which such total net income exceeds $12,500 and does not exceed $15,000, 5 per cent per annum upon the amount by which such total net income exceeds $15,000 and does not exceed $20,000, 8 per cent per annum upon the amount by which such total net income exceeds $20,000 and does not exceed $40,000, 12 per cent per annum upon the amount by which such total net income exceeds $40,000 and does not exceed $60,000, 17 per cent per annum upon the amount by which such total net income exceeds $60,000 and does not exceed $80,000, 22 per cent per annum upon the amount by which such total net income exceeds $80,000 and does not exceed $100,000, 27 per cent per annum upon the amount by which such total net income exceeds $100,000 and does not exceed $150,000, 31 per cent per annum upon the amount by which such total net income exceeds $150,000 and does not exceed $200,000, 37 per cent per annum upon the amount by which such total net income exceeds $200,000 and does not exceed $250,000, 42 per cent per annum upon the amount by which such total net income exceeds $250,000 and does not exceed $300,000, 46 per cent per annum upon the amount by which such total net income exceeds $300,000 and does not exceed $500,000, 50 per cent per annum upon the amount by which such total net income exceeds $500,000 and does not exceed $750,000, 55 per cent per annum upon the amount by which such total net income exceeds $750,000 and does not exceed $1,000,000, 61 per cent per annum upon the amount by which such total net income exceeds $1,000,000 and does not exceed $1,500,000, 62 per cent per annum upon the amount by which such total net income exceeds $1,500,000 and does not exceed $2,000,000, and 63 per cent per annum upon the amount by which such total net income exceeds $2,000,000.

For the purpose of the additional tax there shall be included as income the income derived from dividends on the capital stock or from the net earnings of any corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company, except that in the case of nonresident aliens such income derived from sources without the United States shall not be included.

All the provisions of this title relating to the normal tax on individuals, so far as they are applicable and are not inconsistent with this subdivision and section 3, shall apply to the imposition, levy, assessment, and collection of the additional tax imposed under this subdivision.

(c) The foregoing normal and additional tax rates shall apply to the entire net income, except as hereinafter provided, received by every taxable person in the calendar year 1917 and in each calendar year thereafter.

INCOME DEFINED.

SEC. 2. (a) That, subject only to such exemptions and deductions as are hereinafter allowed, the net income of a taxable person shall include gains, profits, and income derived from salaries, wages, or compensation for personal service of whatever kind and in whatever form paid, or from professions, vocations, businesses, trade, commerce, or sales, or dealings in property, whether real or personal, growing out of the ownership or use of or interest in real or personal property, also from interest, rent, dividends, securities, or the transaction of any business carried on for gain or profit, or gains or profits and income derived from any source whatever.

(b) Income received by estates of deceased persons during the period of administration or settlement of the estate shall be subject to the normal and additional tax and taxed to their estates, and also such income of estates or any kind of property held in trust, including such income accumulated in trust for the benefit of unborn or unascertained persons, or persons with contingent interests, and income held for future distribution under the terms of the will or trust shall be likewise taxed, the tax in each instance, except when the income is returned for the purpose of the tax by the beneficiary, to be assessed to the executor, administrator, or trustee, as the case may be: Provided, That where the income is to be distributed annually or regularly between existing heirs or legatees or beneficiaries the rate of tax and method of computing the same shall be based in each case upon the amount of the individual share to be distributed.

Such trustees, executors, administrators, and other fiduciaries are hereby indemnified against the claims or demands of every beneficiary for all payments of taxes which they shall be required to make under the provisions of this title, and they shall have credit for the amount of such payments against the beneficiary or principal in any accounting which they make as such trustees or other fiduciaries.

(c) For the purpose of ascertaining the gain derived from the sale or other disposition of property, real, personal, or mixed, acquired before March 1, 1913, the fair market price or value of such property as of March 1, 1913, shall be the basis for determining the amount of such gain derived.

ADDITIONAL TAX INCLUDES UNDISTRIBUTED PROFITS.

SEC. 3. For the purpose of the additional tax the taxable income of any individual shall include the share to which he would be entitled of the gains and profits, if divided or distributed, whether divided or distributed or not, of all corporations, joint-stock companies or associations, or insurance companies, however created or organized, formed or fraudulently availed of for the purpose of preventing the imposition of such tax through the medium of permitting such gains and profits to accumulate instead of being divided or distributed; and the fact that any such corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company is a mere holding company or that the gains and profits are permitted to accumulate beyond the reasonable needs of the business, shall be prima facie evidence of a fraudulent purpose to escape such tax; but the fact that the gains and profits are in any case permitted to accumulate and become surplus shall not be construed as evidence of a purpose to escape the said tax in such case unless the Secretary of the Treasury shall certify that in his opinion such accumulation is unreasonable for the purposes of the business. When requested by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, or any district collector of internal revenue, such corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company shall forward to him a correct statement of such gains and profits and the names and addresses of the individuals or shareholders who would be entitled to the same if divided or distributed.

SEC. 4. The following income shall be exempt from the provisions of this title:

The proceeds of life insurance policies paid to individual beneficiaries upon the death of the insured; the amount received by the insured, as a return of premium or premiums paid by him under life insurance, endowment, or annuity contracts, either during the term or at the maturity of the term mentioned in the contract or upon surrender of the contract; the value of property acquired by gift, bequest, devise, or descent (but the income from such property shall be included as income); interest upon the obligations of a State or any political subdivision thereof or upon the obligations of the United States, but, in the case of obligations of the United States issued after September 1, 1917, only if and to the extent provided in the act authorizing the issue thereof) or its possessions or securities issued under the provisions of the Federal farm-loan act of July 17, 1916; the compensation of all officers and employees of a State, or any political subdivision thereof, except when such compensation is paid by the United States Government.

DEDUCTIONS ALLOWED.

SEC. 5. That in computing net income in the case of a citizen or resident of the United States—

(a) For the purpose of the tax there shall be allowed as deductions—

First. The necessary expenses actually paid in carrying on any business or trade, not including personal, living, or family expenses;

Second. All interest paid within the year on his indebtedness, except on indebtedness incurred for the purchase of obligations or securities the interest upon which is exempt from taxation as income under this title;

Third. Taxes paid within the year imposed by the authority of the United States (except income and war-profits taxes), or of its Territories or possessions, or any foreign country, or by the authority of any State, county, school district, or municipality, or other taxing subdivision of any State, not including those assessed against local benefits;

Fourth. Losses actually sustained during the year, incurred in his business or trade, or arising from fires, storms, shipwreck, or other casualty, and from theft, when such losses are not compensated for by insurance or otherwise: Provided, That for the purpose of ascertaining the loss sustained from the sale or other disposition of property, real, personal, or mixed, acquired before March 1, 1913, the fair market price or value of such property as of March 1, 1913, shall be the basis for determining the amount of such loss sustained;

Fifth. In transactions entered into for profit but not connected with his business or trade, the losses actually sustained therein during the year to an amount not exceeding the profits arising therefrom;

Sixth. Debts due to the taxpayer actually ascertained to be worthless and charged off within the year;

Seventh. A reasonable allowance for the exhaustion, wear, and tear of property arising out of its use or employment in the business or trade;

Eighth. (a) In the case of oil and gas wells a reasonable allowance for actual reduction in flow and production to be ascertained not by the flush flow but by the settled production or regular flow; (b) in the case of mines a reasonable allowance for depletion thereof not to exceed the market value in the mine of the product thereof, which has been mined and sold during the year for which the return and computation are made, such reasonable allowance to be made in the case of both (a) and (b) under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That when the allowances authorized in (a) and (b) shall equal the capital originally invested, or in case of purchase made prior to March 1, 1913, the fair market value as of that date, no further allowance shall be made. No deduction shall be allowed for any amount paid out for new buildings, permanent improvements, or betterments made to increase the value of any property or estate, and no deduction shall be made for any amount of expense of restoring property or making good the exhaustion thereof for which an allowance is or has been made;

Ninth. Contributions or gifts actually made within the year to corporations or associations organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, or educational purposes, or to societies for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, no part of the net income of which inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual, to an amount not in excess of 15 per cent of the taxpayer's taxable net income as computed without the benefit of this paragraph. Such contributions or gifts shall be allowable as deductions only if verified under rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

CREDITS ALLOWED.

(b) For the purpose of the normal tax only the income embraced in a personal return shall be credited with the amount received as dividends upon the stock or from the net earnings of any corporation, joint-stock company, or association, trustee, or insurance company, which is taxable upon its net income as hereinafter provided.

(c) A like credit shall be allowed as to the amount of income, the normal tax upon which has been paid or withheld for payment at the source of the income under the provisions of this title.

NONRESIDENT ALIENS.

SEC. 6. That in computing net income in the case of a nonresident alien—

(a) For the purpose of the tax there shall be allowed as deductions—

First. The necessary expenses actually paid in carrying on any business or trade conducted by him within the United States, not including personal, living, or family expenses;

Second. The proportion of all interest paid within the year by such person on his indebtedness (except on indebtedness incurred for the purchase of obligations or securities the interest upon which is exempt from taxation as income under this title) which the gross amount of his income for the year derived from sources within the United States bears to the gross amount of his income for the year derived from all sources within and without the United States, but this deduction shall be allowed only if such person includes in the return required by section 8 all the information necessary for its calculation;

Third. Taxes paid within the year imposed by the authority of the United States (except income and war-profits taxes) or of its Territories or possessions, or by the authority of any State, county, school district, or municipality, or other taxing subdivision of any State, paid within the United States, not including those assessed against local benefits;

Fourth. Losses actually sustained during the year, incurred in business or trade conducted by him within the United States, and losses of property within the United States arising from fires, storms, shipwreck, or other casualty, and from theft, when such losses are not compensated for by insurance or otherwise: Provided, That for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of such loss or losses sustained in trade, or speculative transactions not in trade, from the same or any kind of property acquired before March 1, 1913, the fair market price or value of such property as of March 1, 1913, shall be the basis for determining the amount of such loss or losses sustained;

Fifth. In transactions entered into for profit but not connected with his business or trade, the losses actually sustained therein during the year to an amount not exceeding the profits arising therefrom in the United States;

Sixth. Debts arising in the course of business or trade conducted by him within the United States due to the taxpayer actually ascertained to be worthless and charged off within the year;

Seventh. A reasonable allowance for the exhaustion, wear, and tear of property within the United States arising out of its use or employment in the business or trade; (a) in the case of oil and gas wells a reasonable allowance for actual reduction in flow and production to be ascertained not by the flush flow, but by the settled production or regular flow; (b) in the case of mines a reasonable allowance for depletion thereof not to exceed the market value in the mine of the product thereof which has been mined and sold during the year for which the return and computation are made, such reasonable allowance to be made in the case of both (a) and (b) under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That when the allowance authorized in (a) and (b) shall equal the capital originally invested, or in case of purchase made prior to March 1, 1913, the fair market value as of that date, no further allowance shall be made. No deduction shall be allowed for any amount paid out for new buildings, permanent improvements, or betterments made to increase the value of any property or estate, and no deduction shall be made for any amount of expense of restoring property or making good the exhaustion thereof for which an allowance is or has been made.

(b) There shall also be allowed the credits specified by subdivisions (b) and (c) of section 5.

(c) A nonresident alien individual shall receive the benefit of the deductions and credits provided for in this section only by filing or causing to be filed with the collector of internal revenue a true and accurate return of his total income, received from all sources, corporate or otherwise, in the United States, in the manner prescribed by this title; and in case of his failure to file such return the collector shall collect the tax on such income, and all property belonging to such nonresident alien individual shall be liable to distraint for the tax.

PERSONAL EXEMPTION.

SEC. 7. That for the purpose of the normal tax only, there shall be allowed as an exemption in the nature of a deduction from the amount of the net income of each citizen or resident of the United States, ascertained as provided herein, the sum of $1,000, plus $1,000 additional if the person making the return be a head of a family or a married man with a wife living with him, or plus the sum of $1,000 additional if the person making the return be a married woman with a husband living with her; but in no event shall this additional exemption of $1,000 be deducted by both a husband and a wife: Provided, That only one deduction of $2,000 shall be made from the aggregate income of both husband and wife when living together: Provided further, That if the person making the return is the head of a family, there shall be an additional exemption of $200 for each child dependent upon such person, if under 18 years of age or if incapable of self-support because mentally or physically defective, but this provision shall operate only in the case of one parent in the same family: Provided further, That guardians or trustees shall be allowed to make this personal exemption as to income derived from the property of which such guardian or trustee has charge in favor of each ward or cestui que trust: Provided further, That in no event shall a ward or cestui que trust be allowed a greater personal exemption than as provided in this section from the amount of net income received from all sources. There shall also be allowed an exemption from the amount of the net income of estates of deceased citizens or residents of the United States during the period of administration or settlement, and of trust or other estates of citizens or residents of the United States the income of which is not distributed annually or regularly under the provisions of subdivision (b) of section 2, the sum of $1,000, including such deductions as are allowed under section 5.

RETURNS.

SEC. 8. (a) The tax shall be computed upon the net income, as thus ascertained, of each person subject thereto, received in each preceding calendar year ending December 31.

(b) On or before the 1st day of March, 1918, and the 1st day of March in each year thereafter, a true and accurate return under oath shall be made by each person of lawful age, except as hereinafter provided, having a net income of $1,000 or over for the taxable year to the collector of internal revenue for the district in which such person has his legal residence or principal place of business, or if there be no legal residence or place of business in the United States, then with the collector of internal revenue at Baltimore, Md., in such form as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe, setting forth specifically the gross amount of income from all separate sources, and from the total thereof deducting the aggregate items of allowances herein authorized: Provided, That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall have authority to grant a reasonable extension of time, in meritorious cases, for filing returns of income by persons residing or traveling abroad who are required to make and file returns of income and who are unable to file said returns on or before March 1 of each year: Provided further, That the aforesaid return may be made by an agent when by reason of illness, absence, or nonresidence the person liable for said return is unable to make and render the same, the agent assuming the responsibility of making the return and incurring penalties provided for erroneous, false, or fraudulent return.

(c) Guardians, trustees, executors, administrators, receivers, conservators, and all persons, corporations, or associations acting in any fiduciary capacity, shall make and render a return of the income of the person, trust, or estate for whom or which they act, and be subject to all the provisions of this title which apply to individuals. Such fiduciary shall make oath that he has sufficient knowledge of the affairs of such person, trust, or estate to enable him to make such return and that the same is, to the best of his knowledge and belief, true and correct, and be subject to all the provisions of this title which apply to individuals: Provided, That a return made by one of two or more joint fiduciaries filed in the district where such fiduciary resides, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, shall be a sufficient compliance with the requirements of this paragraph: Provided further, That no return of income not exceeding $1,000 shall be required except as in this title otherwise provided.

(d) Persons carrying on business in partnership shall be liable for income tax only in their individual capacity, and the share of the profits of the partnership to which any taxable partner would be entitled if the same were divided, whether divided or otherwise, shall be returned for taxation and the tax paid under the provisions of this title: Provided, That from the net distributive interests on which the individual members shall be liable for tax, normal and additional, there shall be excluded (1) their proportionate shares received from interests on the obligations of a State or any political or taxing subdivision thereof, and upon the obligations of the United States (if and to the extent that it is provided in the act authorizing the issue of such obligations of the United States that they are exempt from taxation) and its possessions, and (2) their proportionate shares of amounts paid to individual partners as reasonable salaries or compensation for personal services actually rendered during the taxable year, if such payments are made in accordance with prior agreements and are properly recorded on the books of the partnership; but in no case shall such salaries or compensation be in excess of the salaries or compensation customarily paid for similar services under like responsibilities by corporations engaged in like or similar trades or businesses. With respect to any period from the beginning of the calendar year 1917 (or, if the partnership has fixed its own fiscal year, from the beginning of such fiscal year) to March 1, 1918, where no previous agreement has been made as to salaries or compensation a like allowance shall be made for services actually rendered. In the case of a foreign partnership the allowance shall be limited to those portions of salaries or compensation which are paid for services rendered with respect to trade or business carried on within the United States: Provided further, That for the purpose of computing the normal tax there shall be allowed to the individual members a credit, as provided by section 5, subdivision (b), for their proportionate share of the profits derived from dividends.

Such partnership, when requested by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue or any district collector, shall render a correct return of the earnings, profits, and income of the partnership, except income exempt under section 4 of this act, setting forth the item of the gross income and the deductions and credits allowed by this title, and the names and addresses of the individuals who would be entitled to the net earnings, profits, and income if distributed. A partnership shall have the same privilege of fixing and making returns upon the basis of its own fiscal year as is accorded to corporations under this title. If a fiscal year ends during 1916 or a subsequent calendar year for which there is a rate of tax different from the rate for the preceding calendar year, then (1) the rate for such preceding calendar year shall apply to an amount of each partner's share of such partnership profits equal to the proportion which the part of such fiscal year falling within such calendar year bears to the full fiscal year, and (2) the rate for the calendar year during which such fiscal year ends shall apply to the remainder.

(e) In every return shall be included the income derived from dividends on the capital stock or from the net earnings of any corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company, except that in the case of nonresident aliens such income derived from sources without the United States shall not be included.

(f) An individual keeping accounts upon any basis other than that of actual receipts and disbursements, unless such other basis does not clearly reflect his income, may, subject to regulations made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, make his return upon the basis upon which his accounts are kept, in which case the tax shall be computed upon his income as so returned.

ASSESSMENT AND ADMINISTRATION.

SEC. 9. (a) That all assessments shall be made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and all persons shall be notified of the amount for which they are respectively liable on or before the 1st day of June of each successive year, and said amounts shall be paid on or before the 15th day of June, except in cases of refusal or neglect to make such returns and in cases of erroneous, false, or fraudulent returns, in which cases the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall, upon the discovery thereof, at any time within three years after said return is due, or has been made, make a return upon information obtained as provided for in this title or by existing law, or require the necessary corrections to be made, and the assessment made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue thereon shall be paid by such person or persons immediately upon notification of the amount of such assessment; and to any sum or sums due and unpaid after the 15th day of June in any year, and for 10 days after notice and demand thereof by the collector, there shall be added the sum of 5 per cent on the amount of tax unpaid, and interest at the rate of 1 per cent per month upon said tax from the time the same became due, except from the estates of insane, deceased, or insolvent persons.

(b) All persons, firms, copartnerships, companies, corporations, joint-stock companies or associations, and insurance companies, in whatever capacity acting, including lessees or mortgagors of real or personal property, trustees acting in any trust capacity, executors, administrators, receivers, conservators, employers, and all officers and employees of the United States having the control, receipt, custody, disposal, or payment of interest, rent, salaries, wages, premiums, annuities, compensation, remuneration, emoluments, or other fixed or determinable annual or periodical gains, profits, and income of any nonresident alien individual, other than income derived from dividends on capital stock, or from the net earnings of a corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company, which is taxable upon its net income as provided in this title, are hereby authorized and required to deduct and withhold from such annual or periodical gains, profits, and income such sum as will be sufficient to pay the normal tax imposed thereon by this title, and shall make return thereof on or before March 1 of each year and, on or before the time fixed by law for the payment of the tax, shall pay the amount withheld to the officer of the United States Government authorized to receive the same; and they are each hereby made personally liable for such tax, and they are each hereby indemnified against every person, corporation, partnership, association, or insurance company, or demand whatsoever for all payments which they shall make in pursuance and by virtue of this title.

(c) The amount of the normal tax hereinbefore imposed shall also be deducted and withheld from fixed or determinable annual or periodical gains, profits, and income derived from interest upon bonds and mortgages, or deeds of trust or other similar obligations of corporations, joint-stock companies, associations, and insurance companies (if such bonds, mortgages, or other obligations contain a contract or provision by which the obligor agrees to pay any portion of the tax imposed by this title upon the obligee or to reimburse the obligee for any portion of the tax or to pay the interest without deduction for any tax which the obligor may be required or permitted to pay thereon or to retain therefrom under any law of the United States), whether payable annually or at shorter or longer periods and whether such interest is payable to a nonresident alien individual or to an individual citizen or resident of the United States, subject to the provisions of the foregoing subdivision (b) of this section requiring the tax to be withheld at the source and deducted from annual income and returned and paid to the Government, unless the person entitled to receive such interest shall file with the withholding agent, on or before February 1, a signed notice in writing claiming the benefit of an exemption under section 7 of this title.

(d) All persons, corporations, partnerships, or associations undertaking as a matter of business or for profit the collection of foreign payments of interest or dividends by means of coupons, checks, or bills of exchange shall obtain a license from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and shall be subject to such regulations enabling the Government to obtain the information required under this title as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe; and whoever knowingly undertakes to collect such payments as aforesaid without having obtained a license therefor, or without complying with such regulations, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and for each offense be fined in a sum not exceeding $5,000, or imprisoned for a term not exceeding one year, or both, in the discretion of the court.

(e) The tax herein imposed upon gains, profits, and incomes not falling under the foregoing and not returned and paid by virtue of the foregoing or as otherwise provided by law shall be assessed by personal return under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury. The intent and purpose of this title is that all gains, profits, and income of a taxable class, as defined by this title, shall be charged and assessed with the corresponding tax, normal and additional, prescribed by this title, and said tax shall be paid by the owner of such income, or the proper representative having the receipt, custody, control, or disposal of the same. For the purpose of this title ownership or liability shall be determined as of the year for which a return is required to be rendered.

The provisions of this section, except subdivision (c), relating to the deduction and payment of the tax at the source of income, shall only apply to the normal tax hereinbefore imposed upon nonresident alien individuals.

Part II.—On corporations.

SEC. 10. (a) That there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid annually upon the total net income received in the preceding calendar year from all sources by every corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company organized in the United States, no matter how created or organized, but not including partnerships, a tax of 8 per cent upon such income; and a like tax shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid annually upon the total net income received in the preceding calendar year from all sources within the United States by every corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company organized, authorized, or existing under the laws of any foreign country, including interest on bonds, notes, or other interest-bearing obligations of residents, corporate or otherwise, and including the income derived from dividends on capital stock or from net earnings of resident corporations, joint-stock companies or associations, or insurance companies whose net income is taxable under this title.

The foregoing tax rate shall apply to the total net income received by every taxable corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company in the calendar year 1917 and in each year thereafter, except that if it has fixed its own fiscal year under the provisions of existing law, the foregoing rate shall apply to the proportion of the total net income returned for the fiscal year ending prior to December 31, 1917, which the period between January 1, 1917, and the end of such fiscal year bears to the whole of such fiscal year, and the rate fixed in section 10 of the act approved September 8, 1916, entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," shall apply to the remaining portion of the total net income returned for such fiscal year.

For the purpose of ascertaining the gain derived or loss sustained from the sale or other disposition by a corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company of property, real, personal, or mixed, acquired before March 1, 1913, the fair market price or value of such property as of March 1, 1913, shall be the basis for determining the amount of such gain derived or loss sustained.

(b) In addition to the income tax imposed by subdivision (a) of this section there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid annually an additional tax of 10 per cent upon the amount, remaining undistributed six months after the end of each calendar or fiscal year, of the total net income of every corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company, received during the year, as determined for the purposes of the tax imposed by such subdivision (a), but not including the amount of any income taxes paid by it within the year imposed by the authority of the United States.

The tax imposed by this subdivision shall not apply to that portion of such undistributed net income which is actually invested and employed in the business or is retained for employment in the reasonable requirements of the business or is invested in obligations of the United States issued after September 1, 1917: Provided, That if the Secretary of the Treasury ascertains and finds that any portion of such amount so retained at any time for employment in the business is not so employed or is not reasonably required in the business a tax of 15 per cent shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid thereon.

The foregoing tax rates shall apply to the undistributed net income received by every taxable corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company in the calendar year 1917 and in each year thereafter, except that if it has fixed its own fiscal year under the provisions of existing law, the foregoing rates shall apply to the proportion of the taxable undistributed net income returned for the fiscal year ending prior to December 31, 1917, which the period between January 1, 1917, and the end of such fiscal year bears to the whole of such fiscal year.

(c) The taxes imposed by this section shall not apply to any corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company whose net income is less than $2,000, nor to any foreign corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company whose net income from sources within the United States is less than $2,000.

CONDITIONAL AND OTHER EXEMPTIONS.

SEC. 11. (a) That there shall not be taxed under this title any income received by any—

First. Labor, agricultural, or horticultural organization;

Second. Mutual savings bank not having a capital stock represented by shares;

Third. Fraternal beneficiary society, order, or association operating under the lodge system or for the exclusive benefit of the members of a fraternity itself operating under the lodge system and providing for the payment of life, sick, accident, or other benefits to the members of such society, order, or association or their dependents;

Fourth. Domestic building and loan association and cooperative banks without capital stock organized and operated for mutual purposes and without profit;

Fifth. Cemetery company owned and operated exclusively for the benefit of its members;

Sixth. Corporation or association organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, or educational purposes, no part of the net income of which inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual;

Seventh. Business league, chamber of commerce, or board of trade not organized for profit and no part of the net income of which inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual;

Eighth. Civic league or organization not organized for profit but operated exclusively for the promotion of social welfare;

Ninth. Club organized and operated exclusively for pleasure, recreation, and other nonprofitable purposes, no part of the net income of which inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or member;

Tenth. Farmers' or other mutual hail, cyclone, or fire insurance company, mutual ditch or irrigation company, mutual or cooperative telephone company, or like organization of a purely local character, the income of which consists solely of assessments, dues, and fees collected from members for the sole purpose of meeting its expenses;

Eleventh. Farmers', fruit growers', or like association, organized and operated as a sales agent for the purpose of marketing the products of its members and turning back to them the proceeds of sales, less the necessary selling expenses, on the basis of the quantity of produce furnished by them;

Twelfth. Corporation or association organized for the exclusive purpose of holding title to property, collecting income therefrom, and turning over the entire amount thereof, less expenses, to an organization which itself is exempt from the tax imposed by this title; or

Thirteenth. Federal land banks and national farm-loan associations as provided in section 26 of the act approved July 17, 1916, entitled "An act to provide capital for agricultural development, to create standard forms of investment based upon farm mortgage, to equalize rates of interest upon farm loans, to furnish a market for United States bonds, to create Government depositaries and financial agents for the United States, and for other purposes."

Fourteenth. Joint-stock land banks as to income derived from bonds or debentures of other joint-stock land banks or any Federal land bank belonging to such joint-stock land bank.

(b) There shall not be taxed under this title any income derived from any public utility or from the exercise of any essential governmental function accruing to any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or any political subdivision of a State or Territory, nor any income accruing to the government of the Philippine Islands or Porto Rico, or of any political subdivision of the Philippine Islands or Porto Rico: Provided, That whenever any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or any political subdivision of a State or Territory, has, prior to the passage of this title, entered in good faith into a contract with any person or corporation, the object and purpose of which is to acquire, construct, operate, or maintain a public utility, no tax shall be levied under the provisions of this title upon the income derived from the operation of such public utility, so far as the payment thereof will impose a loss or burden upon such State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or a political subdivision of a State or Territory; but this provision is not intended to confer upon such person or corporation any financial gain or exemption or to relieve such person or corporation from the payment of a tax as provided for in this title upon the part or portion of the said income to which such person or corporation shall be entitled under such contract.

DEDUCTIONS.

SEC. 12. (a) In the case of a corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company, organized in the United States, such net income shall be ascertained by deducting from the gross amount of its income received within the year from all sources—

First. All the ordinary and necessary expenses paid within the year in the maintenance and operation of its business and properties, including rentals or other payments required to be made as a condition to the continued use or possession of property to which the corporation has not taken or is not taking title, or in which it has no equity.

Second. All losses actually sustained and charged off within the year and not compensated by insurance or otherwise, including a reasonable allowance for the exhaustion, wear, and tear of property arising out of its use or employment in the business or trade; (a) in the case of oil and gas wells reasonable allowance for actual reduction in flow and production, to be ascertained not by the flush flow, but by the settled production or regular flow; (b) in the case of mines a reasonable allowance for depletion thereof, not to exceed the market value in the mine of the product thereof which has been mined and sold during the year for which the return and computation are made, such reasonable allowance to be made in the case of both (a) and (b) under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That when the allowance authorized in (a) and (b) shall equal the capital originally invested, or in case of purchase made prior to March 1, 1913, the fair market value as of that date, no further allowance shall be made; and (c) in the case of insurance companies, the net addition, if any, required by law to be made within the year to reserve funds and the sums other than dividends paid within the year on policy and annuity contracts: Provided, That no deduction shall be allowed for any amount paid out for new buildings, permanent improvements, or betterments made to increase the value of any property or estate, and no deduction shall be made for any amount of expense of restoring property or making good the exhaustion thereof for which an allowance is or has been made: Provided further, That mutual fire and mutual employers' liability and mutual workmen's compensation and mutual casualty insurance companies requiring their members to make premium deposits to provide for losses and expenses shall not return as income any portion of the premium deposits returned to their policyholders, but shall return as taxable income all income received by them from all other sources plus such portions of the premium deposits as are retained by the companies for purposes other than the payment of losses and expenses and reinsurance reserves: Provided further, That mutual marine insurance companies shall include in their return of gross income gross premiums collected and received by them, less amounts paid for reinsurance, but shall be entitled to include in deductions from gross income amounts repaid to policyholders on account of premiums previously paid by them and interest paid upon such amounts between the ascertainment thereof and the payment thereof, and life insurance companies shall not include as income in any year such portion of any actual premium received from any individual policyholder as shall have been paid back or credited to such individual policyholder, or treated as an abatement of premium of such individual policyholder, within such year.

Third. The amount of interest paid within the year on its indebtedness (except on indebtedness incurred for the purchase of obligations or securities the interest upon which is exempt from taxation as income under this title).

Fourth. Taxes paid within the year imposed by the authority of the United States (except income and excess profits taxes), or of its Territories or possessions, or any foreign country, or by the authority of any State, county, school district, or municipality, or other taxing subdivision of any State, not including those assessed against local benefits: Provided, That in the case of bonds or other indebtedness, which have been issued with a guaranty that the interest payable thereon shall be free from taxation, no deduction for the payment of the tax herein imposed, or any other tax paid pursuant to such guaranty, shall be allowed.

(b) In the case of a corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company, organized, authorized, or existing under the laws of any foreign country, such net income shall be ascertained by deducting from the gross amount of its income received within the year from all sources within the United States—

First. All the ordinary and necessary expenses actually paid within the year out of earnings in the maintenance and operation of its business and property within the United States, including rentals or other payments required to be made as a condition to the continued use or possession of property to which the corporation has not taken or is not taking title, or in which it has no equity;

Second. All losses actually sustained within the year in business or trade conducted by it within the United States and not compensated by insurance or otherwise, including a reasonable allowance for the exhaustion, wear, and tear of property arising out of its use or employment in the business or trade; (a) and in the case (a) of oil and gas wells a reasonable allowance for actual reduction in flow and production to be ascertained not by the flush flow, but by the settled production or regular flow; (b) in the case of mines a reasonable allowance for depletion thereof not to exceed the market value in the mine of the product thereof which has been mined and sold during the year for which the return and computation are made, such reasonable allowance to be made in the case of both (a) and (b) under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That when the allowance authorized in (a) and (b) shall equal the capital originally invested, or in case of purchase made prior to March 1, 1913, the fair market value as of that date, no further allowance shall be made; and (c) in the case of insurance companies, the net addition, if any, required by law to be made within the year to reserve funds and the sums other than dividends paid within the year on policy and annuity contracts: Provided, That no deduction shall be allowed for any amount paid out for new buildings, permanent improvements, or betterments, made to increase the value of any property or estate, and no deductions shall be made for any amount of expense of restoring property or making good the exhaustion thereof for which an allowance is or has been made: Provided, further, That mutual fire and mutual employers' liability and mutual workmen's compensation and mutual casualty insurance companies requiring their members to make premium deposits to provide for losses and expenses shall not return as income any portion of the premium deposits returned to their policyholders, but shall return as taxable income all income received by them from all other sources plus such portions of the premium deposits as are retained by the companies for purposes other than the payment of losses and expenses and reinsurance reserves: Provided further, That mutual marine insurance companies shall include in their return of gross income gross premiums collected and received by them less amounts paid for reinsurance, but shall be entitled to include in deductions from gross income amounts repaid to policyholders on account of premiums previously paid by them, and interest paid upon such amounts between the ascertainment thereof and the payment thereof, and life insurance companies shall not include as income in any year such portion of any actual premium received from any individual policyholder as shall have been paid back or credited to such individual policyholder, or treated as an abatement of premium of such individual policyholder, within such year;

Third. The amount of interest paid within the year on its indebtedness (except on indebtedness incurred for the purchase of obligations or securities the interest upon which is exempt from taxation as income under this title) to an amount of such indebtedness not in excess of the proportion thereof which its net income from sources within the United States bears to its entire net income;

Fourth. Taxes paid within the year imposed by the authority of the United States (except income and excess-profits taxes), or of its Territories, or possessions, or by the authority of any State, county, school district, or municipality, or other taxing subdivision of any State, paid within the United States, not including those assessed against local benefits: Provided, That in the case of bonds or other indebtedness which have been issued with a guaranty that the interest payable thereon shall be free from taxation, no deduction for the payment of the tax herein imposed or any other tax paid pursuant to such guaranty shall be allowed.

(c) In the case of assessment insurance companies, whether domestic or foreign, the actual deposit of sums with State or Territorial officers, pursuant to law, as additions to guarantee or reserve funds shall be treated as being payments required by law to reserve funds.

RETURNS.

SEC. 13. (a) The tax shall be computed upon the net income, as thus ascertained, received within each preceding calendar year ending December 31: Provided, That any corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company, subject to this tax, may designate the last day of any month in the year as the day of the closing of its fiscal year and shall be entitled to have the tax payable by it computed upon the basis of the net income ascertained as herein provided for the year ending on the day so designated in the year preceding the date of assessment instead of upon the basis of the net income for the calendar year preceding the date of assessment; and it shall give notice of the day it has thus designated as the closing of its fiscal year to the collector of the district in which its principal business office is located at any time not less than 30 days prior to the 1st day of March of the year in which its return would be filed if made upon the basis of the calendar year;

(b) Every corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company, subject to the tax herein imposed, shall, on or before the 1st day of March, 1918, and the 1st day of March in each year thereafter, or, if it has designated a fiscal year for the computation of its tax, then within 60 days after the close of such fiscal year ending prior to December 31, 1916, and the close of each such fiscal year thereafter, render a true and accurate return of its annual net income in the manner and form to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and containing such facts, data, and information as are appropriate and in the opinion of the commissioner necessary to determine the correctness of the net income returned and to carry out the provisions of this title. The return shall be sworn to by the president, vice president, or other principal officer, and by the treasurer or assistant treasurer. The return shall be made to the collector of the district in which is located the principal office of the corporation, company, or association, where are kept its books of account and other data from which the return is prepared, or in the case of a foreign corporation, company, or association, to the collector of the district in which is located its principal place of business in the United States, or if it have no principal place of business, office, or agency in the United States, then to the collector of internal revenue at Baltimore, Md. All such returns shall as received be transmitted forthwith by the collector to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

(c) In cases wherein receivers, trustees in bankruptcy, or assignees are operating the property or business of corporations, joint-stock companies or associations, or insurance companies, subject to tax imposed by this title, such receivers, trustees, or assignees shall make returns of net income as and for such corporations, joint-stock companies or associations, and insurance companies, in the same manner and form as such organizations are hereinbefore required to make returns, and any income tax due on the basis of such returns made by receivers, trustees, or assignees shall be assessed and collected in the same manner as if assessed directly against the organizations of whose businesses or properties they have custody and control;

(d) A corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company keeping accounts upon any basis other than that of actual receipts and disbursements, unless such other basis does not clearly reflect its income, may, subject to regulations made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, make its return upon the basis upon which its accounts are kept, in which case the tax shall be computed upon its income as so returned;

(e) All the provisions of this title relating to the tax authorized and required to be deducted and withheld and paid to the officer of the United States Government authorized to receive the same from the income of nonresident alien individuals from sources within the United States shall be made applicable to the tax imposed by subdivision (a) of section 10 upon incomes derived from interest upon bonds and mortgages or deeds of trust or similar obligations of domestic or other resident corporations, joint-stock companies or associations, and insurance companies by nonresident alien firms, copartnerships, companies, corporations, joint-stock companies or associations, and insurance companies not engaged in business or trade within the United States and not having any office or place of business therein.

(f) Likewise all the provisions of this title relating to the tax authorized and required to be deducted and withheld and paid to the officer of the United States Government authorized to receive the same from the income of nonresident alien individuals from sources within the United States shall be made applicable to income derived from dividends upon the capital stock or from the net earnings of domestic or other resident corporations, joint-stock companies or associations, and insurance companies by nonresident alien companies, corporations, joint-stock companies or associations, and insurance companies not engaged in business or trade within the United States and not having any office or place of business therein.

ASSESSMENT AND ADMINISTRATION.

SEC. 14. (a) All assessments shall be made and the several corporations, joint-stock companies or associations, and insurance companies shall be notified of the amount for which they are respectively liable on or before the 1st day of June of each successive year, and said assessment shall be paid on or before the 15th day of June: Provided, That every corporation, joint-stock company or association, and insurance company computing taxes upon the income of the fiscal year which it may designate in the manner hereinbefore provided shall pay the taxes due under its assessment within 105 days after the date upon which it is required to file its list or return of income for assessment, except in cases of refusal or neglect to make such return and in cases of erroneous, false, or fraudulent returns, in which cases the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall, upon the discovery thereof, at any time within three years after said return is due, make a return upon information obtained as provided for in this title or by existing law, and the assessment made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue thereon shall be paid by such corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company immediately upon notification of the amount of such assessment, and to any sum or sums due and unpaid after the 15th day of June in any one year, or after 105 days from the date on which the return of income is required to be made by the taxpayer, and after 10 days' notice and demand thereof by the collector, there shall be added the sum of 5 per cent on the amount of tax unpaid and interest at the rate of 1 per cent per month upon said tax from the time the same becomes due: Provided, That upon the examination of any return of income made pursuant to this title, the act of August 5, 1909, entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," the act of October 3, 1913, entitled "An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," and the act of September 8, 1916, entitled "An act to increase the revenues, and for other purposes," if it shall appear that amounts of tax have been paid in excess of those properly due the taxpayer shall be permitted to present a claim for refund thereof notwithstanding the provisions of section 3228 of the Revised Statutes;

(b) When the assessment shall be made, as provided in this title, the returns, together with any corrections thereof which may have been made by the commissioner, shall be filed in the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and shall constitute public records and be open to inspection as such: Provided, That any and all such returns shall be open to inspection only upon the order of the President, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury and approved by the President: Provided further, That the proper officers of any State imposing a general income tax may, upon the request of the governor thereof, have access to said returns or to an abstract thereof, showing the name and income of each such corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company, at such times and in such manner as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

(c) If any of the corporations, joint-stock companies or associations, or insurance companies aforesaid shall refuse or neglect to make a return at the time or times hereinbefore specified in each year, or shall render a false or fraudulent return, such corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company shall be liable to a penalty of not exceeding $10,000: Provided, That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall have authority, in the case of either corporations or individuals, to grant a reasonable extension of time in meritorious cases as he may deem proper.

(d) That section 3225 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 3225. When a second assessment is made in case of any list, statement, or return, which in the opinion of the collector or deputy collector was false or fraudulent, or contained any understatement or undervaluation, no tax collected under such assessment shall be recovered by any suit unless it is proved that the said list, statement, or return was not false nor fraudulent and did not contain any understatement or undervaluation; but this section shall not apply to statements or returns made or to be made in good faith under the laws of the United States regarding annual depreciation of oil or gas wells and mines."

Part III.—General Administrative Provisions.

SEC. 15. That the word "State" or "United States" when used in this title shall be construed to include any Territory, the District of Columbia, Porto Rico, and the Philippine Islands, when such construction is necessary to carry out its provisions.

SEC. 16. That sections 3167, 3172, 3173, and 3176 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as amended are hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 3167. It shall be unlawful for any collector, deputy collector, agent, clerk, or other officer or employee of the United States to divulge or to make known in any manner whatever not provided by law to any person the operations, style of work, or apparatus of any manufacturer or producer visited by him in the discharge of his official duties, or the amount or source of income, profits, losses, expenditures, or any particular thereof, set forth or disclosed in any income return, or to permit any income return or copy thereof or any book containing any abstract or particulars thereof to be seen or examined by any person except as provided by law; and it shall be unlawful for any person to print or publish in any manner whatever not provided by law any income return or any part thereof or source of income, profits, losses, or expenditures appearing in any income return; and any offense against the foregoing provision shall be a misdemeanor and be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both, at the discretion of the court; and if the offender be an officer or employee of the United States he shall be dismissed from office or discharged from employment.

"SEC. 3172. Every collector shall, from time to time, cause his deputies to proceed through every part of his district and inquire after and concerning all persons therein who are liable to pay any internal-revenue tax, and all persons owning or having the care and management of any objects liable to pay any tax, and to make a list of such persons and enumerate such objects.

"SEC. 3173. It shall be the duty of any person, partnership, firm, association, or corporation, made liable to any duty, special tax, or other tax imposed by law, when not otherwise provided for, (1) in case of a special tax, on or before the 31st day of July in each year, (2) in case of income tax on or before the 1st day of March in each year, or on or before the last day of the 60-day period next following the closing date of the fiscal year for which it makes a return of its income, and (3) in other cases before the day on which the taxes accrue, to make a list or return, verified by oath, to the collector or a deputy collector of the district where located, of the articles or objects, including the amount of annual income charged with a duty or tax, the quantity of goods, wares, and merchandise made or sold and charged with a tax, the several rates and aggregate amount, according to the forms and regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, for which such person, partnership, firm, association, or corporation is liable: Provided, That if any person liable to pay any duty or tax, or owning, possessing, or having the care or management of property, goods, wares, and merchandise, article, or objects liable to pay any duty, tax, or license, shall fail to make and exhibit a list or return required by law, but shall consent to disclose the particulars of any and all the property, goods, wares, and merchandise, articles, and objects liable to pay any duty or tax, or any business or occupation liable to pay any tax as aforesaid, then, and in that case, it shall be the duty of the collector or deputy collector to make such list or return, which, being distinctly read, consented to, and signed and verified by oath by the person so owning, possessing, or having the care and management as aforesaid, may be received as the list of such person: Provided further, That in case no annual list or return has been rendered by such person to the collector or deputy collector as required by law, and the person shall be absent from his or her residence or place of business at the time the collector or a deputy collector shall call for the annual list or return, it shall be the duty of such collector or deputy collector to leave at such place of residence or business, with some one of suitable age and discretion, if such be present, otherwise to deposit in the nearest post office, a note or memorandum addressed to such person, requiring him or her to render to such collector or deputy collector the list or return required by law within 10 days from the date of such note or memorandum, verified by oath. And if any person, on being notified or required as aforesaid, shall refuse or neglect to render such list or return within the time required as aforesaid, or whenever any person who is required to deliver a monthly or other return of objects subject to tax fails to do so at the time required, or delivers any return which, in the opinion of the collector, is erroneous, false, or fraudulent, or contains any undervaluation or understatement, or refuses to allow any regularly authorized Government officer to examine the books of such person, firm, or corporation, it shall be lawful for the collector to summon such person, or any other person having possession, custody, or care of books of account containing entries relating to the business of such person, or any other person he may deem proper, to appear before him and produce such books at a time and place named in the summons, and to give testimony or answer interrogatories, under oath, respecting any objects or income liable to tax or the returns thereof. The collector may summon any person residing or found within the State or Territory in which his district lies; and when the person intended to be summoned does not reside and can not be found within such State or Territory, he may enter any collection district where such person may be found and there make the examination herein authorized. And to this end he may there exercise all the authority which he might lawfully exercise in the district for which he was commissioned: Provided, That 'person,' as used in this section, shall be construed to include any corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company when such construction is necessary to carry out its provisions.

"SEC. 3176. If any person, corporation, company, or association fails to make and file a return or list at the time prescribed by law, or makes, willfully or otherwise, a false or fraudulent return or list, the collector or deputy collector shall make the return or list from his own knowledge and from such information as he can obtain through testimony or otherwise. Any return or list so made and subscribed by a collector or deputy collector shall be prima facie good and sufficient for all legal purposes.

"If the failure to file a return or list is due to sickness or absence the collector may allow such further time, not exceeding 30 days, for making and filing the return or list as he deems proper.

"The Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall assess all taxes, other than stamp taxes, as to which returns or lists are so made by a collector or deputy collector. In case of any failure to make and file a return or list within the time prescribed by law or by the collector, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall add to the tax 50 per cent of its amount, except that when a return is voluntarily and without notice from the collector filed after such time and it is shown that the failure to file it was due to a reasonable cause, and not to willful neglect, no such addition shall be made to the tax. In case a false or fraudulent return or list is willfully made the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall add to the tax 100 per cent of its amount.

"The amount so added to any tax shall be collected at the same time and in the same manner and as part of the tax, unless the tax has been paid before the discovery of the neglect, falsity, or fraud, in which case the amount so added shall be collected in the same manner as the tax."

SEC. 17. That it shall be the duty of every collector of internal revenue to whom any payment of any taxes is made under the provisions of this title to give to the person making such payment a full written or printed receipt, expressing the amount paid and the particular account for which such payment was made; and whenever such payment is made such collector shall, if required, give a separate receipt for each tax paid by any debtor, on account of payments made to or to be made by him to separate creditors in such form that such debtor can conveniently produce the same separately to his several creditors in satisfaction of their respective demands to the amounts specified in such receipts; and such receipts shall be sufficient evidence in favor of such debtor to justify him in withholding the amount therein expressed from his next payment to his creditor; but such creditor may, upon giving to his debtor a full written receipt, acknowledging the payment to him of whatever sum may be actually paid, and accepting the amount of tax paid as aforesaid (specifying the same) as a further satisfaction of the debt to that amount, require the surrender to him of such collector's receipt.

SEC. 18. That any person, corporation, partnership, association, or insurance company liable to pay the tax, to make a return or to supply information required under this title, who refuses or neglects to pay such tax, to make such return or to supply such information at the time or times herein specified in each year, shall be liable, except as otherwise specially provided in this title, to a penalty of not less than $20 nor more than $1,000. Any individual or any officer of any corporation, partnership, association, or insurance company required by law to make, render, sign, or verify any return, or to supply any information, who makes any false or fraudulent return or statement with intent to defeat or evade the assessment required by this title to be made, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be fined not exceeding $2,000 or be imprisoned not exceeding one year, or both, in the discretion of the court, with the costs of prosecution: Provided, That where any tax heretofore due and payable has been duly paid by the taxpayer it shall not be re-collected from any withholding agent required to retain it at its source; nor shall any penalty be imposed or collected in such cases from the taxpayer, or such withholding agent whose duty it was to retain it, for failure to return or pay the same, unless such failure was fraudulent and for the purpose of evading payment.

SEC. 19. The collector or deputy collector shall require every return to be verified by the oath of the party rendering it. If the collector or deputy collector have reason to believe that the amount of any income returned is understated, he shall give due notice to the person making the return to show cause why the amount of the return should not be increased, and upon proof of the amount understated may increase the same accordingly. Such person may furnish sworn testimony to prove any relevant facts, and, if dissatisfied with the decision of the collector, may appeal to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for his decision under such rules of procedure as may be prescribed by regulation.

SEC. 20. That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the district courts of the United States for the district within which any person summoned under this title to appear to testify or to produce books shall reside, to compel such attendance, production of books, and testimony by appropriate process.

SEC. 21. That the preparation and publication of statistics reasonably available with respect to the operation of the income-tax law and containing classifications of taxpayers and of income, the amounts allowed as deductions and exemptions, and any other facts deemed pertinent and valuable, shall be made annually by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 22. That all administrative, special, and general provisions of law, including the laws in relation to the assessment, remission, collection, and refund of internal-revenue taxes not heretofore specifically repealed and not inconsistent with the provisions of this title, are hereby extended and made applicable to all the provisions of this title and to the tax herein imposed.

SEC. 23. That the provisions of this title shall extend to Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands: Provided, That the administration of the law and the collection of the taxes imposed in Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands shall be by the appropriate internal-revenue officers of those governments, and all revenues collected in Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands thereunder shall accrue intact to the general governments thereof, respectively: Provided further, That the jurisdiction in this title conferred upon the district courts of the United States shall, so far as the Philippine Islands are concerned, be vested in the courts of the first instance of said islands: And provided further, That nothing in this title shall be held to exclude from the computation of the net income the compensation paid any official by the governments of the District of Columbia, Porto Rico, and the Philippine Islands, or the political subdivisions thereof.

SEC. 24. That Section II of the act approved October 3, 1913, entitled "An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," and Title I of the act entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," approved September 8, 1916, as amended, are hereby repealed, except as herein otherwise provided, and except that they shall remain in force for the assessment and collection of all taxes which have accrued thereunder, and for the imposition and collection of all penalties or forfeitures which have accrued or may accrue in relation to any of such taxes, and except that the unexpended balance of any appropriation heretofore made and now available for the administration thereof or any provision thereof shall be available for the administration of this title or the corresponding provision thereof. Title I of the act entitled "An act to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes," is hereby repealed.

SEC. 25. That income on which has been assessed the tax imposed by Section II of the act entitled "An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1913, shall not be considered as income within the meaning of this title: Provided, That this section shall not conflict with that portion of section 10, of this title, under which a taxpayer has fixed its own fiscal year.

SEC. 26. Every corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company subject to the tax herein imposed, when required by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, shall render a correct return, duly verified under oath, of its payments of dividends, whether made in cash or its equivalent or in stock, including the names and addresses of stockholders and the number of shares owned by each, and the tax years and the applicable amounts in which such dividends were earned, in such form and manner as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 27. That every person, corporation, partnership, or association, doing business as a broker on any exchange or board of trade or other similar place of business shall, when required by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, render a correct return duly verified under oath, under such rules and regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe, showing the names of customers for whom such person, corporation, partnership, or association has transacted any business, with such details as to the profits, losses, or other information which the commissioner may require, as to each of such customers, as will enable the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to determine whether all income tax due on profits or gains of such customers has been paid.

SEC. 28. That all persons, corporations, partnerships, associations, and insurance companies, in whatever capacity acting, including lessees or mortgagors of real or personal property, trustees acting in any trust capacity, executors, administrators, receivers, conservators, and employers, making payment to another person, corporation, partnership, association, or insurance company, of interest, rent, salaries, wages, premiums, annuities, compensation, remuneration, emoluments, or other fixed or determinable gains, profits, and income (other than payments described in sections 26 and 27) of $800 or more in any taxable year, or, in the case of such payments made by the United States the officers or employees of the United States having information as to such payments and required to make returns in regard thereto by the regulations hereinafter provided for, are hereby authorized and required to render a true and accurate return to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under such rules and regulations and in such form and manner as may be prescribed by him, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, setting forth the amount of such gains, profits, and income, and the name and address of the recipient of such payment: Provided, That such returns shall be required, regardless of amounts, in the case of payments of interest upon bonds and mortgages or deeds of trust or other similar obligations of corporations, joint-stock companies, associations, and insurance companies, and in the case of collections of items (not payable in the United States) of interest upon the bonds of foreign countries and interest from the bonds and dividends from the stock of foreign corporations by persons, corporations, partnerships, or associations, undertaking as a matter of business or for profit the collection of foreign payments of such interest or dividends by means of coupons, checks, or bills of exchange.

When necessary to make effective the provisions of this section, the name and address of the recipient of income shall be furnished upon demand of the person, corporation, partnership, association, or insurance company paying the income.

The provisions of this section shall apply to the calendar year 1917 and each calendar year thereafter, but shall not apply to the payment of interest on obligations of the United States.

SEC. 29. That in assessing income tax the net income embraced in the return shall also be credited with the amount of any war-profits tax imposed by act of Congress and assessed for the same calendar or fiscal year upon the taxpayer, and, in the case of a member of a partnership, with his proportionate share of such war-profits tax imposed upon the partnership.

SEC. 30. That nothing in section 2 of the act approved October 3, 1913, entitled "An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," or in Title I of the act approved September 8, 1916, entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," or in this title, shall be construed as taxing the income of foreign governments received from investments in the United States in stocks, bonds, or other domestic securities owned by such foreign governments, or from interest on deposits in banks in the United States of moneys belonging to foreign governments.

SEC. 31. (a) That the term "dividends" as used in this title shall be held to mean any distribution made or ordered to be made by a corporation, joint-stock company, association, or insurance company out of its earnings or profits accrued since March 1, 1913, and payable to its shareholders, whether in cash or in stock of the corporation, joint-stock company, association, or insurance company, which stock dividend shall be considered income, to the amount of the earnings or profits so distributed.

(b) Any distribution made to the shareholders or members of a corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company, in the year 1917 or subsequent tax years, shall be deemed to have been made from the most recently accumulated undivided profits or surplus, and shall constitute a part of the annual income of the distributee for the year in which received, and shall be taxed to the distributee at the rates prescribed by law for the years in which such profits or surplus were accumulated by the corporation, joint-stock company, association, or insurance company, but nothing herein shall be construed as taxing any earnings or profits accrued prior to March 1, 1913, but such earnings or profits may be distributed in stock dividends or otherwise, exempt from the tax, after the distribution of earnings and profits accrued since March 1, 1913, has been made. This subdivision shall not apply to any distribution made prior to August 6, 1917, out of earnings or profits accrued prior to March 1, 1913.

SEC. 32. That premiums paid on life insurance policies covering the lives of officers, employees, or those financially interested in any trade or business conducted by an individual, partnership, corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company shall not be deducted in computing the net income of such individual, corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company, or in computing the profits of such partnership for the purposes of subdivision (e) of section 9.

SEC. 33. That any amount heretofore withheld by any withholding agent as required by Title I of the act approved September 8, 1916, entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," on account of the tax imposed upon the income of any individual, a citizen or resident of the United States, for the calendar year 1917, except in the cases covered by subdivision (c) of section 9 of such act, as amended, shall be released and paid over to such individual, and the entire tax upon the income of such individual for such year shall be assessed and collected in the manner prescribed by this title.

TITLE II.—WAR-PROFITS TAX.

SEC. 200. That when used in this title—

The term "corporation" includes joint-stock companies or associations and insurance companies;

The term "domestic" means created under the law of the United States, or of any State, Territory, or District thereof, and the term "foreign" means created under the law of any other possession of the United States or of any foreign country or government;

The term "United States" means only the States, the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii, and the District of Columbia;

The term "taxable year" means the 12 months ending December 31, excepting in the case of a corporation or partnership which has fixed its own fiscal year, in which case it means such fiscal year. The first taxable year shall be the year ending December 31, 1917, except that in the case of a corporation or partnership which has fixed its own fiscal year it shall be the fiscal year ending during the calendar year 1917, in which case the tax for such taxable year shall be that proportion of the tax computed upon the net income during such full fiscal year which the time from January 1, 1917, to the end of such fiscal year bears to the full fiscal year;

The term "net income" means in the case of a foreign corporation or partnership or a nonresident alien individual, the net income received from sources within the United States; and

The term "prewar period" means:

(1) The three of the calendar years 1909, 1910, 1911, 1912, and 1913 remaining after the exclusion of the two calendar years in which the net income of the trade or business was respectively the greatest and the least;

(2) If a corporation or partnership was not in existence or an individual was not engaged in trade or business during the whole of each of such five calendar years, but was in existence or engaged in trade or business during the whole of four of such calendar years, the term means the two of such four years remaining after a like exclusion;

(3) If a corporation or partnership was not in existence or an individual was not engaged in trade or business during the whole of each of four of such calendar years, the term means as many of such calendar years during the whole of which the corporation or partnership was in existence or the individual was engaged in trade or business.

SEC. 201. (a) That this title shall not apply to—

(1) Corporations exempt from tax under the provisions of section 11 of this act, and partnerships and individuals carrying on or doing the same business, or coming within the same description;

(2) Corporations, partnerships, or individuals the net income of whose trade or business for the taxable year is less than $2,000.

(b) This title shall apply to all trades or businesses of whatever description, whether continuously carried on or not, except—

(1) An office or employment;

(2) Agriculture;

(3) A trade or business substantially all the net income of which is derived from personal services and in which capital is not a material income-producing factor;

(4) The business of life, health, and accident insurance combined in one policy issued on the weekly premium-payment plan.

The exception in clause (1), (2), (3), or (4) shall be made only if such trade or business is carried on separately from all other trades or businesses in which the taxpayer is engaged. If the books are so kept that the Secretary of the Treasury is unable satisfactorily to determine the net income of such excepted trade or business, or if he finds that by reason of any improper or artificial method of accounting or other device an undue proportion of the total net income of all the trades and businesses of the taxpayer is ascribed to such trade or business, the exception shall not be made.

(c) For the purposes of this title—

(1) Every corporation or partnership not exempt under subdivision (a) shall be considered to be engaged in trade or business, and all the trades or businesses in which it is engaged (except those exempt under subdivision (b)) shall be treated as a single trade or business, and all its income from whatever source derived (except from a trade or business exempt under subdivision (b)) shall be treated as received from such trade or business;

(2) All the trades or businesses in which an individual is engaged (except those exempt under subdivision (b)) shall be treated as a single trade or business;

(3) A partner shall not be considered to be engaged in trade or business with respect to his share in the profits of the partnership.

SEC. 202. That in addition to the taxes under existing law and under this act there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the income of every corporation, partnership, or individual engaged in trade or business a tax (hereinafter in this title referred to as the tax) equal to the following percentages of the war-profits of such trade or business (determined as hereinafter provided);

Ten per cent of the amount of such war profits not in excess of 10 per cent of the prewar profits of such trade or business (determined as hereinafter provided);

Twelve and one-half per cent of the amount by which such war profits exceed 10 per cent of such prewar profits and do not exceed 20 per cent thereof;

Fifteen per cent of the amount by which such war profits exceed 20 per cent of such prewar profits and do not exceed 30 per cent thereof;

Twenty per cent of the amount by which such war profits exceed 30 per cent of such prewar profits and do not exceed 40 per cent thereof;

Twenty-five per cent of the amount by which such war profits exceed 40 per cent of such prewar profits and do not exceed 50 per cent thereof;

Thirty per cent of the amount by which such war profits exceed 50 per cent of such prewar profits and do not exceed 60 per cent thereof;

Forty per cent of the amount by which such war profits exceed 60 per cent of such prewar profits and do not exceed 70 per cent thereof;

Fifty per cent of the amount by which such war profits exceed 70 per cent of such prewar profits and do not exceed 80 per cent thereof;

Sixty per cent of the amount by which such war profits exceed 80 per cent of such prewar profits and do not exceed 90 per cent thereof;

Seventy per cent of the amount by which such war profits exceed 90 per cent of such prewar profits and do not exceed 100 per cent thereof; and

Eighty per cent of the amount by which such war profits exceed 100 per cent of such prewar profits.

SEC. 203. That for the purposes of this title the war profits shall be determined, except as otherwise in this title provided, by deducting the prewar profits from the net income of the trade or business for the taxable year.

SEC. 204. (a) That for the purposes of this title the prewar profits shall be, except as otherwise in this title provided, the average annual amount of the net income of the trade or business during the prewar period, plus 8 per cent of the amount of new capital and minus 8 per cent of the amount of capital withdrawn.

(b) For the purposes of this section the term "new capital" means: (1) The amount of cash actually paid into the trade or business since December 31, 1913, if employed in the trade or business during the taxable year; (2) the amount of the surplus and undivided profits accumulated since December 31, 1913, if employed in the trade or business during the taxable year; and (3) tangible property paid into the trade or business since December 31, 1913, valued as of the time of such payment, if employed in the trade or business during the taxable year.

If any portion of such new capital has not been employed in the trade or business during the whole of the taxable year, there shall be added, in lieu of the 8 per cent thereon referred to in subdivision (a), the same proportion of such 8 per cent which the part of the taxable year during which such portion of such new capital has been employed bears to the whole taxable year.

(c) For the purposes of this section the term "capital withdrawn" means: (1) Cash paid into the trade or business prior to January 1, 1914, and withdrawn therefrom between December 31, 1913, and the close of the taxable year; (2) surplus or undivided profits accumulated prior to January 1, 1914, and withdrawn from the trade or business between December 31, 1913, and the close of the taxable year; and (3) tangible property paid into the trade or business prior to January 1, 1914, and withdrawn therefrom between December 31, 1913, and the close of the taxable year, valued as of the time of such withdrawal.

If any portion of such capital withdrawn has been employed in the trade or business during any part of the taxable year, there shall be subtracted, in lieu of the 8 per cent thereon referred to in subdivision (a), only the difference between such 8 per cent and 8 per cent per annum on such portion of the capital withdrawn for the part of the taxable year during which it has been employed.

(d) In computing new capital and capital withdrawn in the case of a foreign corporation or partnership or a nonresident alien individual, the term "trade or business" as used in this section means only that portion of the trade or business which is carried on within the United States.

(e) If the Secretary of the Treasury in any case is unable satisfactorily to determine the prewar profits, the war profits and prewar profits shall be determined as provided in section 205.

SEC. 205. (a) That if a corporation, partnership, or individual had no net income from the trade or business during the prewar period, or if a corporation or partnership was not in existence or an individual was not engaged in the trade or business during the whole of any one calendar year during the prewar period, the amount of the war profits shall be the same proportion of the net income of the trade or business for the taxable year as the proportion which the average war profits for such year of representative corporations, partnerships, and individuals engaged in a like or similar trade or business and whose war profits and prewar profits are determined as provided in section 203 and 204 bears to the average net income of the trades or businesses of such corporations, partnerships, and individuals.

(b) The proportion between the war profits and the net income in each trade or business shall be determined by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in accordance with regulations prescribed by him with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. In the case of a corporation or partnership which has fixed its own fiscal year, the proportion determined for the calendar year ending during such fiscal year shall be used.

(c) A trade or business carried on by a corporation, partnership, or individual, although formally organized or reorganized on or after January 2, 1913, which is substantially a continuation of a trade or business carried on prior to that date, shall, for the purposes of this title, be deemed to have been in existence prior to that date, and the net income of its predecessor prior to that date shall be deemed to have been its net income.

(d) In cases where the war profits are determined in accordance with subdivision (a) of this section, the prewar profits shall be determined by deducting the war profits thus determined from the net income of the trade or business for the taxable year.

SEC. 206. (a) That if the Secretary of the Treasury, upon complaint finds either (1) that during the prewar period the net return of any domestic corporation or partnership or a citizen or resident of the United States from a trade or business was low as compared with the net return during the calendar years 1909, 1910, 1911, 1912, and 1913, of representative corporations, partnerships, and individuals engaged in a like or similar trade or business, or (2) that during the prewar period the ratio between the net and gross income from such trade or business was substantially less than the like ratio during the calendar years 1909, 1910, 1911, 1912, and 1913, in case of representative corporations, partnerships, and individuals engaged in a like or similar trade or business, then the war profits and prewar profits of such trade or business shall be determined in the same manner as provided in section 205, and the tax shall be computed separately from the other war profits of the taxpayer.

(b) If the Secretary of the Treasury, upon complaint finds either (1) that during the prewar period the net return of any foreign corporation or partnership or a nonresident alien individual from a trade or business carried on within the United States was low as compared with the net return during the calendar years 1909, 1910, 1911, 1912, and 1913, of representative corporations, partnerships, and individuals engaged in a like or similar trade or business, or (2) that during the prewar period the ratio between the net and gross income from such trade or business was substantially less than the like ratio during the calendar years 1909, 1910, 1911, 1912, and 1913, in case of representative corporations, partnerships, and individuals engaged in a like or similar trade or business, then the war profits and prewar profits of such trade or business shall be determined in the same manner as provided in section 205, and the tax shall be computed separately from the other war profits of the taxpayer.

(c) The tax shall be assessed upon the basis of the war profits and prewar profits determined as provided in section 204, but the taxpayer claiming the benefit of this section may at the time of making the return file a claim for abatement of the amount by which the tax so assessed exceeds a tax at like rate computed upon the basis of war profits and prewar profits determined as provided in this section. In such event collection of the part of the tax covered by such claim for abatement shall not be made until the claim is decided, but if, in the judgment of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, the interests of the United States would be jeopardized thereby he may require the claimant to give a bond in such amount and with such sureties as the commissioner may think wise to safeguard such interests, conditioned for the payment of any tax found to be due, with the interest thereon, and if such bond, satisfactory to the commissioner, is not given within such time as he prescribes, the full amount of tax assessed shall be collected and the amount overpaid, if any, shall upon final decision of the application be refunded as a tax erroneously or illegally collected.

SEC. 207. That for the purposes of this title the net income of the trade or business in the case of a corporation shall be ascertained and returned—

(a) For the calendar years 1909, 1910, 1911, and 1912 upon the same basis and in the same manner as provided in section 38 of the act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909, except that income taxes paid by it within the year imposed by the authority of the United States shall be included;

(b) For the calendar year 1913 upon the same basis and in the same manner as provided in Section II of the act entitled "An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1913, except that income taxes paid by it within the year imposed by the authority of the United States shall be included, and except that the amounts received by it as dividends upon the stock or from the net earnings of other corporations, joint-stock companies or associations, or insurance companies, subject to the tax imposed by Section II of such act of October 3, 1913, shall be deducted; and

(c) For the taxable year upon the same basis and in the same manner as provided in Title I of this act, except that the amounts received by it as dividends upon the stock or from the net earnings of other corporations, joint-stock companies or associations, or insurance companies, subject to the tax therein imposed, shall be deducted.

The net income of the trade or business in the case of a partnership or individual shall be ascertained and returned for the calendar years 1909, 1910, 1911, 1912, and 1913, and for the taxable year, upon the same basis and in the same manner as provided in Title I of this act, except that the credit allowed by subdivision (b) of section 5 shall be deducted. There shall be allowed (a) in the case of a domestic partnership the same deductions as allowed to individuals in subdivision (a) of section 5; and (b) in the case of a foreign partnership the same deductions as allowed to individuals in subdivision (a) of section 6.

In computing net income for the taxable year there shall also be deducted by a partnership reasonable salaries or compensation paid to individual partners for personal services actually rendered during the taxable year, if the payments are made in accordance with prior agreements and are properly recorded on the books of the partnership; but not in excess of the salaries or compensation customarily paid for similar services under like responsibilities by corporations engaged in like or similar trades or businesses. With respect to any period from the beginning of the first taxable year to March 1, 1918, where no previous agreement has been made as to salaries or compensation a similar deduction may be made for services actually rendered.

In computing net income for the taxable year an individual carrying on a trade or business may also deduct a reasonable amount as salary or compensation for personal services actually rendered by him in the conduct of such trade or business, but not in excess of the salaries or compensation customarily paid for similar service under like responsibilities by corporations or partnerships engaged in like or similar trades or businesses.

In the case of a foreign partnership or nonresident alien individual, the deduction shall be limited to that portion of the salary or compensation which is for service rendered with respect to trade or business carried on within the United States.

SEC. 208. That every partnership having a net income of $2,000 or more for the taxable year shall render a correct return of the income of the trade or business for the taxable year, setting forth specifically the gross income for such year and the deductions allowed in this title. Such returns shall be rendered at the same time and in the same manner as is prescribed for income-tax returns under Title I of this act.

SEC. 209. That all administrative, special, and general provisions of law, including the laws in relation to the assessment, remission, collection, and refund of internal-revenue taxes not heretofore specifically repealed and not inconsistent with the provisions of this title, are hereby extended and made applicable to all the provisions of this title and to the tax herein imposed, and all provisions of Title I of this act relating to returns and payment of the tax therein imposed, including penalties, are hereby made applicable to the tax imposed by this title.

SEC. 210. That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall make all necessary regulations for carrying out the provisions of this title, and may require any corporation, partnership, or individual subject to the provisions of this title to furnish him with such facts, data, and information as, in his judgment, are necessary to collect the tax imposed by this title.

SEC. 211. That Title II of the act entitled "An act to provide increased revenue to defray the expenses of the increased appropriations for the Army and Navy, and the extensions of fortifications, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1917, and Title II of the act entitled "An act to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1917, are hereby repealed.

Any amount heretofore or hereafter paid on account of the tax imposed by Title II of such act of March 3, 1917, shall be credited toward the payment of the tax imposed by this title, and if the amount so paid exceeds the amount of such tax the excess shall be refunded as a tax erroneously or illegally collected.

Subdivision (1) of section 301 of the act entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," approved September 8, 1916, is hereby amended so that the rate of tax for the taxable year 1917 shall be 10 per cent instead of 12½ per cent as therein provided.

Subdivision (2) of such section is hereby amended to read as follows: "(2) This section shall cease to be of effect on and after January 1, 1918."

TITLE III.—GENERAL PROVISIONS.

SEC. 300. That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall by regulation allow an extension of time, not to exceed ——— days, for the filing of returns for, and the payment of, income and war profits taxes for the taxable year 1917.

SEC. 301. That if any clause, sentence, paragraph, or part of this act shall for any reason be adjudged by any court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid, such judgment shall not affect, impair, or invalidate the remainder of said act, but shall be confined in its operation to the clause, sentence, paragraph, or part thereof directly involved in the controversy in which such judgment shall have been rendered.

TITLE IV.—SECOND-CLASS POSTAGE RATES.

SEC. 400. That sections 1101 to 1106, both inclusive, of the act entitled "An act to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1917, are hereby repealed.

Amend the title so as to read: "Joint resolution amending the acts relating to income and excess-profits taxes, and for other purposes."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to make a short statement explaining the provisions of this amendment.

I have yet to discuss the revenue act of October 3, 1917, with a person who understands just what the act means, and taken in connection with the act of September 8, 1916, and the act of March 3, 1917, it is useless to think that a uniform tax return by individuals, partnerships, or corporations can be made. I have yet to find any two persons, professionally or otherwise, who interpret the revenue acts alike. I am positive there are but few who will not freely admit that the act of October 3, 1917, should be amended. Not only is it unworkable but the taxes imposed are unscientific and discriminatory.

My proposed amendment repeals title 1 of the act of September 8, 1916, the income tax; title 3 of the same act, munition manufacturers' tax; title 2 of the act of March 3, 1917, the excess-profits tax; title 1 of the act of October 3, 1917, the war-income tax; title 2 of the same act, the war excess-profits tax; title 12 of the same act, the income-tax amendments; and sections 1101 to 1106, inclusive, of the same act, the provisions creating a zone system and increasing postal rates on second-class mail matter.

The amendment provides a taxing system that any ordinary business man or individual can understand and will have no trouble in making out a tax return. Every individual, whether in business as such or as a member of a partnership, is treated alike. Every corporation is taxed upon the same basis, and the questions of capital invested, watered stock, and bonded indebtedness do not enter into the question of the amount of tax to be imposed. Subnormal businesses during the prewar period are treated on the same basis as normal businesses of like and similar character.

If the amendment becomes a law there will be no need of an advisory board to prepare Treasury decisions, such as is the case to-day in the Treasury Department, nine of such decisions having already been rendered and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury. Treasury Decision 2602 shows the treatment under section 201 of the act of October 3, 1917, of the deductions authorized by sections 203, 204, 205, or 210. Such a decision is nothing more nor less than legislating by interpretation by an advisory board appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury and instructing the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to enforce the interpretation given by the board as against the law passed by Congress. In this I am not finding fault with the wisdom of the advisory board's conclusions, but I call attention to this new form of legislation, which I consider a very unwise procedure. What the courts will have to say regarding this administrative legislation I have no doubt, but I do know that there will follow endless litigation for the Government and the people.

The amendment makes no change in the normal rate of 2 per cent upon all net incomes of individuals, but it consolidates the surtax rates imposed by the acts of September 8, 1916, and October 3, 1917. It does away with the two different amounts of exemptions on individual net incomes, as provided under existing laws, and allows the sum of $1,000 exemption plus $1,000 additional if the person making the return be the head of a family or a married man with a wife living with him, or plus the sum of $1,000 additional if the person making the return be a married woman with a husband living with her, and also provides that if the person making the return is the head of a family there shall be an additional exemption of $200 for each child dependent upon such person if under 18 years of age or if incapable of self-support because mentally or physically defective, but this provision shall operate only in the case of one parent in the same family. It also adds a provision allowing a deduction for amounts paid to individual partners as reasonable salaries or compensation for personal services actually rendered during the taxable year, but in no case shall such salaries or compensation be in excess of the salaries or compensation customarily paid for similar services under like responsibilities by corporations engaged in like or similar trades or businesses. It does not provide a higher rate of taxation upon unearned incomes than upon earned incomes, as I do not think it wise to inject this question into the legislation at this time, as the amendment ought to be passed at as early a date as possible and could be passed before the end of this month if the administration would approve it. I believe in the principle of taxing unearned incomes at a higher rate than earned incomes.

Instead of the different normal taxes imposed under existing revenue acts amounting to 6 per cent upon the total net income of all corporations, the amendment levies a straight tax of 8 per cent upon the net income of all corporations except those whose net income is less than $2,000. This 8 per cent tax is not imposed upon individuals or partnerships, thus equalizing the income tax required to be paid by an individual or an individual partner engaged in business as compared with the income tax imposed upon the stockholders of a corporation. This 8 per cent rate on corporations will raise $180,000,000 over and above the amount that the 6 per cent rate under existing laws will yield; or, in other words, the amendment will provide a revenue to the Government of $715,000,000 on corporation incomes in place of $535,000,000 under existing laws.

The greater changes provided for in the amendment to the existing laws will be found in title 2, designated in the act of October 3, 1917, as "war excess-profits tax" and in my amendment as "war-profits tax." Under this title the amendment only taxes the war profits and at graduated rates that I will hereafter name. Under this title the prewar period means the three years of the calendar years 1909, 1910, 1911, 1912, and 1913 remaining after the exclusion of the two calendar years in which the net income of the trade or business was, respectively, the greatest and the least. These five years taken as the prewar period will result in a much fairer normal income of all classes of business than the three years—1911, 1912, and 1913—provided in existing laws. Taking the five years as provided in the amendment will eliminate practically all, if not all, claims of discrimination against subnormal businesses, and it certainly will prevent a just claim of discrimination being made that the income from any one class of business during the five years was subnormal as proved to be the case in a few classes of business taking the normal earnings of the three prewar years provided in the act of October 3, 1917.

Again, if a corporation or partnership was not in existence or an individual was not engaged in trade or business during the whole of each of such five calendar years, but was in existence or engaged in trade or business during the whole of four of such calendar years, the term means the two of such four years remaining after a like exclusion; and if a corporation or partnership was not in existence or an individual was not engaged in trade or business during the whole of each of four of such calendar years, the term means as many of such calendar years during the whole of which the corporation or partnership was in existence or the individual was engaged in trade or business.

The war-profits tax as provided in the amendment does not apply to corporations which are exempt from income taxes. These are—

First. Labor, agricultural, or horticultural organizations;

Second. Mutual savings bank not having a capital stock represented by shares;

Third. Fraternal beneficiary society, order, or association, operating under the lodge system or for the exclusive benefit of the members of a fraternity itself operating under the lodge system, and providing for the payment of life, sick, accident, or other benefits to the members of such society, order, or association or their dependents;

Fourth. Domestic building and loan association and cooperative banks without capital stock organized and operated for mutual purposes and without profit;

Fifth. Cemetery company owned and operated exclusively for the benefit of its members;

Sixth. Corporation or association organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, or educational purposes, no part of the net income of which inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual;

Seventh. Business league, chamber of commerce, or board of trade, not organized for profit and no part of the net income of which inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual;

Eighth. Civic league or organization not organized for profit but operated exclusively for the promotion of social welfare;

Ninth. Club organized and operated exclusively for pleasure, recreation, and other nonprofitable purposes, no part of the net income of which inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or member;

Tenth. Farmers' or other mutual hail, cyclone, or fire insurance company, mutual ditch or irrigation company, mutual or cooperative telephone company, or like organization of a purely local character, the income of which consists solely of assessments, dues, and fees collected from members for the sole purpose of meeting its expenses;

Eleventh. Farmers', fruit growers', or like association, organized and operated as a sales agent for the purpose of marketing the products of its members and turning back to them the proceeds of sales, less the necessary selling expenses, on the basis of the quantity of produce furnished by them;

Twelfth. Corporation or association organized for the exclusive purpose of holding title to property, collecting income therefrom, and turning over the entire amount thereof, less expenses, to an organization which itself is exempt from the tax imposed by this title; or

Thirteenth. Federal land banks and national farm-loan associations as provided in section 26 of the act approved July 17, 1916, entitled "An act to provide capital for agricultural development, to create standard forms of investment based upon farm mortgage, to equalize rates of interest upon farm loans, to furnish a market for United States bonds, to create Government depositaries and financial agents for the United States, and for other purposes."

Fourteenth. Joint-stock land banks as to income derived from bonds or debentures of other joint-stock land banks or any Federal land bank belonging to such joint-stock land bank.

(b) There shall not be taxed under this title any income derived from any public utility or from the exercise of any essential governmental function accruing to any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or any political subdivision of a State or Territory, nor any income accruing to the government of the Philippine Islands or Porto Rico, or of any political subdivision of the Philippine Islands or Porto Rico: Provided, That whenever any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or any political subdivision of a State or Territory, has, prior to the passage of this title, entered in good faith into a contract with any person or corporation, the object and purpose of which is to acquire, construct, operate, or maintain a public utility, no tax shall be levied under the provisions of this title upon the income derived from the operation of such public utility, so far as the payment thereof will impose a loss or burden upon such State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or a political subdivision of a State or Territory; but this provision is not intended to confer upon such person or corporation any financial gain or exemption or to relieve such person or corporation from the payment of a tax as provided for in this title upon the part or portion of the said income to which such person or corporation shall be entitled under such contract.

Fifteenth. Corporations, partnerships, or individuals the net income of whose trade or business for the taxable year is less than $2,000.

Nor does it apply to—

(1) An office or employment.

(2) Agriculture.

(3) A trade or business substantially all the net income of which is derived from personal services and in which capital is not a material income-producing factor.

(4) The business of life, health, and accident insurance combined in one policy issued on the weekly premium-payment plan.

Section 202 of the amendment provides an additional tax to the taxation under existing law and under this act to be paid for each taxable year upon the income of every corporation, partnership, or individual engaged in trade or business equal to the following percentages of the war profits of such trade or business:

Ten per cent of the amount of such war profits not in excess of 10 per cent of the prewar profits of such trade or business (determined as hereinafter provided);

Twelve and one-half per cent of the amount by which such war profits exceed 10 per cent of such prewar profits and do not exceed 20 per cent thereof;

Fifteen per cent of the amount by which such war profits exceed 20 per cent of such prewar profits and do not exceed 30 per cent thereof;

Twenty per cent of the amount by which such war profits exceed 30 per cent of such prewar profits and do not exceed 40 per cent thereof;

Twenty-five per cent of the amount by which such war profits exceed 40 per cent of such prewar profits and do not exceed 50 per cent thereof;

Thirty per cent of the amount by which such war profits exceed 50 per cent of such prewar profits and do not exceed 60 per cent thereof;

Forty per cent of the amount by which such war profits exceed 60 per cent of such prewar profits and do not exceed 70 per cent thereof;

Fifty per cent of the amount by which such war profits exceed 70 per cent of such prewar profits and do not exceed 80 per cent thereof;

Sixty per cent of the amount by which such war profits exceed 80 per cent of such prewar profits and do not exceed 90 per cent thereof;

Seventy per cent of the amount by which such war profits exceed 90 per cent of such prewar profits and do not exceed 100 per cent thereof; and

Eighty per cent of the amount by which such war profits exceed 100 per cent of such prewar profits.

War profits are ascertained by deducting the prewar profits from the net income of the trade or business for the taxable year and prewar profits are the average annual amount of the net income of the trade or business during the prewar period, plus 8 per cent of the amount of new capital and minus 8 per cent of the amount of capital withdrawn.

The estimated revenue to be derived from this tax will amount to $1,351,050,000, based upon a war profit of $3,300,000,000 for the year 1917. The amount raised under each bracket is estimated as follows:

First bracket, 10 per cent	$59,500,000
Second bracket, 12½ per cent	56,250,000
Third bracket, 15 per cent	33,000,000
Fourth bracket, 20 per cent	42,000,000
Fifth bracket, 25 per cent	47,500,000
Sixth bracket, 30 per cent	45,000,000
Seventh bracket, 40 per cent	55,200,000
Eighth bracket, 50 per cent	62,500,000
Ninth bracket, 60 per cent	60,000,000
Tenth bracket, 70 per cent	52,500,000
Eleventh bracket, 80 per cent	837,600,000
Total	1,351,050,000

This is an increase of revenue over the excess-profits tax as provided in the act of October 3, 1917, of $125,050,000.

New capital is designated as the amount of cash actually paid into the trade or business since December 31, 1913, if employed in the trade or business during the taxable year; the amount of the surplus and undivided profits accumulated since December 31, 1913, if employed in the trade or business during the taxable year; and tangible property paid into the trade or business since December 31, 1913, valued as of the time of such payment, if employed in the trade or business during the taxable year.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. As I understand, the Senator proposes to offer a somewhat comprehensive bill as a substitute for the joint resolution which has come from the House of Representatives.

Mr. SMOOT. That is my purpose in proposing to strike out all after the resolving clause and to insert.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if the bill which he proposes to offer as a substitute for the joint resolution will take the place of the two statutes which we now have relating to this question?

Mr. SMOOT. It will take the place of certain titles found in the three statutes we now have on the subjects of my amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. So that we shall then have one comprehensive and, as the Senator has stated, easily understood law on the subject?

Mr. SMOOT. Should my bill be passed, all any person in the United States will have to do will be to get a copy of the law containing the titles covered in my amendment and he will then understand just what all of the rates are upon incomes and what all of the rates are on war profits.

Mr. GALLINGER. The present situation is one that is very annoying and very difficult to understand, there being the three laws on the subject on the statute books. I hope the Senator's proposed substitute may be adopted. We ought at least in some way to get rid of the multiplicity of statutes and to have a plain and easily understood law on this most important subject. I hope the Senator will succeed in accomplishing that purpose, either in the effort he is now making or in some other way.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah if the suggestion which has just been presented was not under rather exhaustive consideration, by the committee, at least, during the last session of Congress, and was it not then concluded that it was not advisable to have one comprehensive act, because of the hope that after the war it would be a simple matter to repeal any additional revenue legislation and leave the old legislation in operation? I should like also to ask the Senator whether or not at that time he did not concur in that view?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator from New Mexico, I will state that what he has said is true as to the action of the committee, but that action was based upon the supposed-to-be fact that all of the revenues that would be necessary to be raised by our Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, would not exceed $7,000,000,000. The committee thought that under existing laws, which would raise $1,330,000,000, that would be sufficient revenue to be raised by the Government after the close of the war. That hope, however, has gone glimmering long ago. Instead of $7,000,000,000 to be raised, it has increased by leaps and bounds, until the amount is over $21,000,000,000 by direct appropriations and authorizations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918.

Mr. GALLINGER. And it will be $30,000,000,000 at the end of this session.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, at this session of Congress I have no doubt but that we shall at least appropriate the same amount which was appropriated at the last session of Congress. Therefore, instead of having a bill enacted into law, hoping that as soon as the war ceased it could be repealed, because we should not need the revenue derived from it, we now find ourselves in a position where we shall require additional legislation to the act of October 3, 1917, in order to raise revenue sufficient for the needs of the Government. As to the revenue to defray the expenses of our Government, even after the war, I believe, Mr. President, that we shall require legislation to raise sufficient revenue to pay the running expenses of our Government to remain upon the statute books so long as our grandchildren are living.

I desire to say further to the Senator from New Mexico, in answer to his question, that I took the position in the committee that there ought to be one revenue bill and that all of the previous revenue measures ought to be repealed, but the majority of the committee thought otherwise. As we have further light upon the requirements of our Government as to the amount of revenue that must be raised, it seems to me that now is the proper time to enact a revenue measure that can be easily amended, to increase or decrease the revenue, that shall contain the principle of justice toward every individual, toward every partnership, and toward every corporation in the United States.

Mr. President, I ask Senators to read the proposed amendment which I have offered to-day and to study it in connection with existing revenue laws. If they will do so, I believe there is not a Senator in this body who will not admit that it proposes a more scientific and a more just form of taxation than is imposed upon the business and individuals of this country under existing law.

Mr. President, to resume the thread of my remarks at the point where I was interrupted, the only excuse that I have heard for not amending existing revenue acts is that the blank returns have already been prepared by the Treasury Department and should be delivered to persons affected and interested within the next 30 days, as under existing laws the returns must be made by March 1. My amendment provides in section 300 that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall, by regulation, allow an extension of time, not to exceed ——— days, for the filing of returns for and the payment of income and war-profits taxes for the taxable year 1917. If the amendment is adopted any time during the months of January or February, it will not be too late, with a reasonable extension of time, to have the blanks prepared and sent to the interested persons.

I see no reason why this amendment should not pass both Houses of Congress within the next 30 days.

MINING OF COAL, ETC., ON THE PUBLIC DOMAIN.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2812) to encourage and promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, potassium, and sodium on the public domain.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the first amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN].

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask that the section be read as it will appear if the amendments offered by the Senator from Nevada are agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. The first amendment is on page 12, line 12, section 16, before the word "of" at the beginning of the line, to insert "by a claimant," so that it will read:

Or within 90 days after final withdrawal of application for patent by a claimant of any claim or subdivision thereof asserted under the mining laws prior to July 3, 1910—

And so forth.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to have the Secretary read the other amendments to the section, and then reread the section to show the connection which these amendments have.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator means the proposed amendments to section 16, does he not?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; they are amendments offered by the Senator from Nevada. One of the amendments proposes to insert in line 12, before the word "of," the words "by a claimant"; and then, after the word "withdrawal," on page 12, line 14, to insert "and who prior to the said date had performed all acts necessary to a valid mining location thereof, except to make a discovery." So that the section will appear in the RECORD as it is proposed to be amended I read it, as follows:

SEC. 16. That upon relinquishment to the United States within 90 days from the date of this act or within 90 days after final denial or withdrawal of application for patent by a claimant of any claim or subdivision thereof asserted under the mining laws prior to July 3, 1910, to any unpatented oil or gas lands included in any order of withdrawal, and who prior to the said date had performed all acts necessary to a valid mining location thereof, except to make a discovery, such claimant or his successor in interest shall be entitled to a lease for each such asserted mineral location of 160 acres or less or any subdivision therof upon which such claim is based and upon which said claimant, his predecessors in interest, or those claiming through or under him, have, prior to the date of this act, drilled one or more producing oil or gas wells, such lease to be upon a royalty of one-eighth of the production of oil or gas produced and saved therefrom after first deducting from the gross production such oil or gas as may be used in development and operating such land, and otherwise on the same terms and conditions as other oil and gas leases granted under the provisions of this act: Provided, however, That no claimant who has been guilty of fraud in the location of any oil claim or gas-bearing lands shall be entitled to any of the benefits of this section, nor shall his assignee be entitled thereto unless he affirmatively shows that prior to the passage of this act he purchased such lands in good faith, for a valuable consideration, and without actual knowledge of such fraud: Provided further, That upon the issuance of said lease and prior to the delivery thereof the applicant therefor shall pay to the United States for one-eighth of the oil or gas produced and saved from the lands included in said claim at the current field price at the time of production, which shall be in full satisfaction for all oil or gas extracted from said lands prior to said lease: And provided further, That none of the provisions of this section or of this act shall be applicable to or affect lands or minerals included within the limits of any naval petroleum reserve: Provided further, That the provisions of this section shall be applicable in all cases provided for herein, including cases where court actions have been heretofore commenced or may hereafter be commenced by the United States Government affecting the title to such lands or the product thereof: Provided further, That any bona fide occupant or claimant of oil or gas bearing lands in the Territory of Alaska, who prior to withdrawal had complied with the requirements of the mining laws, except as to discovery of oil or gas in wells, and who prior to withdrawal expended not less than $1,000 in permanent improvements on or for each location, shall be entitled to the benefits of this section.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not know that I have any objection to these amendments, but they have only been offered and not as yet printed. I have had no opportunity to consider them, except as I heard them read from the desk. In view of the fact that we can not dispose of this bill until Monday—and we must dispose of it on Monday—is not the Senator from Nevada willing to let the amendments be printed, so that we may have an opportunity to consider them in connection with amendments that may be proposed from other sources?

Mr. PITTMAN. I have no objection whatever to that.

Mr. BORAH. We gain nothing by considering them this afternoon, because we can not dispose of the bill to-day anyway, and we must dispose of it on Monday. My opinion is that these amendments are in the line of the suggestions which have been made.

Mr. PITTMAN. Before I make a motion to adjourn I want to state, so that it may be in the RECORD for those who are interested in considering the subject, that the amendments made to section 16 are simply carrying out the intent that the committee originally had but which possibly was not clearly expressed. There was some doubt, as the Senator from Idaho calls attention to, with regard to the definition of the words "asserted under the mining laws." Therefore, in defining "asserted under the mining laws," we have used the same language that was used on page 15 with regard to the Wyoming situation, which, I think, makes it definite. In other words, we now define a claim "asserted under the mining laws" to be a claim that has been located and marked on the ground and worked and sustained in accordance with the mining law in every particular except the sole particular of discovery of oil; and if the discovery of oil is subsequently made, it relates back and gives the claimant then a preference right of lease.

I think possibly that meets the objections to the definition made by the Senator from Idaho. However, we will have the bill printed, and between now and Monday we will have an opportunity to give more thought to it.

There is another amendment to which I wish to call the attention of Senators, and that is an amendment to section 34 which we have introduced here but which has not been read since we reconvened. That section provides, just as was provided in the potash bill which became a law, that locators may combine for the purpose of transporting or refining or marketing their oil, provided that no claimant or locator shall have to exceed a one-tenth interest in any one of these corporations or associations. That matter was thrashed out very carefully in the preparation of what we know as the potash bill, which has now become a law, and we agreed then that there would be no danger of monopoly if each of the oil owners was limited to a one-tenth interest in any refining company, transportation company, or pipe line.

Therefore I have offered that amendment to the section, which I believe will remedy that situation, and will remove any danger that the people in Wyoming might have of being under the domination of any one refinery or any one pipe line that may be there.

I may say, however, that if I correctly understand the law of Wyoming there is no danger from any pipe line there. The pipe line company is a common carrier, and is required to accept the oil that is given to it. I believe that does not apply, however, to refineries; and if there was any doubt about an oil operator being allowed to put up his own refinery, I know that the committee had no such intention. The committee had just the opposite intention. The committee desired by this very provision to prevent the refinery from controlling the oil lands, and it has been in all these bills for that purpose. This, in my opinion, at the present time not only prevents the monopoly that we have been trying to protect against for four years, but opens the door for the organization of mutual associations out there among the mine claimants.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I see no objection to the amendments offered by the Senator; in fact, in my opinion, they greatly improve the bill; but I ask him now to allow the amendments to go over without being acted upon.

Mr. PITTMAN. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, if there are any objections, after more thorough consideration and examination of them, we will have an opportunity to speak on them next Monday.

Mr. PITTMAN. Undoubtedly.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I have a few amendments to offer to the bill that I do not care to offer at this time, but I will do so on Monday.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I offer an amendment and ask to have it printed and lie on the table.

Mr. PITTMAN. There is no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2 it is proposed to insert the words "or Territory," in line 6, after the word "State"; also to insert the same words, in line 7, after the word "State," and, in line 10, after the word "State."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I desire to say that there is a great deal of misunderstanding with regard to the contents of this bill, as is demonstrated by a number of statements that have been made in this body and elsewhere. Besides that, there have been a great many views expressed with regard to the bill that are based purely on some little local condition and personal interests of private litigation. It has been impossible for the committee of the Senate to draw satisfactorily a bill that would grant to everybody what everybody believes he is entitled to. We have been able to treat this matter only in a fundamental way, to treat it in a general way, so that those that come within the law with the proper state of facts will have a remedy and the others will not.

In order that the Senate may be properly advised of the bill in the form in which it now is, I ask that it may be reprinted as amended, showing amendments agreed to in small caps and amendments pending in italics.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, is it in order now to propose amendments to the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Amendments are being offered and permitted to lie on the table.

Mr. STERLING. Very well. I submit an amendment, which I ask may be printed and lie on the table, and also that it be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

After line 13, on page 25, insert the following:

"Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent any number of patentees or lessees under the provisions of this act from combining their several interests so far as may be necessary for the purpose of establishing and constructing a pipe line or lines to be operated and used by them jointly in the transportation of oil from their several wells or from constructing and carrying on the business of a refinery: Provided further, That any combination for such purpose or purposes shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior on application to him for permission to form the same."

Mr. KING. I offer two amendments and ask that they be printed and lie upon the table and printed in the RECORD. I do not ask that they be included within the order just made by the Senate that they be printed in connection with the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The amendments are as follows:

On page 7, and at the end of section 6, insert the following as section 7:

"SEC. 7. That where, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, the public interest will be benefited thereby, he is authorized to exchange noncontiguous bodies of public coal lands for privately owned coal lands, similarly situated, of approximately equal character and value, to such an extent and in such manner that thereafter the lands of the United States and those in private ownership shall each form single, compact, workable bodies or units: Provided, That nothing herein shall authorize the issuance or treatment of the privileges herein granted as script or assignable rights or privileges. In consummation of the exchanges herein authorized, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to receive and record conveyances covering privately owned lands and to issue patents covering lands of the United States exchanged therefor."

On page 31, after section 44, insert the following:

"SEC. 45. That hereafter no public lands of the United States containing minerals shall be withdrawn by Executive proclamation or otherwise, and no reserve of any character or description, covering or including within its limits any mineral lands of the United States, shall be created or established except by act of Congress.

"All acts and parts of acts in conflict with this section are hereby repealed."

Mr. PITTMAN. If there is no further business at this time in connection with the bill and no one wants to speak on it, for the purpose of giving an opportunity to consider the amendments that have been offered, I propose that the Senate shall now adjourn. [After a pause.] I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 1 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, January 7, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

SENATE.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we seek Thy favor and grace as we address ourselves to the task of another day. We pray Thee to write Thy new law, the law of love, on our hearts, that as we exercise our powers and fill the measure of our responsibility within the limited sphere of our independent activities we may have the guidance of that law of love to control and direct us in all things. Fit us, O God, as leaders of men; fit us as a part of the lawmaking body of this great land to lead the people unto the highest and best. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

DEATH OF SENATOR FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the following letter.

The Secretary read as follows:

JANUARY 5, 1918.

MY DEAR MR. VICE PRESIDENT: I beg to express to you and through you to the Members of the Senate my appreciation of your friendly sympathy during these last sad days.

My husband treasured the friendships he had formed in the Senate and valued his associations there beyond any other interest.

The evidences of the friendly feeling which his associates had for him, as expressed by you and them, have been most grateful to me.

Very sincerely, yours,

EDITH McA. NEWLANDS.

CAMP JOSEPH E. JOHNSTON, FLORIDA.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I desire to make a brief reference to an article that appears in the New York Herald of January 2, page 8, column 2. The article is entitled "Site at Camp Johnston." It is misleading in title, because there is no reference made to Camp Johnston except as a means of identifying the alleged swamp. The following statement is made by the writer of the article, a communication to the editor of the Herald, signed by A. F. Engel, New York City, December 29, 1917:

About 4 miles from Camp Johnston, Jacksonville, Fla., a large tract of swamp land has been sold to the Government as a site for a recuperation hospital. This land is, at tidewater, covered with Atlantic moss, dead trees, and rotting vegetation. It is necessary to fill in and pump out streams before buildings can be erected, and it is a question which interests every citizen why the Government should purchase land of this character.

The vice of the article is that it is wholly untrue. As a matter of fact, there has been no recuperation hospital located in Florida at all. There has been some investigation with reference to establishing a site for a hospital in the State, but no report has ever been made on it to the Surgeon General, and thus far nothing has been done. So the whole statement is without any foundation and utterly false.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Otherwise the article is all right, is it?

Mr. FLETCHER. Well, the heading may be all right, but the statement with reference to this alleged recuperation hospital which it was intended to discuss is, as I said, without any foundation in fact. Perhaps otherwise it might be admitted to the newspaper as some sort of a communication.

With reference to Camp Johnston, I hold in my hand a statement from the Florida Times-Union of January 3, 1918, setting forth that—

HEALTH OF CAMP JOHNSTON EXCELLENT; SICKNESS IS LESS THAN 1 PER CENT.

The excellent health of Camp Johnston is not only a source of gratification to the authorities at the cantonment, but to the citizens of Jacksonville as well. It speaks volumes for the precautions taken by the medical authorities to guard the health of the soldiers, and also speaks eloquently for the general healthfulness of Florida.

The soldiers at Camp Johnston were drawn from every cantonment in the United States, as well as practically all States, as recently the enlisted men from the Quartermaster Reserve Corps were called into service and sent here for training. The last named came as civilians, and constitute a class of men prone to contract diseases and to bring disease into camp. They are unseasoned, undisciplined, and therefore more susceptible to disease than the men hardened by the rigors of camp and outdoor life.

It is extremely doubtful if another cantonment in the United States can show a health rate which in any way compares with that of Camp Joseph E. Johnston.

This article does not, however, have any reference to the conditions at Camp Johnston. I merely quote this because of the heading of the article, "Site of Camp Johnston."

I desire to state further, Mr. President, that Florida does not want any camp or cantonment or hospital or other military activity that is not the best for the country and helpful in these trying times.

I think it is fair to the community, I shall say, that whereas we can not, of course, correct the dense ignorance and deep prejudice of the author of this article, we can at least show that the statements are without foundation in fact.

WAR WITH GERMANY.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I send to the desk a clipping from the Washington Post of yesterday containing resolutions recently adopted by an organization in the State of Wisconsin known as the Wisconsin State Council of Defense. Coming from that State where there are so many German-American citizens, it occurs to me, Mr. President, that at this particular juncture these resolutions ought to go into the RECORD and the attention of the country be called to them. No doubt but what they are indorsed by the residents of Wisconsin, and they are proof of the fact that the great body of the German-Americans of the United States are loyal and patriotic and that they are doing their part in the war.

I am sure that these resolutions will be gratifying to the Members of the Senate and gratifying to the patriotic people of the United States. I ask that the resolutions be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

MADISON, WIS., January 5.

Demanding vigorous prosecution of the war, with no delay in the manufacture and transportation of guns and munitions or in furnishing proper food and clothing to soldiers and sailors, the Wisconsin State Council of Defense has adopted resolutions which have been forwarded to President Wilson.

The statement recognizes the patience and wisdom of the President, and declares that Wisconsin is not inclined to temporize with Members of Congress who, because of political selfishness, inefficiency, or subservience to red tape——

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order, if I can not reach the matter in any other way. This paper seems to be a criticism of Congress, I should judge, and an exploitation of somebody or something. If I am not too late, I will enter an objection to the reading of the document.

Mr. KING. I desire to state to the Senator that I want read only the resolutions; and I am sure that the resolutions, not the comments of the newspaper, will not be regarded as a criticism of Congress. After having read them carefully, I feel confident that they contain no criticism of this or any other body.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolutions can be presented to the Senator from New Hampshire for examination, and if they contain a criticism of the Congress of the United States the Chair will sustain the point of order.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I only want to say on this point when the Senator from Utah rose I supposed he had a resolution addressed to the Senate——

Mr. KING. Oh, no.

Mr. PENROSE. But it appears he wants to have a newspaper clipping read. I thought we had at last arrived at a tacit understanding that we would not make the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD ridiculous by having a collection of telegrams and newspaper clippings inserted every morning. I shall emphatically object to having any newspaper clippings read.

Mr. KING. The objection of the Senator from Pennsylvania comes too late. Moreover, I am not so sensitive to the point suggested by the Senator. I am sure we ought to be gratified to know that the organizations of this country that represent public sentiment are vigorously behind the President in the prosecution of the war, and that they look with displeasure upon those who may hamper the war, and the spies and traitors, if there be any, throughout the country.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I do not require the listening to the reading of a Wisconsin newspaper to persuade me that our German-American citizens are loyal. I suppose I represent in this Chamber as many German-Americans as any half dozen Senators or more. I know they are as loyal as anyone else. But I can not help feeling that it is a very cheap form of statesmanship to be reading telegrams and newspaper clippings in the Senate.

Mr. KING. Of course, the Senator from Pennsylvania has had so many years of statesmanship he knows the difference between "cheap" and that which is very valuable, and he represents the valuable while I suppose I must confess to representing the cheap form of statesmanship. However, I like to know that the form of statesmanship I represent stands for the war, for its vigorous prosecution, and stands behind the President. It stands for American rights, which ought to be dear to the hearts of those citizens found within the district represented by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PENROSE. Now, let us proceed with the ordinary routine of business, and I hope I shall be permitted to present a number of petitions for proper reference.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I renew my objection to the matter being read from the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Upon the ground that it is a criticism of Congress?

Mr. GALLINGER. A criticism of Congress, and giving instructions as to what Congress shall do in a certain important matter.

Mr. KING. I submit it is not a criticism of Congress, but if the Senator objects and the Chair sustains the objection, later on in the day I shall take occasion to read it as a part of my remarks. I insist that it is not a criticism of Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In view of the controversy the Chair will not take time to read the resolutions, which are long, and, in view of the statement of the Senator from Utah that later in the day he will read them, they will get into the RECORD.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PENROSE presented a resolution adopted by the Philadelphia Bourse, of Pennsylvania, favoring the authorization of a war-supply board to control all purchases of war necessities and the manufacture thereof, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a memorial of the Board of Trade of Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against section 209 of the war-revenue act, relating to incomes derived from professions or occupations which have no vested capital, and praying that it be amended, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution of the Board of Trade of Philadelphia, Pa., favoring the recommendation made by the President of the United States relative to the consideration of all appropriation bills through a single committee, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. KENDRICK presented a petition of the One Hundred Per Cent American Club of Douglas, Wyo., praying that Indians be included in the military service of the country, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the One Hundred Per Cent American Club of Douglas, Wyo., praying for the enactment of legislation making it a crime to use unpatriotic language, etc., which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CURTIS presented resolutions adopted by the executive committee of the Kansas State Live Stock Association, favoring the classifying of labor and so assigning it that the industries necessary for winning the war may be provided for, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. PHELAN presented resolutions adopted at a meeting of Serbian, Cortian, and Slovene residents of San Francisco, Cal., favoring the declaration of war on Austria and swearing allegiance to the United States, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Merchants' Exchange of Oakland, Cal., praying for the construction of a naval base in Alameda as soon as possible, in order that additional facilities may be provided for naval operations, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. THOMPSON presented a petition of the Kansas State Live Stock Association, praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate labor to the end that no labor be employed which does not contribute toward the winning of the war, especially during the crop season, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. CUMMINS. I present resolutions adopted at the annual meeting of the Joseph Smith Family Association, held on December 23, 1917, at Lamoni, Iowa, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LAMONI, IOWA, December 27, 1917.

Senators A. B. CUMMINS and W. C. KENYON,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIRS: At the annual meeting of the Joseph Smith Family Association on the 23d instant, the following resolution was read and adopted, and I, as secretary of the association, was requested to prepare and send copies of the same to yourselves, President Woodrow Wilson, and Hon. H. M. TOWNER:

"Resolved, That we, the Joseph Smith Family Association, composed of the direct descendants of Joseph Smith and those allied with them by marriage, not one of whom owes his or her birth or allegiance to the morally corrupting and soul-destroying doctrine of polygamy, of which he has been falsely accused, assembled in annual reunion at Lamoni, Iowa, on this 23d day of December, the one hundred and twelfth anniversary of the birth of our distinguished ancestor, hereby affirm the political faith of Joseph Smith declared in 1844, viz:

"'In the United States the people are the Government; and their united voice is the only sovereign that should rule, the only power that should be obeyed, and the only gentleman that should be honored, at home and abroad, on the land and on the sea.'

"We therefore unreservedly pledge to President Woodrow Wilson and the Congress of the United States our loyal support and our faithful service, in this dark hour of our country's peril, in their effort to make the world safe for democracy.

"Resolved, further, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to President Wilson and to our representatives in the Senate and House of Representatives, with request that they present the same to the bodies of which they are Members."

Very sincerely, REBECCA WELD, Secretary.

Mr. WARREN presented a resolution adopted by the One Hundred Per cent American Club of Douglas, Wyo., relative to the public utterances of Hon. ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, a Senator from the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the One Hundred Per Cent American Club of Douglas, Wyo., praying for the enactment of legislation making it criminal to use unpatriotic language, etc., which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the One Hundred Per Cent American Club of Douglas, Wyo., favoring the use of Indians in the military service of the country, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

MUNICIPAL BRIDGE AT ST. LOUIS, MO.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably, with an amendment, the bill (S. 3081) to extend the time for the completion of the municipal bridge approaches, and extensions or additions thereto by the city of St. Louis within the States of Illinois and Missouri, and I submit a report (No. 185) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, in section 1, page 1, line 10, after the word "extended," to strike out the words "without limitation" and to insert "for the period of three years," so as to make the section read:

That the time for the construction and completion of the municipal bridge approaches, and also extensions or additions thereto, which said construction and completion was authorized by an act entitled "An act to authorize the city of St. Louis, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Missouri, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River," approved June 25, 1906, be, and the same is hereby, extended for the period of three years from the date of the passage of this act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just a moment, please. I ask that the Secretary again report the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again state the amendment reported by the committee.

The Secretary again stated the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I shall not object to the passage of the bill, but as we are to vote at not later than 5 o'clock to-day on the bill to encourage and promote the mining of oil, phosphate, and so forth, I shall object to the consideration of any other bills during the morning hour.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I desire to inquire of the Senator who has reported the bill what is the purpose of extending this franchise without any limitation at all?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is an amendment which has been reported by the committee to that provision of the bill.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That provision of the bill is proposed to be amended by the committee?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I will say to the Senator from Washington that I have been directed by the Committee on Commerce to report an amendment to the bill limiting the time for a period of three years.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. KENDRICK:

A bill (S. 3407) granting an increase of pension to John Dewire;

A bill (S. 3408) granting a pension to Charles J. McClendon; and

A bill (S. 3409) granting a pension to Julia H. Bock; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PENROSE:

A bill (S. 3410) for the relief of Charles Mace; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 3411) granting an increase of pension to Milton S. Lawhead;

A bill (S. 3412) granting an increase of pension to Samuel R. Smith;

A bill (S. 3413) granting an increase of pension to David Dryburgh;

A bill (S. 3414) granting an increase of pension to Jay Smith;

A bill (S. 3415) granting an increase of pension to William J. Rigg;

A bill (S. 3416) granting an increase of pension to Robert Masters;

A bill (S. 3417) granting an increase of pension to William Wellman;

A bill (S. 3418) granting a pension to Francis M. Fox; and

A bill (S. 3419) granting an increase of pension to John E. Carpenter (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PHELAN:

A bill (S. 3420) granting a pension to Elizabeth H. Mills; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. STONE:

A bill (S. 3421) granting an increase of pension to James M. Millirons (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. THOMPSON:

A bill (S. 3422) granting a pension to Agnes Swarts (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 3423) granting a pension to Mary L. Colnay (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WARREN:

A bill (S. 3424) granting an increase of pension to Julia Burger (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 3425) for the relief of Paul Guenther (Inc.), and Paul Guenther and Olga Guenther; to the Committee on Claims.

GOVERNMENT CONTROL OF RAILROADS.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3385) to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WATSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3385) to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT OF INCOME-TAX LAW.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 195) amending the act entitled "An act to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1917, so as to subject to the war excess-profits tax the compensation of officers and employees under the United States, including Members of Congress, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PENROSE submitted an amendment providing that the Postmaster General may, in his discretion, allow employees detailed to the Army mail service abroad a per diem allowance not to exceed $3 per day, intended to be proposed by him to the Post Office appropriation bill (H. R. 7237), which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

EAST ST. LOUIS RIOTS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present a report from the attorney general of Illinois on the East St. Louis race riot. If the Senate will bear with me, I should like from three to five minutes to preface the report with a statement. I ask unanimous consent for that purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the Senator from Illinois will proceed.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, on the day and until midnight of July 2, 1917, a riot occurred in East St. Louis, Ill., attended with a loss of life unprecedented in such outbreaks in time of peace. The commotion disclosed a most deplorable condition in the municipal government. It showed an alliance with the vicious, lawless element which resulted in the paralysis of the ordinary agencies designed to protect life and property and preserve the public peace. A remarkable indifference afflicted officials. It was discouraging to the reputable element at East St. Louis to find their city government in such a condition. Law-abiding citizens, however, united their efforts and with a commendable spirit entered upon the redemption of their city.

Edward J. Brundage, attorney general of Illinois, promptly assumed control of the detection and punishment of those responsible for the outrages. His official conduct has been marked by a high sense of duty and professional ability. The crimes committed were of unprecedented atrocity. They manifested an abandoned spirit and a malignant cruelty difficult to believe unless proven by indisputable evidence. The bodies of 35 negroes were collected by undertakers and buried the day after the riot, unidentified and unclaimed. A large number of negroes were burned. The bodies of many were thrown into Cahokia Creek or the Mississippi River and were never recovered. Over 100 negroes were shot or mangled and beaten to various degrees of helplessness or injuries. Eight white men were killed. Over 250 buildings were burned. Some entire blocks were burned in the negro districts so completely as to leave nothing but heaps of ashes. Many negroes are believed to have been killed and their bodies destroyed so as to escape identification in the resulting fires.

The disreputable negro escaped. The law-abiding industrious one with the usual insensate blind fury of the mob was killed or maimed. Negro children were thrown back into the burning buildings. Some ran from their flaming homes and were shot by the mob while trying to escape. The East St. Louis police generally not only gave no help, but refused their efforts to save life and restore order.

Under those conditions Attorney General Brundage began an investigation. Circuit Judge Crow impaneled a grand jury in St. Clair County, in which East St. Louis is situated. When Attorney General Brundage began the investigation he demanded that the mayor of East St. Louis suspend the heads of the police department. This resulted in the suspension of the day and night chiefs and the resignation of the entire police board. One hundred and forty-three indictments were returned without a single dissenting vote. The defendants indicted were negroes in the mob that had killed white policemen, the man who fired the first shot the morning of the riot, leaders of mobs which searched street cars for negroes, policemen who disgraced their official character, leaders of riotous bodies of men which dragged negroes along the streets with ropes around their necks and hung and shot them. The mayor of the city was indicted for misfeasance in office, his private secretary for conspiracy, and a number of policemen for a variety of statutory offenses.

The attorney general sent his personal representatives to the trial table, who assisted in the prosecution. Convictions have been had for felonies in 18 or 20 of the cases, inflicting long penitentiary sentences. The defendants are now actually in the penitentiary. In the conviction for misdemeanors, generally speaking, the evidence showed only such conduct as would on ordinary occasions have been a breach of the peace.

Great publicity was given the riot and severe but merited criticisms were made. I believe it proper to say that the attorney general of Illinois and his personal representatives, the circuit judge, the grand jury, and the county officials charged with public duties in the prosecution, as well as the trial jury, have risen to the level of the emergency. They have shown a keen sense of their public duties and are resolved not only to punish the guilty, but to guarantee the future against the recurrence of such bloody outrages. The State of Illinois was humiliated by the deplorable lawlessness made manifest. It is none the less determined that the State and its several communities shall be redeemed from the disgrace brought upon it by municipal home rule of the vicious element gone mad. Illinois now challenges other States in which the mob spirit usurps control and leaves its bloody trail and ashes of ruined homes in its wake, to show a similar purpose to punish crime and vindicate the right of civilized communities to administer the laws and protect life and property. Severe reflections were made upon Illinois because of the riot. It now, so far as civil authority can atone for such unparalleled disorder and crime, presents its prosecution and punishment of the guilty who gave the occasion for such animadversion. A number of cases are still pending for trial on the indictments found. The prosecutions are being pushed vigorously. An aroused public sentiment is manifested, which promises a livelier performance of official duty and a guaranty for better conditions in East St. Louis.

One evident fact conveys a warning to every municipality in the United States. Vice and lawlessness supposed heretofore to be local in character are not so. The claim that such offenses are matters purely of home rule and punishment is a dangerous error. The insidious character of the element concerned in such supposed local offenses numbs officials, debases politics, and endangers public tranquillity. Its hidden character, until it blazes out in riot and disorder, as an ally of other forms of lawlessness, renders it more dangerous than more violent offenses. East St. Louis lies at the gateway of the great southwestern markets, factories, and carrier systems tributary to St. Louis, Mo. In time of war it could by such disorders as that of last July effectually interfere with or completely block the transportation of military and naval forces, munitions of war, and United States mails, together with the civil traffic that underlies the transactions of private life. Such conditions therefore are no longer mere matters of municipal home rule, but are become national in their necessary results.

With this preface I ask that the report of the attorney general of Illinois in reference to this prosecution be printed in the RECORD without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report referred to is as follows:

EAST ST. LOUIS RACE RIOT.

TIME AND PLACE.

The riot took place on the principal streets of East St. Louis, Ill., and most of the negroes were killed and wounded in the very heart of the city; many within sight of the city hall. There were five small mobs of rioters that operated in different parts of the outskirts of the city, but the damage caused by them was small in comparison with that done in the downtown business part of the city.

The riot started on the morning of July 2, 1917, between 9 and 10 o'clock and continued until midnight, when it was practically quelled by the State militia. Two policemen who came on duty at 7 o'clock on the morning of the 3d took a small detachment of militia (eight men) and killed one and wounded two negroes on the island, and the Buncum Road mob assaulted three negroes on the afternoon of the 3d. A number of fires were set at different times during the succeeding weeks in the negro districts, but little damage was done after the 2d. The large fires were started about 5.30 p. m. on the afternoon of the 2d.

EXCUSE.

The excuse assigned by the mobs for the riot was the murder of two policemen the night before by a mob of negroes. (The negroes were beaten up by the whites during the day before the riot, and rumors of a massacre were carried to the negroes, causing them to arm and become disorderly.)

CASUALTIES AND DAMAGE.

About 35 bodies of negroes were collected by the undertakers. (In most cases they were buried the day after the riot, unidentified and unclaimed.) Eight whites were killed. (Four of these by white mobs.) Eight known whites were badly wounded (four by white mobs). Many—over 100—negroes were shot or beaten up, or both. A large number of negroes were burned and their bodies not recovered. A number were thrown into Cahokia Creek. Owing to the fact that a large part of the negro population left East St. Louis the day of the riot or shortly afterwards and went to all parts of the United States, no correct list or number of the dead and injured has ever been obtained. For days after the riot, especially before the investigation and prosecution of the rioters was commenced in earnest, it was boasted that "the niggers would be finished shortly, together with anyone who interfered with the rioters," and the negroes were afraid to even appear and claim their dead in many cases.

Over 250 buildings were burned. In some instances entire blocks in the negro districts were completely consumed. Large numbers of buildings were shot into and otherwise wrecked but escaped being burned.

RIOT CHECKED BY WHOM.

The East St. Louis police force, most of whom were in sympathy with the rioters, did nothing to stop the riot, and early in the day word was passed around that the police would not interfere. The militia on the ground during the day was composed mostly of young, green boys, and they spent the day trying to keep the crowds moving and in escorting negroes to places of safety. (Many negroes were saved in this manner.)

At 7 o'clock p. m., Company B of the Fourth Illinois Infantry, from Newton, Ill., arrived, and under the personal direction of Col. E. P. Clayton they were rushed to the corner of Collinsville and Broadway and arrested about 200 of a mob that was dragging a negro on the ground with a rope toward Main and Broadway, where they were going to hang him within sight of the city hall. Col. Clayton had his soldiers surround this crowd and marched them to the city hall at the point of the bayonet, and this wholesale arrest of the rioters broke the backbone of the riot.

The first fire alarm was turned in about 5.15 p. m., and between 6 and 7 the crowd hampered the firemen by cutting the hose; but after the wholesale arrest by Col. Clayton, he promised the fire chief of St. Louis, Mo., ample protection, and in a few minutes his companies arrived, and the fires were under control by midnight.

INCIDENTS OF THE RIOT (AS SHOWN BY EVIDENCE COLLECTED DURING INVESTIGATION).

Negroes were generally assaulted and knocked down by members of mobs and then shot while on the ground. Some were kicked and stamped with the boots and heels of the rioters. In numerous cases their skulls were crushed with paving blocks, iron bars, and clubs.

Some negroes were dragged on the ground with ropes around their necks.

Three negroes were hung.

Negro children were thrown back into burning buildings.

Numbers ran from their burning homes only to be shot by mobs which had started the fires.

One little negro girl about 2 years old was shot through the breast with a bullet.

One white woman cut the throat of a negress.

A number of negroes were chased to Cahokia Creek banks and jumped or were thrown in and when they would arise to the surface the mob would pelt them with clubs and stones until they sank.

A mob of white girls (prostitutes) attacked and beat a number of negro women. One girl would beat them with the heel of her shoe. These girls made a weapon from a table fork which they had attached to a cane, and when the street cars were stopped by the rioters the girls would stick and jab the negroes with the sharp tines of this weapon. A policeman was present when one of these girls stamped on the head of a negro whom the crowd had just assaulted and knocked down.

In a number of cases the mobs would not let the ambulance drivers pick up the wounded negroes, but would make them drive on.

One ambulance was shot into by the mob and riddled with bullets.

One negro who sought safety at the police station was driven out by an officer in the presence of the mayor and shortly afterwards was killed almost in front of the police station.

The mobs broke into the pawn shops and secured guns and ammunition in this manner.

Automobiles went from crowd to crowd passing out ammunition.

Many negroes saved their lives by "playing possum" and lying in the streets as if dead.

One officer of the police when approached by a citizen who asked him to stop the crowd from hanging a negro said, "No; they are only getting what they gave Coppedge and Wadley last night" (Coppedge and Wadley were the two policemen who were killed by the negroes the night before).

The deputy sheriffs were assisting in getting some colored women and children from a burning building, and they appealed to a police officer for help, and he said, "They did not need any help last night."

The two instances that stand out of white men attempting to stop a mob single handed from assaulting negroes are worthy of mention. Waldo D. McClure and a Mr. Stephenson are the two white men. McClure was nearly killed and Stephenson is now in an asylum from injuries received. Both of these men saved the lives of a negro, and it is interesting to know that they are both southerners.

There are numerous instances of where after driving the negroes from their homes the white mobs carried away the belongings of the negroes.

At least four white men were shot by bullets intended for the negroes.

No instance has come to light where a really bad negro was killed or wounded. In every case the victim was an old man or defenseless woman or child.

In a good many cases of the assaults committed after noon the victims were not even residents of East St. Louis, as after noon the East St. Louis negroes had run to cover and the mob began to stop all street cars and take the negroes from the cars. A good many of these cars came from other towns in the vicinity. The following story was brought to light in the trial of the case of the State against Robinson, Dow, and Hanna. (These three defendants are all now in the State penitentiary at Chester.)

Mrs. Lena Cook and husband Ed Cook, daughter Bernice, and son Lurizza were on a street car passing through East St. Louis; they were returning from a day's fishing trip. (None of these parties had ever stepped foot on East St. Louis soil.) The car was stopped, and Mrs. Cook's husband was taken out of the car by Dow, an ice man, who beat him over the head with a revolver until he was off the car and then shot him dead by a bullet in the back of the head. The son was beaten but got away and started to escape when he was also killed by a bullet from the crowd. (This bullet went through Lurizza and hit the pavement and killed a white man by the name of Keyser who was standing in front of his hardware store.) Mrs. Cook, who was begging the crowd to spare her children, was then kicked and beaten and pounded until she lost consciousness and was left for dead on the sidewalk in a pool of blood, with large handfuls of her hair which had been pulled from her head lying on the walk beside her. A white man named Stephenson interfered with mob and tried to save this woman, but the mob turned on him and inflicted injuries which has resulted in his losing his mind, and he is now in an asylum in Chicago.

As soon as the soldiers arrived at the scene of this killing, they ordered an ambulance and put in the bodies of five negroes, including Mrs. Cook. Mrs. Cook testified in the above-named case, and stated that when she came to in the ambulance her eyes were so full of blood that she could not see and that after she had felt around and secured something to wipe them with the first thing that she saw was her dead husband and the next was her dead son, one lying on each side of her. Her daughter was secreted in a drug store by a Salvation Army woman, and she found her daughter later in St. Louis.

Other witnesses testified to the fact that large bunches of her hair were lying beside her in her blood. She exhibited a scar the entire length of her head where the hair had been pulled out by the roots.

The police sergeant and police officer who led the soldiers on the 3d to the island shot one negro through the head and killed him; shot the arm off a woman, and shot another negro through the side.

PROSECUTIONS.

On the day of the riot, when the mayor, Fred Mollman, admitted to the governor over the telephone and to the chamber of commerce that he had lost control of his police force and could not force them to act and was powerless to do anything to quell the riot, a committee of 100 was formed out of the chamber of commerce and other leading business and professional men and they immediately started out to do the necessary things to protect life and property and regain order out of chaos and destruction.

They knew that under existing conditions in their county no honest, far-reaching investigation or prosecution would or could be accomplished by the local officers, and they telephoned to the attorney general of Illinois, Edward J. Brundage, for advice and help in the matter. In spite of the fact that his life was threatened in case he went to East St. Louis, he appeared there in person on the 4th of July and went into conference with the executive committee of the committee of 100.

He found a county in which it was common knowledge that a white man would not be prosecuted seriously for injuring a negro and where the boast of the ordinary citizen was that a white man had never been hung for murdering a negro; where a small race riot of a month previous had been whitewashed and where most of the officials were prepared to allow this orgy of crime also to be whitewashed; where hardly a name of members of mobs had been secured, hardly a name of the dead or wounded, the dead having been buried unidentified and without post-mortems; most of the mob members arrested by the militia already turned loose; the police force and police board which had allowed the riots still in office and shielding the rioters; and the citizens, almost without exception, ready to withhold information and evidence, either through sympathy with the rioters or fear of reprisals for divulging same. In a city where the better element threw up their hands in despair and said that the necessary convictions could not be had to redeem the city and make it a safe place to live the attorney general found more murders and other crimes committed by more criminals than ever before grew out of an act of mob violence at any place in the State or United States in the history of the country.

He immediately took charge of the investigation and prosecution of the rioters. He demanded that the mayor suspend the heads of the police department, and this resulted in the suspension of the day and night chiefs and the resignations of the entire police board. Assistant Attorney General W. E. Trautman was assigned to the coroner's jury, C. W. Middlekauff to the grand jury, and John E. Hamlin and James A. Farmer were appointed special attorneys general for the collection of evidence and the prosecution of the offenders. A large corps of investigators from the attorney general's office were also assigned to the task of collecting and presenting evidence to the grand jury, which was immediately called by Judge Crow, for the purpose of hearing the evidence, at the request of the attorney general.

After hearing over 600 witnesses the grand jury returned two lots of indictments against 143 defendants and without a single dissenting vote from a single juryman.

Among those indicted were 21 negroes, who were in the mob that killed the policemen;

The man who fired the first shot on the morning of the riot;

The leader of the labor temple hall meeting, where the first mob was organized;

The leaders of the mob which hung and dragged the negroes;

The leaders of the mobs which worked on the street cars;

The leaders of the mob which threw the negroes into the creek;

The man who stopped the ambulance from picking up the wounded negroes;

The leaders of the arson mob;

The crowd of ex-policemen who intimidated the few honest policemen by taking their prisoners away from them;

The policemen who led the militia that killed the negroes on the island;

The leaders of the mobs which worked in the outskirts of the city;

Seven of the policemen against whom positive evidence of conspiracy was obtained; and

The mayor and his secretary—the mayor for misfeasance in office and his secretary for conspiracy.

When the attorney general faced the first jury in the trial of the first case it was the first time since the early days in the history of the State of Illinois that the attorney general had appeared as a prosecutor in a murder case, and, there being 13 defendants on trial for murder at one time, it was the largest murder case in number of defendants ever tried in the State. Ten of these defendants were given 14 years each in the penitentiary at Chester and are now serving their time.

When the investigation was first begun, the common report was that no evidence could be secured.

When the evidence was secured, the common report was that the grand jury would not indict.

After the indictments had been returned even the lawyers who were in favor of the prosecutions said that it would be impossible to secure convictions.

Even after convictions were secured the rumor was largely circulated that no one would ever serve time in the penitentiary, but at this time there are 19 in the penitentiary and 3 who have been sentenced recently. Altogether there have been over 50 defendants convicted of one crime or another on account of indictments obtained by the attorney general. All of this in spite of the fact that all of the time-worn customs of continuances, jury fixing, intimidation of witnesses, etc., were attempted, but without avail. Without hardly an exception the cases were tried as they were set, and with the above-described results, in less than five months from the time of the riot. The forces of the attorney general are ready to continue the prosecutions in the next term of court.

Just before the first riot in East St. Louis one of the lawyers of the city, in addressing a white meeting which was considering the race question, advised the people that there was no law in Illinois against mob violence. The trial of the riot cases has shown the people of that county that there is probably more law against this sort of crime than any other. At least the lawyer who made the statement, being the same lawyer who has represented the rioters in numerous cases, and who has lost every case, probably now thinks so.

As a matter of fact, law enforcement is picking up fast in this locality, and race rioting has probably been cured for some time to come. There is one law in Illinois for all nationalities—whites and negroes, Italians and Greeks, Frenchmen and Englishmen, Irishmen and Germans. They are all entitled to the protection of their lives and property, and they will get it.

GOVERNMENT CONTROL OF RAILROADS (S. DOC. NO. 159).

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask that there be printed as a Senate document the proclamation by the President assuming possession and control of the railroads and appointing a director general, and also the statement of the President in connection with the proclamation.

Mr. SMOOT. Has not that already been printed in the RECORD?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It may have been printed in the RECORD, but I am informed it has not been printed as a document.

Mr. SMOOT. Then let it go to the Committee on Printing and we will consider it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is a matter of such importance I hope the Senator from Utah will not insist on its going to the committee. The Committee on Interstate Commerce is now considering this question. A large number of railroad officials and public officials who have to deal with the railroads are discussing this very proposition. There is an actual immediate need of the document in an available form.

Mr. SMOOT. Upon the statement of the Senator from Washington, I shall not object, although I think the matter ought to have gone to the Committee on Printing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

ECONOMIES IN GOVERNMENT PAPER.

Mr. FLETCHER. Although not technically a report of a committee, perhaps, but appropriate to that head, I desire to ask to have printed in the RECORD a statement regarding the work of the Joint Committee on Printing relative to economies in Government paper. I think the statement will be valuable both for the information of Congress and the public. It is a very short statement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement referred to is as follows:

GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE WILL USE 100,000,000 POUNDS OF PAPER, COSTING ABOUT $4,000,000, THIS YEAR.

[From the Official Bulletin, published by the Committee on Public Information, Dec. 15, 1917.]

Sixty-five million pounds of paper will be required for Government printing in the year beginning March 1, 1918, according to estimates submitted by the Public Printer to-day to the Joint Committee on Printing. This estimate is about 60 per cent of the quantity of paper which the Government Printing Office will use during the present year, the extraordinary demands for printing due to the war having already necessitated an expenditure of $2,200,000 for the first five months of this fiscal year. It is expected, therefore, that the total amount of paper which the Public Printer will have to buy for the present fiscal year will exceed 100,000,000 pounds, costing about $4,000,000.

Some idea of the vast increase in Government printing due to the war may be had from the fact that in normal years the Public Printer has required only about 28,000,000 pounds of all classes of paper, while for the coming year his estimate for book paper alone exceeds this total. The War Department itself has estimated that it will require $3,000,000 the coming year for printing, which is ten times the amount it ordinarily expends for that purpose in peace times.

WILL REDUCE WEIGHT OF PAPER.

In order to effect a substantial economy in the use of this immense quantity of paper the Joint Committee on Printing to-day adopted standards which materially reduce the weight of the more important classes of paper. This action was taken on the recommendation of the committee on specifications, consisting of Government paper experts, who estimate that the proposed reduction in weight will save the Government at least $320,000 in the cost of paper alone and reduce the total quantity required by nearly 2,000,000 pounds, which will thereby be available for other users of paper. Adding to this the even greater saving that will be possible for the Post Office Department to effect in the handling of the reduced weight of franked matter, the total economy proposed will amount to more than $600,000 for the coming year.

The Joint Committee on Printing itself has already taken the initiative in the use of lighter weight papers by having the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and congressional documents printed upon 35 instead of 40 pound book paper. Including the estimated saving to the Post Office Department in the handling of the reduced weight of franked congressional matter this has already effected an economy of about $200,000 for the year.

ECONOMY IS URGED.

In view of the higher cost of paper, and the especially great need for conserving all paper-making material, the joint committee has requested the Public Printer to exercise to the fullest extent his authority under the printing law to require the use of the lightest weight and lowest grade paper possible in the execution of the public printing and binding. At its meeting to-day the members of the committee expressed the hope that all the departments of the Government would heartily cooperate with the Public Printer in his efforts to effect a further saving in the use of paper by the Government.

In addition to adopting the standards of paper for the coming year, the Joint Committee on Printing decided to open bids for such paper on January 21 in its room at the Capitol, and the Public Printer was directed to advertise for proposals in accordance with the schedule approved by the committee. The schedule, as before stated, calls for approximately 65,000,000 pounds of various classes of paper, including among the principal items, 25,000,000 pounds of machine-finish printing paper; 4,350,000 pounds supercalendared printing paper; 1,500,000 pounds news-print paper; 725,000 pounds coated book paper; 15,500,000 pounds writing paper; 5,400,000 pounds bond paper; 2,100,000 pounds ledger paper; 650,000 pounds map paper; 450,000 pounds safety writing paper; 1,150,000 pounds manila paper; 2,500,000 pounds bristol board; 1,600,000 pounds binder's board, and numerous minor lots.

THE PROPOSAL FORM.

The proposal form adopted by the committee provides that whenever the fair and reasonable market price, as determined by the Federal Trade Commission, for paper contracted for varies 20 per cent or more above or below the accepted price, either the Government or the contractor may have the option of annulling the contract at the expiration of either three, six, or nine months. This innovation was adopted by the committee last year and has since been included in other Government contracts. It is believed to be fair both to the Government and the contractor, in view of the great fluctuations that have occurred from time to time in the cost of manufacture due to the war.

The joint committee also gave recognition to the recent agreement entered into by the Attorney General with the news-print manufacturers to the effect that the price for news print should be fixed by the Federal Trade Commission. The committee's schedule provides, in accordance with this agreement, that the price of news print to be furnished the Government Printing Office after April 1 shall be the same as that fixed upon by the Federal Trade Commission for the newspaper publishers of the country.

BULK BOUGHT IN OPEN MARKET.

During the past year the Public Printer, under direction of the joint committee, has purchased by far the greater bulk of his paper in the open market, as the committee declined to award contracts on the basis of bids submitted to it last January. This has resulted in a saving of approximately $500,000 in the price that the paper would have cost the Government had it been purchased on the basis of the low bids made at that time. The committee hopes, however, that it will be able to obtain sufficiently reasonable bids for the coming year, so that it may award annual contracts as usual, for it is somewhat of a hardship to the Government and uncertainty to the manufacturers to continue the vast quantities of open-market purchases. These open-market purchases have, however, all been made after competitive bidding and the paper furnished has been inspected and tested in the same manner as that bought under annual contracts.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL FARM-LOAN ACT.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives insisting upon its amendment to the bill (S. 3235) amending section 32, Federal farm-loan act, approved July 17, 1916, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. HOLLIS. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House and agree to the conference asked for by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. OWEN, Mr. HOLLIS, and Mr. GRONNA conferees on the part of the Senate.

MINING OF COAL, ETC., ON THE PUBLIC DOMAIN.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2812) to encourage and promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, potassium, and sodium on the public domain.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, there has been a peculiar attack made upon this proposed legislation. Some one is spending a large amount of money for the purpose of creating a prejudice against this measure. A full-page advertisement has appeared in one of the great papers of this city charging that this proposed legislation is in the interest of the Standard Oil Co. It is a strange thing, in the first place, that after four years' consideration of this subject, just about the time that this bill is to be voted on, this question should come up in this form.

The Committees on Public Lands of both bodies have for four years not only listened to the opinions and advice of everyone who might be interested in this matter but have invited them. This bill was originally prepared under the direct supervision of the Secretary of the Interior. It was drawn for the purpose of introducing into this country the leasing system as to nonmetalliferous metals. It is well known that nearly the entire West was opposed to that theory. It was a theory for which Mr. Pinchot was largely responsible; it was a theory which in its ultra form was totally impracticable and unfair to the development of the West. That bill came before the Public Lands Committee of the Senate. As I have said, we had possibly 20 hearings with regard to the bill; every interest was invited to come there and to be heard, and they were heard with regard to it. A bill was finally reported to this body and passed the Senate, which was very largely in the form in which this bill to-day now appears; in fact, in greater part, the pending bill is word for word the same.

The Committee on Public Lands of the House at the same time were holding hearings, and the House passed a bill almost identical with the present bill. At that time the only practical difference between the bill passed by the House and the bill passed by the Senate was this: The Senate bill provided that one lessee might hold not to exceed 2,560 acres of oil lands, while the House bill provided that one lessee should only hold 640 acres of such lands. The House contended that to grant more land to a lessee would tend toward a monopoly of the oil of this country. It was in conference on those two ideas that the final split came, and no bill was agreed to.

At the following session the bills were again introduced, again hearings were had, and again a bill was reported to this body practically in the form of the bill now pending. A third time a similar bill was reported by the Senate committee to this body, and this is the fourth bill of this kind which has been reported.

The advertisements to which I have referred attack what? They say that this legislation is going to be in the interest of the Standard Oil Co. Why? Because, they say, that if we limit the amount of land to 2,560 acres it will not permit one company to become sufficiently strong to contest with the Standard Oil Co. What does that mean? It means that the very people who are hallooing "Standard Oil Co." for the purpose of cowering the Members of Congress are urging the Congress at this time to permit them to establish a monopoly equal to that of the Standard Oil Co.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I have not read the argument in the Post to which the Senator refers——

Mr. PITTMAN. It is the same argument as that contained in the brief handed to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. I was going to say that I presume it is the same argument as that found in the brief; but the objection to this bill, Mr. President, whether it is found in an argument in a brief or in the Post, is that it undertakes to place a limitation upon production, but leaves the door wide open for all kinds of monopoly and combination with reference to refining.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I have not gotten to the question of refining; I am taking up the complaints made by this public benefactor at the expense of $2,000 a page. This public benefactor states deliberately in the brief, which was handed to the Senator from Idaho, that the limitation of a lease to 2,560 acres is too small. He says that it will not give enough land to one lessee to enable him to become sufficiently strong to oppose the Standard Oil Co. Now, I will ask if that is not in that brief? If there is anyone here who denies it, then I will read the brief.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator whether in that same brief the suggestion is not made that it should be about 9,600 acres instead of 2,560 acres?

Mr. PITTMAN. That is true, I believe. The fact is, that this whole matter was fought out before both committees of Congress, and in that fight the committees determined absolutely——

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. PITTMAN. Just a second until I finish the sentence—that to grant more than 2,560 acres would tend to the very monopoly that now exists.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I want to repeat that this law is so framed that there is no limitation upon the amount of leases which the refiners in that district may control.

Mr. PITTMAN. In what way?

Mr. BORAH. In the first place, after a man has made his discovery you put up the lease for competition. You put the prospector or the independent oil dealer in open competition in bidding for leases with the Standard Oil Co.; and that will cause the independent man to disappear just as soon as the Standard Oil Co. gets on the ground.

Mr. PITTMAN. That argument would be sound if that were all that the bill contained; and it is such arguments as that by those who desire to defeat this bill—as it is my belief this advertisement has in view—that are deceiving the people of this country and this Congress with regard to this legislation. The bill expressly provides that no person or corporation or association can, either directly or indirectly, have any interest, as a stockholder or otherwise, in more than 2,560 acres under this lease. If that is true—and that is in the bill, and to attempt it is punishable not only by forfeiture of the interest but by criminal prosecution—if that is true, then how could the Standard Oil Co. become interested in or bid for more than 2,560 acres?

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator refer to sections 33 and 34?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BORAH. I will discuss those later.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will read it, so that it will be definitely before the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator contend that sections 33 and 34 have any reference whatever to sections 16 and 17?

Mr. PITTMAN. No; they do not. They have no reference to those sections, but they have reference to the general leasing provision. There is no bidding provided for under sections 16 and 17. The Senator was talking about competitive bidding. Sections 16 and 17 do not provide for that form of bidding.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly; but what I say is that sections 16 and 17 open the door to those parties who are supposed to be controlled by sections 33 and 34, whereas, as a matter of fact, sections 33 and 34 do not refer to sections 16 and 17 at all.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator stated that the Standard Oil Co. and these refiners could outbid the individual or the poor man. I was answering that argument first, because that is erroneous.

Section 33 says:

That no person, association, or corporation, except as herein provided—

And that refers to section 16—shall be permitted to take or hold any interest, as a stockholder or otherwise, in leases of any one of the deposits herein named and described during the life of such leases covering in the aggregate an area greater than 2,560 acres, and any interest held in violation of this provision shall be forfeited to the United States by appropriate proceedings instituted by the Attorney General for that purpose in any court of competent jurisdiction, except that any such ownership or interest hereby forbidden, which may be acquired by descent, will, judgment, or decree, may be held for two years and not longer after its acquisition.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator what are the exact exceptions provided for in the act when it says "except as herein provided"?

Mr. PITTMAN. I will read the exceptions now. I will read section 16, on page 12. Let me state that this section was put into the bill for this purpose:

The minute this act becomes a law all other acts in conflict with it are repealed. Under the existing law there is a provision for acquiring oil lands. That provision is under the placer-mining act. That means that a man may locate a piece of public land, mark its boundaries, file a location in the proper office, and go ahead until he makes a discovery, and when he makes a discovery he then may purchase it from the Government. A great many people are acting at the present time under the existing law. They have proceeded to sink wells and locate, and there must be some provision to take care of them when this new law takes effect. Again, there are a great many people who, under a misconception of the law, have at great expense developed new oil fields and sunk wells and are now producing oil, who, under the technical legal construction of the existing law are held not to have valid locations.

It means, as I have said before, that when the Taft withdrawal order took place in 1909 a great many of these men were cut off in their prospecting privileges just before they struck oil. Some of them were down 2,500 feet, within 200 feet of oil, and had they been permitted to go on for two weeks longer their claims would have been protected under the existing law. But what was the result? The Taft withdrawal order came on and withdrew all of these public lands from prospecting. These gentlemen did not believe that the President had authority to deal with the public lands. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], on the floor of the Senate, denied that the President had authority to make the order of 1909. The ablest lawyers of this country denied it; and it was not until 1915 that there was a decision that the President had authority.

What was the result? Following the advice of the lower courts that decided that the President had no authority to make the order, following the advice given by Senators and Congressmen that the President had no authority to make the order, following the advice of the ablest attorneys of the United States, those men continued with their work, opened up these oil wells, and have been producing ever since. Unless you put section 16 in the bill, what is the result? The result is that some man who has done nothing, some influential party, will come in and obtain a lease on the very ground that has been developed by some honest man in good faith. What are you going to do about it?

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, can the Senator give the relative number of acres that are involved in those claims?

Mr. PITTMAN. I will give the Land Office statement with regard to Wyoming. I should judge that there are involved probably some fifteen or twenty thousand acres in California, and possibly the same amount in Wyoming.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to ask the Senator if President Taft's order of withdrawal made no provision for people who were on the ground, engaged in prospecting for oil? Did it not specifically provide that their rights should not be interfered with?

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, President Taft was and is an excellent lawyer. President Taft, in making that order of withdrawal, stated to Congress his doubt with regard to his power to make it; and in view of that very doubt, Congress in 1910 passed what we call the Pickett Act, authorizing the President to make withdrawals. But the President, in withdrawing this land from location, had no desire to work any hardship on people who were actually operating under existing law. We know that. Under existing law, any citizen of the United States had a right to go on the public domain and prospect for oil; and should he find oil in that operation, no matter how long after he marked the boundaries of his claim—a year, or two years, or ten years—the discovery related back to the marking of the boundaries on the ground, and he was granted a patent from the United States in fee simple.

What is the result? Mr. Taft knew, as a lawyer, that there was no valid mining location—that is, no consummated mining location—until the discovery was made; and he also knew that after the discovery was made no act of Congress could affect it. He knew that after discovery was made there was no use in making an exception in the act in regard to that man, because he owned it; and what did he state? Let me read what Mr. Taft said. Here is the language that Mr. Taft used:

> Temporary petroleum withdrawal No. 5: In aid of proposed legislation affecting the use and disposition of the petroleum deposits on the public domain, all public lands in the accompanying lists are hereby temporarily withdrawn from all forms of location, settlement, selection, filing, entry, or disposal under the mineral or nonmineral public-land laws.

Now, listen to this mind you—and this answers the question of the Senator from Nebraska:

> All locations or claims—

Now, note the distinction he uses—

> All locations or claims existing and valid on this date may proceed to entry in the usual manner after field investigation and examination.

What does the circuit court of appeals say with regard to this? Listen to this: The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals interprets the language of the President of the United States, and what does it say?

> It is insisted on behalf of the Government that the exemptions from the effect of the order of the President therein provided for, can not be properly held to apply to any land upon which at the time of its promulgation no mineral had been discovered, even though, as in the present cases, the land had been located under and by virtue of the mining laws, its boundaries properly marked on the ground, and the assignees of the locators, then in its bona fide actual possession, actively engaged in seeking mineral therein.
> A discovery of mineral in the ground under such conditions would manifestly have perfected the locations not only against third parties but also against the Government, and would have given to the owner of them an equitable title against the United States, and have entitled the owner to the legal title upon compliance with the statutory requirements respecting annual assessment work and payment, which rights would have been secure under the provisions of the Constitution of the United States. Such locations upon which discovery had then been made needed no protection through any order of the President. Said the Supreme Court in Belk v. Meagher (104 U. S., 279, 283): "A mining claim perfected under the law is property in the highest sense of that term, which may be bought, sold, and conveyed, and will pass by descent." It is not, therefore, added the same court in Sullivan v. Iron Silver Mining Co. (143 U. S., 431, 434), "subject to the disposal of the Government."
> President Taft, who had himself been a distinguished Federal judge, of course well knew this, and we think it altogether unreasonable to hold that the words employed by him in his order "All locations or claims existing and valid on this date may proceed to entry in the usual manner after field investigation and examination." were intended or can be fairly construed to apply to lands upon which discovery had already been made and to which its locators had already acquired an equitable title; but, on the contrary, that they were intended and should be held to apply to all locations and claims existing at the time of the making of the withdrawal order to which the locators or claimants had some valid right.

There is a construction by the ninth circuit court of appeals of President Taft's language, clear and simple, that these men whom section 16 attempts to relieve were entitled to proceed to patent in spite of the withdrawal order of 1909.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. BORAH. It would depend entirely upon the physical facts as to whether or not they were entitled to proceed to patent, which section 16 undertakes to relieve. The assumption upon which the Senator is proceeding is that they had perfected a valid location.

Mr. PITTMAN. No; the assumption is that they had not perfected a valid location in the sense of a discovery.

Mr. BORAH. Well, but that they had done all that was required to be done under the law up to that time.

Mr. PITTMAN. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BORAH. Section 16 provides that anyone who has asserted the right to a claim and who has sunk a well——

Mr. PITTMAN. Let me read section 16, so that we will see if that is the case. Pardon me; I had in mind, of course, the amendments to section 16 that I submitted on behalf of the committee.

Mr. BORAH. Oh.

Mr. PITTMAN. I assume that unless the Senator from Idaho or some one who is opposed to the bill opposes those amendments that I have offered on behalf of the committee they will be adopted.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, I was speaking of the section as it now stands.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will read the section as the bill is now printed. I would suggest that the printed form be handed to the various Senators, because it has been changed.

Section 16 now reads as follows:

> That upon relinquishment to the United States within 90 days from the date of this act or within 90 days after final denial or withdrawal of application for patent, by a claimant of any claim or subdivision thereof asserted under the mining laws prior to July 3, 1910—

That is the date of the withdrawal under congressional authority—> to any unpatented oil or gas lands included in any order of withdrawal and who prior to such date—

That is, prior to the withdrawal—> had performed all acts necessary to a valid mining location thereof except to make a discovery of oil, the claimant or his successor in interest shall be entitled to a lease for each asserted mineral location—

And so forth.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I take it that the language "and who prior to such date had performed all acts necessary to a valid mining location thereon except to make a discovery of oil" is the amendment?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes, sir; it is the amendment. That language was also used by the committee in section 17, and therefore the committee put it in here.

Section 16 simply treats these claimants as President Taft intended that they should be treated, with the exception that President Taft intended that they should get patent to that land, and we provide that instead of getting patent to the land they shall simply take a lease on the land, the same as any other lessee, simply having a preference in leasing because of the conditions in which they have been placed.

Certainly that is the least we can do for these people. You would imagine that the whole public domain was going to be absorbed under section 16. In Wyoming there are withdrawn oil lands amounting to some 900,000 acres, and yet those who have applied for patents cover only about 8,900 acres. That designates those who have sunk wells to a discovery, because only those who have made a discovery are in a position to apply for a patent. Certainly any man who is in a position to apply for patent will apply for a patent.

Mr. KELLOGG. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill how many acres there are in Wyoming of which he has a record where claims would exist under section 16 outside of those ready for patent.

Mr. PITTMAN. I have it here.

Mr. KELLOGG. It is claimed that the Standard Oil has claims which could be settled under sections 16 and 17 to a very large acreage, and that it would give them a monopoly of that field. I should like to know the number of acres.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will answer that in just a minute. I think I have it here.

Mr. KELLOGG. In connection with that, if the Senator will answer that question, I should like also to know what is the objection to placing the same limitation as to the number of acres each one can lease and acquire under section 16 as is applied under the other sections of the bill.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will attempt to answer that.

Mr. KELLOGG. It seems to me that that would solve that problem. I do not see why that should not be done, making sections 33 and 34 apply to the claimants under sections 16 and 17.

Mr. PITTMAN. I have a letter here from the Commissioner of the Land Office which I requested. It is a summary of the situation in Wyoming. I ask to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the letter.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
January 7, 1918.

Summary of pending oil-land applications—Wyoming.

Applicant.	Number of applications.	Acreage.
Midwest Oil Co. et al	40	6,400
Petroleum Mattschappij Salt Creek	1	160
W. VerValin	1	160
Elmer Church and F. Hammond	1	160
William Hanley et al	1	160
H. E. Stock et al	2	320
Societe Belgo Americaine, etc	3	320
Grass Creek Oil & Gas Co	3	480
I. D. and G. Pickett	1	40
Limit Oil Co	1	40
C. M. Bequette	1	160
Western Oil & Gas Co	1	300
E. J. McMahon	1	40
R. B. Whitehead et al	1	160
Total	58	8,900

Of the above item of 40 applications by Midwest et al., the Central Wyoming Oil & Development Co. and associates, known as the "Franco" interests, are the real parties in interest to the extent of a considerable portion. The Petroleum Mattschappij Salt Creek & Societe Belgo are part of said Franco interests. Church & Hammond, William Hanley et al., H. E. Stock et al., and Grass Creek Oil & Gas Co. are all in some way associated or under contract with the Midwest interests. The Franco interests are also more or less associated with the Midwest interests, particularly in the refining end of the business. No positive information appears of record in this office as to whether any of these concerns are associated with or controlled by the Standard Oil interests. This office has not been directly concerned with this feature of the situation.

The office has made no attempt to procure a list of the hundreds of locations or claims outside the producing areas. The two principal producing fields are Salt Creek and Grass Creek; the producing area of the former is nearly all covered by patent applications, while very few applications are pending for lands in the Grass Creek field. In the Grass Creek field 17,680 acres are withdrawn, which includes about 2,200 acres of patented land. Of the balance the Standard Oil Co. of Ohio is known to have claims for 260 acres and the Midwest interests for from 1,500 to 2,000 acres. The Roxana Oil Co. has no claim or application of record in this office.

In this connection, and also concerning Naval Reserve, Wyoming, No. 3 (Teapot Dome), reference is made to page 64, report of proceedings of Joint Conference Committee on Public Lands on House bill 406, Sixty-fourth Congress, second session. See also page 9, Annual Report of Commissioner of General Land Office, to Secretary of the Interior for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1917.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
January 7, 1918.

Summary—Wyoming.

Total acreage of petroleum withdrawals	934,295
Total number of mineral applications filed on above lands	58
Acreage included in pending mineral applications	3,900

The above are blanket withdrawals. All, no doubt, include considerable areas of patented lands, as well as considerable areas of lands of doubtful oil value, and there is some production on unpatented lands not included in withdrawals.

Mr. PITTMAN. I wish to call attention to that for a minute. I do not see in the list there any reference to any claim applied for by the Standard Oil Co. or any of its subsidiaries that are known to exist except for 260 acres. The total amount applied for is 8,900 acres. I take it that includes most of the lands which will come within the provisions of section 16. My reason for saying that is this: Section 16 only gives a preference right to lease to the lessee who has made a discovery and who has a producing well, and such a lessee would, in the nature of things, apply for a patent at the earliest possible moment. Therefore, there are only about 8,900 acres out of the 900,000 acres in Wyoming that would come under the provisions of section 16.

There is a list showing some fifteen or twenty claimants of this land. As to the Midwest Co. I know nothing, except what has been stated to me by men in whom I have confidence. Since these attacks were made I have asked Mr. William Wheeler of San Francisco, the vice president of the Midwest Oil Co., whether there is any relation whatever, direct or indirect, with the Standard Oil Co. or any of its subsidiaries, or whether the Standard Oil Co. or any of its known stockholders are big stockholders in his company, and he says, "No; that it is an independent company which originated in San Francisco, Cal., with California people, and that there is not the slightest interest; that they have two or three thousand stockholders throughout the United States at the present time." There has been a charge made here through the press that this is to the interest of the Standard Oil Co. Where is the proof? Why have they been standing back all this time? Why did they not come like honest men if they had any information and give it to the committee and give it to the Senate, instead of at the last minute attempting to impose upon what they supposed to be the cowardice of Members of this body? They are mistaken. The cry of the Standard Oil Co. can not serve to intimidate unless it is backed up by some substantial evidence.

As a matter of fact, if the Standard Oil Co. or any of its subsidiaries are in the same position exactly as the poorest prospector of this country, then I would be ashamed to deny to them the same remedy I would give the poor prospector. I do not stand here to legislate through any sentiment or any prejudice, and I would be ashamed of the man who would use that argument for a single solitary minute.

But the record discloses the fact that the charge through the public press by these men, paying $2,000 per page, is without foundation in fact, or they would submit the facts to this body. We have been ready to hear the facts. We have been ready to hear the facts ever since this matter came before the Senate. We announced the other day that we would hear the facts on this matter, and where are these men with their facts? The independent operators of Wyoming came on with their facts. Here is a letter from the independent operators of Wyoming who deny that they have any connection with this public lobby that is operating through the public press. I ask that the letter may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the letter:

The Secretary read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 7, 1918.

Hon. KEY PITTMAN,
United States Senate.

DEAR SIR: The undersigned are a committee of three appointed by the Wyoming Independent Oil Men's Protective Association, which independents met in assembly at Casper and Thermopolis, Wyo., and other points, and perfected an organization of that name. They are composed of the independent operators in Wyoming who are not connected with the Standard Oil Co. or with the Royal Dutch Shell Co., nor in any way connected with the briefs, advertisements, and publicity campaign now in progress. The members of this association are producers, lessees, locators, and claimants of existing claims.

We as a committee were instructed to favor the leasing bill and to endeavor to secure its amendment in the following particulars:

To change the limitation from arbitrary mileage to reference to geologic structures or conditions.

We were further instructed to ask that the permittee, instead of being limited to a patent to one-quarter of his acreage, should be entitled to elect either to accept such patent or in lieu thereof to accept a lease upon the area of his permit.

We believe that independent lessees and producers should be permitted to combine for the purpose of transporting and refining their oil and are willing that the interest of lessees in more than one lease, or his holding of stock in more than one leasing, transportation, or refining company, be reasonably limited by proper provisions to prevent monopoly, and ask that such holdings be permitted in order to make possible independent piping and refining.

We were further instructed to aid in sustaining the relief provisions of the bill and ask additional provisions that a lease shall not be let under section 16 until after final determination of any existing adverse suit.

The association is also of the opinion that the limitation to five years is arbitrary and will not protect all meritorious cases. In fact, the five-year period will arbitrarily exclude most of the claims transferred to innocent holders or lessees.

We were also instructed to request the protection of the innocent transferee or lessee of an existing claim under section 17 in the same manner as is now done in section 16.

Very truly, yours,

H. H. SCHWARTZ,
For the Committee.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. An advertisement which I saw in one of the papers was signed, as I recall it, by a firm of attorneys or rather by one member of a firm of attorneys. Is the Senator able to inform the Senate who these clients are and why their names do not appear?

Mr. PITTMAN. Two or three days ago, when this matter was up and when the very brief which was afterwards published in the Post was under discussion, we invited these men, together with others, to appear before us and tell us whom they represented and what they wanted. They have not seen fit to do so, although they continue their attack through innuendo through the press. I want to say, however, that I am informed that these gentlemen are attorneys for the Royal Dutch Shell Oil Co. I am not sure that that is the exact title of the company, but the company is largely owned or controlled by foreigners. It is a company that has holdings almost as much as the Standard Oil Co., if not more. It is one of the great oil monopolies of the world. It is reputed to own oil in all oil countries that are known. It has hundreds of prospectors throughout the United States seeking oil lands everywhere.

It seeks to defeat this bill, in my opinion, and my reason for saying that is this, that if they do not seek to defeat this bill they would come before our committee and give us facts. If they did not seek to defeat this bill they would not cry Standard Oil Co. when they themselves are just as monopolistic as the Standard Oil Co.

Do you think for one moment they represent the prospector of Wyoming, the little man? Here is a letter which has just been read, signed by a committee elected at a great mass meeting in Wyoming, by the independent operators, absolutely denying any connection with this crowd that are advertising through the papers, and not only denying it, but saying that their people in Wyoming sent them here to sustain the relief contained in sections 16 and 17 of this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Will the Senator permit me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. PITTMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The shell-game company of which the Senator speaks is the one represented by the attorney who sent the brief, I think, to every Member of this body, alleging that the Standard Oil Co. would own the State of Wyoming in case we pass this bill in its present form.

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not know the exact name of it, but that is the company.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That is the brief that was on all our tables?

Mr. PITTMAN. That is the one.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Submitted by an attorney who was representing the Shell Co.?

Mr. PITTMAN. I am informed that he is the attorney for the Shell Co. I know one thing, he does not represent the independent oil operators of Wyoming, whom he is pretending to be trying to protect, because those little men have sent a committee on here and this is the letter of that committee. That committee has said that they stand for section 16 and section 17 and the whole bill with just a few modifications, and what are those modifications?

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. PITTMAN. In just a second. First, they want the power of the independent operators to combine for building their own pipe lines and their own refineries. The section as amended gives them that power, because it lets them build a pipe line or a refinery or create a sales agency—in other words, to combine for this purpose, provided that it is not such a close combination as would be monopolistic, provided that no lessee shall hold more than a tenth interest in one of these companies. They are in favor of the bill as it is amended. That is the way the bill is amended now. They are in favor of section 17 with one exception. They think the five-year limitation is too short.

They think that claims located 10 or 15 years before should have a preferential right if the law has been complied with up to the time of the withdrawal. That is a matter that is immaterial. That is a matter that the committee was always willing to meet. But they have no objection to sections 16 and 17; in fact, they say in this letter they were instructed to favor it absolutely.

Now, they are opposed to the 20-mile limitation. The bill states that a permittee under the prospecting provision can only get a permit to prospect on 640 acres within 20 miles of producing wells. They object to that. They say it ought to be on the same geological structure. That is purely a difference of expression. There is no objection to the provision. I think that a limitation of 20 miles is better than a geological structure. Why? Because you have something definite. You can measure the 20 miles and you can not measure the geological structure. The prospector can measure for 20 miles from a known well and he knows, when he gets beyond that, he can have a prospecting permit for 2,560 acres; but if you say "on the geological structure," he does not know where to go; it is not definite; and they ask for that change. What I am getting at is that they do not ask for any material change in either section 16 or section 17, and yet they favor absolutely both of those sections. Is not that a complete answer to these advertisements that are going through the newspapers? It seems to me it is.

These men had a mass meeting while the attorneys down here are in the dark. They will not even come before a committee of the Senate. To my knowledge, they have not asked an interview with any of them; they will not submit themselves to examination; they will not submit themselves to cross-examination as to whom they represent and what their secret motives are. We have a right to draw our conclusions as to what their motives are. We are satisfied that they are the attorneys of the Royal Dutch Shell Oil Co. I do not think they will deny it. In their own advertisement, what do they say? They say that the limitation of 2,560 acres to a lessee in this bill is too little; that it will not allow a lessee to become sufficiently strong to oppose the Standard Oil Co.; in other words, that it will not allow them to create another monopoly. That is what they say; that is what they are fighting for; and that is the whole situation.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, at this time it may be pertinent to amplify the answer which has been made by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] with respect to the character of these attorneys. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] asked whether they represent the Dutch Shell Oil Co. As a matter of fact, they represent the Roxana Oil Co. The significance of that is that the Roxana Oil Co. is a subsidiary of the Dutch Co. The Dutch Co. is a foreign corporation, which is owned by capitalists in Holland and in Germany, and under our law can not by location acquire mining claims. Therefore they have organized subsidiary companies. Rice & Lyons, lawyers of Tulsa, Okla., are the attorneys of one of these subsidiary corporations, the Roxana.
